A NEW MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The German Liberal or Rationalistic party is founding a society whose object is to apply its principles to the work of missions. The journal of the new society is edited by Pastor Sick, of Heidelberg. A missionary, Pastor Spinner, is setting out for Japan, and is officially charged to found a German parish in Tokio. Another theological candidate has accepted a place as Professor in Tokio, and will labour in the interests of this society.—Le Christianisme.

Mission and other Appeals.

The Christian Railway-men at King's Cross Station want an harmonium for their evangelistic and temperance meetings at the Temperance Hall, Chenies-street, adjoining the local station.

The Baptist Chapel in the village of Brockenhurst, in the New Forest, is sorely in need of repair, and those who know that beautiful locality are asked to help. Mr. Pope, Catoncaster Cottage, Brockenhurst, is treasurer.

Laundry Girls in Shepherd's Bush.—Our "Girls' Lodge," which has been in existence more than a year, is now the centre of a great deal of useful work, but we are sadly hindered through want of funds. Donations or subscriptions will be gratefully received, and particulars of the work given either by Miss Haig, 29, Askew-road, Shepherd's Bush; or Mr. E. Baly, Bank of England.

Young Men's Library.—An effort is being made in a parish in the north of London to start an association for the spiritual welfare of young men, and it is proposed to have a reading-room in connection therewith. The parish is a poor one, and the Vicar is greatly interested in the movement. Will any Christian friends kindly assist by the gift or loan of suitable religious books?—A. E. Watling, 82, Richmond-road, Islington, N.

Free Institute for Lads, Kingsland.—The committee of this Institute have resolved to establish a "Free Loan Library," as an antidote in some measure to the pernicious literature so widely distributed at the present time, and to promote and foster an increased desire for reading of a higher order amongst the artisan classes. To promote this object, the class of literature we desire should be of a strong, healthy, and invigorating character. All books forwarded, or assistance rendered, will be duly acknowledged by Mr. A. J. H. Rowe, Librarian, 39, Rectory-road, Stoke Newington, N.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, September 19, 1885.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? And amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

ANTWERP.—The Belgian Bishops have just held a festival in commemoration of the taking of Antwerp by the Spaniards 300 years ago, when the Inquisition was re-established there. A long procession took place, in which the Popish flag was carried instead of the National Standard. Fifteen bishops and a large number of the higher and lower clergy took part in the different celebrations.—Evan. Anzeiger.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE "ON CONSUMPTION."

THIS interesting and remarkable Treatise has reached a circulation of TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND. There is no doubt that for the treatment of that terrible scourge—Consumption of the lungs, and other chest complaints, Mr. Congreve is a specialist of the first order, and stands unrivalled. There is probably no disease affecting mankind that has been so dire in its ravages, and so distressing to friends of the sufferer, as Phthisis or Consumption. How many a Christian worker has been called away at the beginning of a life of usefulness! Medical science formerly attempted nothing but the palliation of urgent symptoms, and even as to palliative means few were agreed.

Mr. GEORGE THOMAS CONGREVE (an interesting sketch of whose life, with an excellent portrait, appeared in the Christian Herald of Dec 24, last) was the first to boldly announce that "Consumption is curable." He has proved his statement by the most commanding arguments, and better still, by indisputable facts. The world and we ourselves owe him a debt of gratitude. Not long since we placed a young lady under his care, who has recovered her health, and we need only point to the cases Mr. Congreve is publishing—one every week, many of which had been given up as past all hope.

The book, which contains a great deal of useful information, may be consulted in all cases of chest diseases. We advise all who suffer to obtain it from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E. It will be sent free for six, or larger edition, fifteen stamps.

Mr. Congreve is known to a vast number of Christian ministers throughout the kingdom. He has been eminently successful in the treatment of cases of Mr. Spurgeon's students, missionaries, officers of the Salvation Army, &c., who have received the most kind and sympathetic treatment at his hands.

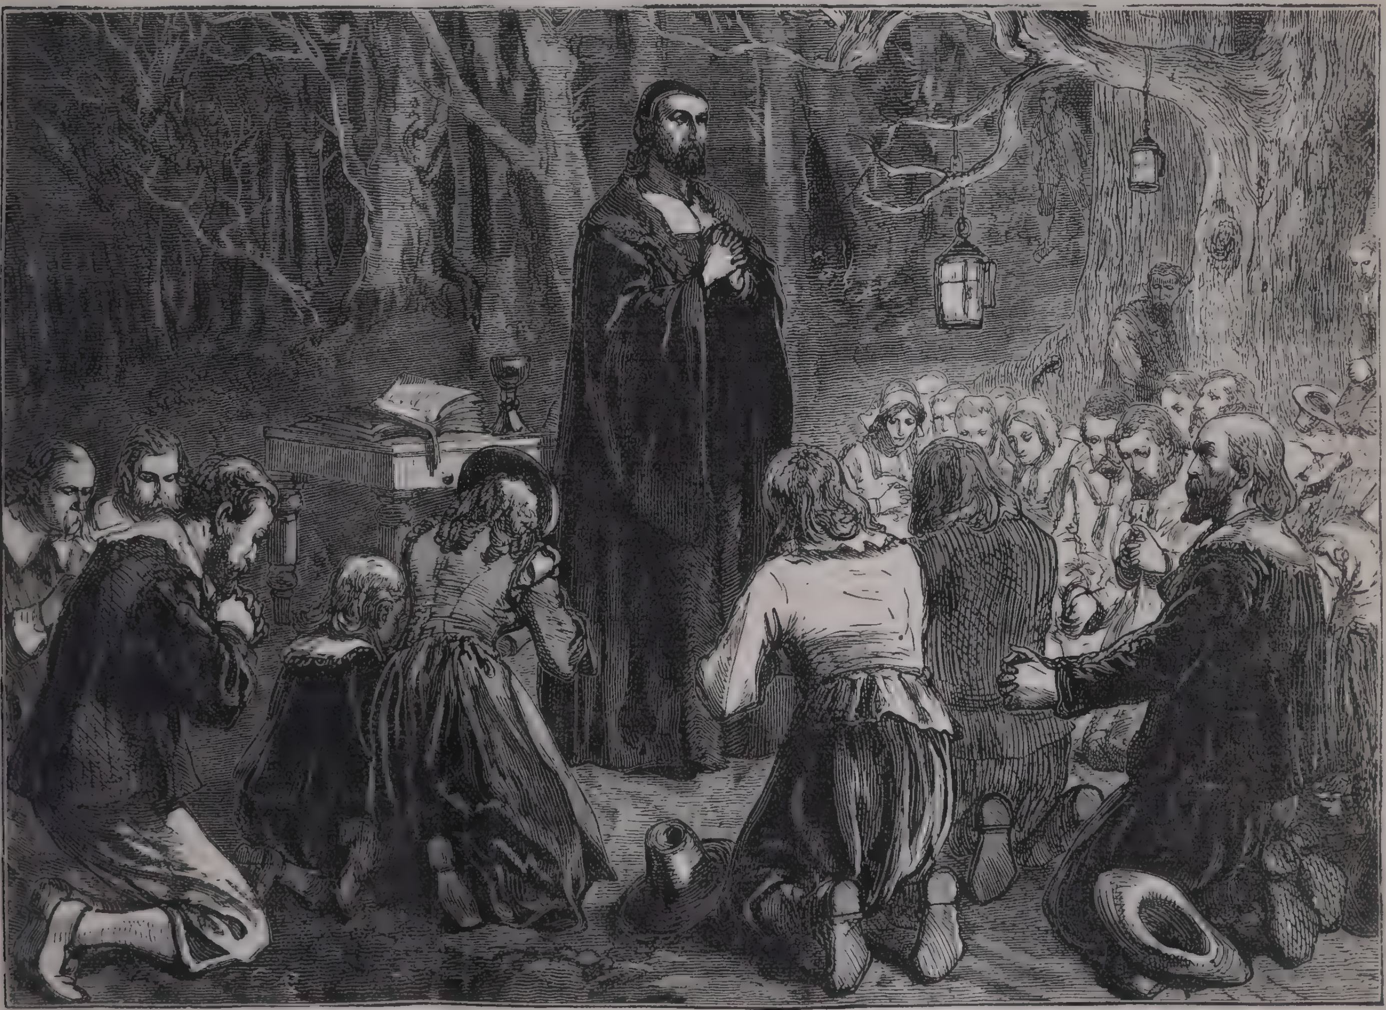
Bi-Centenary of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes,

OCTOBER 22, 1885.



WITNESS to our tale of woe,
O ye hills of Languedoc!
Tangled glades of Dauphiné!
Where our fathers met to pray,
Where the Sacramental bread
Of the "desert" church was spread.
To the forest's thickest shade,
See the hunted flock have sped;
Their pursuers, pressing hard,
Follow them with fire and sword.
With their temples in the dust,
Naught is left but faith and trust.
In the deepest hour of night,
By their lantern's feeble light,
Falling from the forest boughs,
Here they would renew their vows,
Even though the watcher's cry
Warn them that the foe is nigh.
Here they meet, but on the morrow,
Who shall tell the tale of sorrow?
From the branches overhead,
There shall hang the martyred dead;
Whilst, amongst the forest glade,
More in death's last sleep are laid.
This was done in their own France,
Where the laughing sunbeams dance,
Where their Eperon bloomed with flowers,
Fatness flowed from Uzés' bowers,
Whilst the cornfields of Vivrais,
More than labour's wage would pay.
'Twas a monarch, called "The Great,"
That laid waste their fair estate,
He whose closing days were spent
Midst their sighs of discontent;
Who, the evening of his years,
Thus bedewed with bloody tears.
But a greater Monarch's gaze
Had beheld them in those days,
And, in pity for our race,
Found in England's heart a place,
That the noble and the true,
Might each other's life renew.
Bid us rise in future years,
Ye who early wiped our tears;
Blend with ours your prayers, O Brothers!
Let us live and die for others;
Then our fathers' blood and pain
Shall not have been given in vain.

HENRY JOY BROWNE, M.A.

REVOCATION of the EDICT of NANTES.

APPROACHING BICENTENARY.

ON the 22nd of this month will occur the Bicentenary of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and it is proposed by various friends and descendants of the Huguenots to observe this date with special solemnity.

There will be a meeting at the Mansion House, with the Lord Mayor in the chair, and a social gathering of the descendants of the Huguenots in the evening, under those hospitable auspices which have so often sheltered Protestant refugees in days gone by.

This event may well be marked with prayerful significance by those who have the interest of Continental, and especially French, evangelisation at heart. August 24, 1572, and October 22, 1685, are two memorable dates in the history of French Protestantism. On the first occurred the terrible massacre of St. Bartholomew, and on the second the no less terrible—if we estimate its results—Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, by which the privileges that Henry IV. had insured to French Protestants were removed, an act which, according to Sismundi, inflicted upon France the loss of nearly a million of her best and most industrious sons and daughters.

The records of those days, and the various histories of French Protestantism which have been given to us in later times, abound in heartrending descriptions of the awful persecutions through which the "Church in the Desert" passed, but the gloom is somewhat lightened by the consideration that thousands of those faithful witnesses for the truth found a refuge on our shores, and our national life was quickened, as our commercial greatness was in a large measure built up, by the accession to our population of so many that were sound in the faith, pure in morals, and both skilful and diligent in business. England, in a great measure, owes her manufacturing greatness to the admission of the Huguenots to her shores.

It is, therefore, becoming that we should acknowledge these benefits to our own land, in the interest which English Christians generally have taken in the progress of the Reformation (so tragically checked, but not, as we know, effaced) in beautiful but unhappy France. The Times, in a leading article on the subject, remarks that "a Protestant France would have been so essentially different an element in Europe from a Catholic France, as Louis XIV. fashioned it, that the imagination lingers regretfully over the embers of a struggle" (alluding to the resistance of the Camisards), "which might conceivably, though not probably, have borne such fruit. A Protestant France might have meant a Protestant Spain, and even a Protestant Italy. The face of the world and the history of the human mind would have been changed."

It may be recorded, however, with thankfulness, how widely the doors of entrance have been opened for the messengers of the Gospel in France, in these later days of light and liberty. For some forty years past it has been laid upon the hearts and consciences of a comparative few to labour and pray for the cause of French evangelisation. In various forms, and with a diversity of methods, the work is now progressing, and more general interest is daily being elicited on the part of those who recognise the fact that whilst "the uttermost parts of the earth" need evangelisation, the "Samaria" of papal Europe must not be forgotten.

Amongst the oldest organisations for this great and important object stands the Foreign Aid Society, whose especial mode of operation is the evangelisation of France and other Continental lands, through the instrumentality of the natives themselves. It aids by grants of money the different Sociétés Evangéliques on the Continent, concerning whose Protestant, Evangelical, and purely missionary character, there can be no doubt.

We gladly endorse the suggestion of its Secretary, Rev. H. J. Browne, vicar of Christ Church, Barnet, that the 22nd of this month should be observed by special prayer on the part of Christians in England, for the furtherance of the Gospel on the Continent. It would be fitting also, if some special Bicentenary gift were added for the furtherance of the work, and sent to one or other of the different societies—such as the Foreign Aid Society, the Evangelical Continental Society, the McAll Mission, and other organisations connected with this special department of labour for the Master.

SALISBURY CONFERENCE.

THIS Conference began on Tuesday, September 22, and ended on Friday, September 25. Throughout the entire session the comforting and liberating presence of the Holy Spirit was felt. "I beseech Thee, O Lord, show me thy glory," was the special prayer of the opening morning. Three days after, the calm, happy faces of scores of enlightened and liberated believers told how God had heard that prayer.

One marked feature of the gathering was its prayerfulness. "I will hear what God the Lord will speak," seemed to be the language of most present. Almost every speaker was definitely prayed for, either vocally or silently, before he was called upon to speak. One who addressed us in mighty power on Wednesday evening, had previously spent either two or three hours in private prayer.

Another feature was the profuse and genial hospitality shown to all visitors from a distance. The President, Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, entertained about ninety guests at his house—the Rectory—for three afternoons in succession, at a sumptuous meal, which he modestly called tea. At the close of this tea we had a free talk together on Bible topics, to the great refreshment of all present.

A third feature was the intense missionary enthusiasm manifested. This was seen at the praise meeting on Friday, when fourteen or fifteen men and women rose to their feet to declare their willingness to go anywhere to preach Christ, if only their way is opened.

The subject of discussion was "The Manifestation of Jehovah's Love to his People," (1) in the Past, (2) in the Present, and (3) in the Future.

As there is little room for a sketch of the discussion full enough to be generally profitable, we will merely report a few of the VALUABLE THOUGHTS DROPPED.

(a) Concerning the Covenant of Grace.—God has not made a covenant with us; He has made it with Jesus in our behalf. Hence our security: "Those whom Thou hast given Me I have kept." Will God keep the covenant of day and night, and not keep the eternal covenant made with Jesus Christ? Will He keep the covenant of the bow, and not keep that of the Cross?

(b) The Twofold Touch.—(1) The touch of cleansing (Isa. vi. 6, 7). This was the purging of guilt by blood, since the live coal came from the altar of sacrifice. (2) The touch of inspiration (Jer. i. 9). "Then the Lord put forth his hand and touched my mouth," &c. This twofold touch is necessary to real success in God's work.

(c) The great end of God's love is our love—"our deed-love"—"that we should be holy before Him in love," that we should walk before God "unto all pleasing."

(d) "The Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil."—The devil's first work was to refuse the service of God. So Christ's work was to take upon Himself the form of a servant. The devil's first work on earth was to induce our first parents to reject the law of service. Christ came to induce us to accept his yoke—i.e., the yoke of service toward God which He bore.

(f) The fulness of blessing consists in our anticipating the Millennium in our hearts by making Christ absolute monarch there.

(g) "God has made me a new man. I've seen it before in theory, but never properly realised that I am one with Christ!" "I shall never forget Mr. Hudson Taylor's saying that to me many years ago in China," said Mr. Judd, the China Inland Missionary, at our Wednesday meeting.

(h) Observe the tense used in Rom. v. 8: "God commendeth his love toward us." A perpetual present. Apply this to our ever present need of God's keeping love.

(i) We cannot know Christ as a reality till we first know Him as a necessity.

(j) Christian self-denial involves not only things unlawful, but things most excellent in themselves. To Christ our example it meant even the pure glory of heaven.

(k) Always realise Christ as King. To many Christians He is merely a constitutional Sovereign, and Self is Prime Minister. Holiness cannot come till He is owned as a despotic Monarch, having absolute rule.

(l) "And ye are filled full in Him." This is a fact, quite independent of my feeling. It is for my faith to grasp it as a fact, and give thanks to God for it.

(m) The fulness of blessing: Where found? How to attain to it? How to communicate it. The only source is Jesus Christ, therefore find Him. Next, connect yourself with that source, and remove all hindrances to the inflow—i.e. trust Christ, and put from you all that is sinful or doubtful. Lastly, connect yourself with the thirsty without, and remove all hindrances to the outflow.

(n) Remember that when you stop the outflow of a full cistern, you also stop the inflow. This is true in grace.

(o) One of the greatest hindrances to the spirituality and power of the Church is unnecessary hoarding.

(p) When the Rev. John Wilkinson, of Mildmay, was converted as a boy of 14, he prayed: "Lord, if I can glorify Thee as a chimney-sweep more than in any other way, make me one."

(q) He was lately invited by some Christian ladies to go down to Northampton and meet a company of Secularists. After much prayer he consented. About 400 of them gathered to meet him. Such was their temper, that had a minister entered they would have left the room. Mr. Wilkinson announced himself as "a poor sinner, saved by the grace of God, who shakes hands with every one of you in his heart." They cheered him. He then told them what he knew of answers to prayer. A little while after he had finished the men wanted more, so he gave them another half-hour's speaking on the same subject. The response was wonderful. Since then large numbers have been gathered into Bible-classes of twenty, thirty, and fifty members, and many have yielded their hearts to Christ. Among the latter is the late secretary of a Secularist Club.

PRACTICAL RESULTS.

The following jewellery was given to the Lord during the Conference: Nine rings, one brooch, one pair of ear-rings, and three bracelets.

The spirit of praise and love and practical consecration grew intense. Few who were present will ever forget the praise meeting on Friday morning.

A week before the Conference fourteen believers had met to ask the Lord definitely to send them the £140, spent in building retiring-rooms to the Conference Hall, by the end of the Conference, if it were his will. When the Conference was well through, a little more than half the sum had been given; but towards the close of the praise meeting, Mr. Wilkinson, manifestly moved by the Spirit, alluded to the subject so effectively that quite a stream of gold began to flow in, and in five minutes the debt was cleared. How we praised the Lord, and with what deep sympathy we listened to Mr. Thwaites, our Chairman, as with face radiant with tears of joy, and in broken utterance, he told us his gratitude to God for hearing prayer so gloriously.

THE GENERAL ELECTION AND CERTAIN SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST.

"THE Parliament which will shortly meet at Westminster will be representative of the people of this country." Such are the recently spoken words of an ex-Cabinet Minister; and it must be acknowledged that of late years, on purely political questions, the opinion of a majority of the people has been met by responsive legislation. This has not been the case in relation to certain social questions. These, even when a numerical majority has pronounced in favour of them, have been ignored, or evaded, or postponed, or dismissed. The hour is timely for a large party, found in every part of the kingdom to ask, Is it longer to be borne that Parliamentary representatives should feel at liberty to disregard the wishes of the people from whom they come?

Let one or two examples be adduced. On an evening in June, 1854, when I lived in Leeds, that town gave a verdict on the subject of Sunday Closing. Great excitement had grown up. Placards and bills of explanation and satire fell thick, like snowflakes. Working men were called upon by interested parties to defeat the proposal. An open-air meeting was held. During the day the publicans sent bands of music through the streets to summon their adherents. The assemblage was very large. Mr. (now Sir Edward) Baines, who had been accustomed to estimate numbers in that Cloth Hall yard, told me that at least twenty thousand persons (mostly men) were present. This was also the estimate of others. The vote was taken with precautions that satisfied both sides. It was unmistakably in favour of a petition to Parliament for Sunday Closing. This is not mentioned as an expression of national sentiment. Undoubtedly, however, such a preponderating vote would have had weight with legislators had it taken place in reference to a purely political question, or to party politics at a by-election. In this case it went for nothing.

But more decisive evidence has been afforded. In 1883, notwithstanding vigorous exertions of an interested trade, the petitions to Parliament were two to one in favour of Sunday Closing. More decisive still, a domiciliary canvass has been made. One or two specimens are given of the result. In Birkenhead there were, of working men, 186 against the closing, and 3204 for. In this town of Tunbridge Wells, where excursionists may be looked for by the inhabitants, 2206 were for, and 368 against, with 172 neutrals. In the agricultural town of Calne (Wilts) 192 said "Yes," and 21 said "No." In Camborne, among a mining population, 2501 were in favour, 6 against, and only 21 neutral. In a part of Birmingham, among its intelligent artisans, the result was four to one in favour of closing; while in Liverpool, a town where powerful considerations for the opening must have been felt, there were 44,061 for closing, and only 8542 against. Yea, in Liverpool 954 publicans signed for closing; 252 were adverse, and 187 were neutral. Concerning neutrals, it is to be noted that they are not regarded in Parliamentary or Municipal elections. They are supposed to be indifferent, and it is not silence, but expressed opinion, that dominates legislation. Nothing could be fairer than this house-to-house and workshop canvass, and nothing more decisive. If there were 58,528 neutrals (not to be reckoned), there were in the grand total 687,472 for, and only 91,641 against, i.e., more than seven to one.

What has been the result? Nothing in any way corresponding to the wishes and will of the English people. Mr. Gladstone, in his late manifesto, said plainly, "The fundamental rule of our Parliamentary system is that the majority shall prevail." Has it been so here?

On one aspect of what is termed the Local Option question, there has been an almost unanimous opinion. It has been felt that if there was one mode of opening houses for the sale of intoxicants, and of granting licenses for this end, more objectionable than another, it has been to lodge a power that affected seriously the character of neighbourhoods, and the morality and happiness of the people, in the hands of men who, so far as communities were concerned, were practically irresponsible. No one doubts that many magistrates are connected with the brewing interest, or can advance the value of their own property by granting licenses. There are towns which, in this respect, are ruled by the brewers. Moreover, in many places, the police know well enough that, in tendering information as to the character of licensed houses, their masters are the magistrates on the bench. Against such a vicious arrangement, and on a matter that more than any other touches the pauperism, vice, crime, and insanity of the nation, there is an all but universal opinion. Year after year, however, this judgment has been ignored. In October, 1853, I attended a conference in Manchester on the evils of the Liquor Traffic. It was attended by many philanthropic men. The topic has never slept from that time. Thirty-two years have thus passed, during the greater part of which statesmen have unconstitutionally evaded what has been felt—by the bulk of the people—to be a monstrous scandal. Some kind of popular control has been everywhere asked over a traffic that bore seriously upon the trade, taxes, and well-being of the country, and, although countless meetings have been held, and multitudinous petitions signed, successive Governments have never indicated, in relation to the subject, anything approaching the attention they have paid to a minor question of political partisanship.

To the objection that it is Utopian to expect to make men sober by Acts of Parliament, the answer is easy. It is not new Acts of the Legislature which are asked for, but the reform of a legislation which has been proved to have been a blunder. The Reform of the Licensing Laws and Sunday Closing are demands that are directed against a most inconsistent national policy. Through the Established Church the nation spends six or seven millions sterling every year to advance morality. Nonconformists spend a sum at least approximating to this amount. Ministers of religion struggle day by day to roll back tides of evil. Sunday-school teachers by thousands labour with an unsurpassed self-denial to save the young from the temptations of life. On the other hand, methods are instituted which neutralise this vast outlay and these laborious exertions. Taverns are multiplied to such an extent that many of the keepers of them cannot get a living, except by poisonous adulterations, liquors not to quench but to excite the thirst that favours waste and drunkenness, and by every seductive art that may entrap youths and maidens whom others would save. Not only so: on a day when by law and usage other places of business are closed, and on winter nights, when shops are darkened, houses are licensed to attract the unoccupied, and to show that they are open by a glare of gas-light. Nothing could more effectually counteract the nation's efforts for popular elevation, or open so wide a door for costly crime, pauperism, and domestic degradation.*

On a third question of the Sunday opening of Museums, this only may be said: Differences there are as to the obligations and nature of Sabbath-keeping, but eighty or more per cent. of the people are united in opposition to measures that would secularise the day. They ask legislators to do nothing further in this direction; and in regard to the English Sabbath (to use an illustration lately applied to other legislation), they request Governments, as Diogenes did Alexander, to cease to stand between them and the sunshine. But on this matter the late decisive vote of the Congress at Southport, which represented the Trades Union of the United Kingdom, must be enough. It would be simple tyranny to force this attempt at Museum Opening further. The Times, in a leader on Sept. 12, conclusively said:—

> "The matter is one on which the working classes have the best right to speak. It is for their convenience that the opening had been proposed, and if they think that the balance of advantage is against it, there is no more to be said, and the verdict must be accepted by those who profess to speak for them."

It may be added that three of the delegates vehemently protested against the assertion that the working classes, even of London, were in favour of the Sunday opening.

If there is one subject on which Liberal and Conservative Governments have persistently refused to carry out the will of the people, it has been in relation to what are termed the C. D. Acts. It is not too strong a word to affirm that these Acts were at first carried surreptitiously, and since that time the expression of opinion against them has been literally overwhelming. Five thousand of the clergy of the Established Church, including dignitaries and several bishops, have declared that they consider the Acts to be immoral and unjust. No fewer than 7770 Nonconformist ministers have done the same. In favour of the Acts from 1870 to 1885, there have been 77 petitions, with 3881 signatures; against them, 17,795 petitions, with signatures to the number of 2,602,778! In every town in the kingdom public meetings have protested against the Acts. I have lived for twelve years in a town where most of the time the demoralising Acts have been in operation, and have seen crowded meetings in the Town Hall, condemning them with absolute unanimity. A notice of motion for their total repeal when the new Parliament shall meet has been given, and, if that motion is rejected, men who have been unwilling to make this a test question, will have to consider this new and menacing thing in the land, that Acts which at first were carried without the people's knowledge, are still unrepealed, spite of the voice of the people in indignant protest.

It is clear that two leading opinions divide the country. Politicians are setting forth that, with the carrying of certain political reforms, the poor will be fed, sordid and hopeless lives will cease, the people will be contented, and the nation prosperous. Others, and a much larger and more influential class than many conceive, feel strongly that, if statesmen will continue, on account of fancied difficulties, to disregard questions that bear a vital relation to the moral condition of the people, the promises, now so large, will end in disappointment. "Suffrages and democratic institutions" have failed to make a happy people. They have been inadequate. The hope of the country is in the union of the two parties. Should politicians refuse, there can be but one duty before social reformers, and that is to band together and insist that representative Government shall be true to its name in matters that concern the loyal of God, and the social well-being of the country.

* As to the alleged failure of Sunday Closing, not only must the flat contradictions given to the allegation be borne in mind, but this consideration also:—Drink will be obtained by habitual topers. A mistaken legislation has helped to make them what they are. We have, however, to change our legislation so as to save the next generation.

DUBLIN PRISON GATE MISSION.

NO one can be a constant reader of The Christian without being struck by the amount of effort, preventive and reformatory, put forth to stem the tide of evil which floods our land. Our sympathies are rightly enlisted by those who seek to save the unfortunate girls and women who, on release from our prisons—with character blasted, and every door shut against them—are often ruthlessly forced into a life of shame and sin. The rescue of these unfortunates is the work to which the Dublin Prison Gate Mission devotes its energies.

I have just visited this mission, and only wish I could conduct your readers over it. The washroom, where the clothes of the very poor only are washed—an excellent charity in itself—the sewing-class, where numbers of tidily-dressed women of all ages are engaged in their work, the prayers and hymns in which all join readily and heartily, the clean, well-kept dormitories, and the general air of carefulness and comfort over all, could not fail to call forth deep and hearty interest.

The chief aim of the mission is to tell out "the good tidings of great joy," and it is very encouraging to see that, though most of the women are Catholics, and all the teachers are Protestants, yet the word is received gladly, and, thank God, in some cases convincingly.

The progress of public opinion in favour of this work is shown by the fact that on two occasions lately young girls have been sent to the Home by the magistrates, instead of being committed to prison, and in both cases with entirely satisfactory results.

One of the drawbacks under which the mission has hitherto laboured has been the want of sleeping accommodation; and this has obliged the majority of the women to go out when the day's work is over, some to lodgings provided by the mission itself, and some to find accommodation where they can. This serious drawback is now about to be remedied. Two new dormitories have been built and furnished, and they will, it is hoped, accommodate most, if not all, of those for whom sleeping places were wanting.

I earnestly commend this work to the prayerful sympathy of all who are alive to the well-nigh desperate position of many of those who are day after day being cast forth out of our prisons into the streets. H. C. P. Rice, Colonel.

Bayswater, Sandycove, co. Dublin.

MUSIC FOR THE PEOPLE.—With the laudable object of bringing the study of music within the reach of the middle classes, a new Academy of Music has been established in the City, disavowing any competition with existing schools, but seeking to supplement them by providing a first-class training for those who have hitherto been debarred from such studies. One feature of the scheme is likely to meet with universal favour. It is proposed to inaugurate a series of concerts and miscellaneous entertainments in the poorer districts of London, either free or at a very low rate of admission, the local clergy being freed from all liability in the matter of expense. Evening classes are announced for several subjects, respecting which particulars may be obtained of the Secretary, Mr. H. A. Browne, 24, Ludgate-hill, E.C.—Musical Monthly.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE cloud which has appeared over the horizon of Europe may portend war. It is no bigger than a man's hand now, but it may rapidly assume larger dimensions. From whence come wars? Can no Peace Societies stop them? Can no arbitrations avail to supplant the appeal to the sword? "From whence come wars and fightings among you?" St. James asks, and answers the question by another: "Come they not hence, even of your lusts?" Nations are full of "lusts," and these lusts must be satisfied. Lust for territory is politely concealed under such phrases as "rectification of frontier," "scientific boundaries," "adjustment of the balance of power." But why do frontiers need adjustment, and boundaries need altering? Why the present tension amongst the armed nations of Europe on the Eastern Question? Why need there be nine millions of men kept under arms?

There is a disturbing element secretly at work, which no diplomacy, combination of powers, or treaties can control. That disturbing element is the absence of the nation of Israel from their own land. Wars cannot cease until that nation is reinstated. The dispossession of the nation has been followed by an unbroken series of wars and conquests, and evermore the storm-clouds seem eddying round this quarter of the world.

In Deut. xxxii. 7—9, it is written, "Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will shew thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee. When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance." When God settles boundaries, they will be unalterable. There will be no lasting settlement, then, until "the people" of the Lord are restored to their inheritance, and they shall have acknowledged and submitted to Jesus Messiah. "He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; He breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder" (Ps. xlvi. 9). In praying for the peace of Jerusalem, we are praying for the peace of the nations surrounding Jerusalem.

General Gordon's prediction, dated March, 1880, that Bulgaria and Roumelia would, before long, be united, though Europe did not wish it, received its fulfilment a few days ago. The Great Powers may decree as they please, but there is a Greater Power which works all things after the counsel of its own will. The wheels of time are travelling on in the track of a Divine purpose, and statesmen find that they have to follow rather than to lead. Concerning the Ottoman Empire, we read in the foreign correspondence of The Times, "It cannot be disguised that the very essence of Mussulman rule in Europe inevitably involves its disappearance."

After giving reasons for this conclusion, the writer goes on to say:—"Logic requires the successive enfranchisement of the Christian provinces from the Papal and Imperial rule of the Mussulmans; and the great effort of Europe consists in staving off, in the interests of peace, this inevitable consummation." There is a King, eternal and immortal, though "invisible," concerning whom it may be written, on the walls of every council chamber in the world, "The nation and kingdom that will not serve Thee shall perish." Let it be remembered, also, that this is as true in London as it is in Constantinople.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

"THE increase of influence, the wonderfu extension of the work, the gratitude of th poor for it, the changed lives of some throug the Gospel of which they were formerly ignorant, and the peaceful death of others, draws ou our thankfulness to God." So says Miss d Broen in her report for the current year. Owing to the expectation and actual arrival in Franc of the cholera, her projected visit to England for the purpose of holding meetings on behal of her work, had to be postponed.

Her experience is that the people much appreciate being able to listen to what they can understand, instead of witnessing ceremonie void of meaning to them, performed in a foreign tongue, coupled with superstitions that their intelligence refuses to accept.

One man who heard the Gospel in the iron room, said: "This is what I have been in search of all my life." Another thanked God for his illness, because it had brought him to the mission where he "heard what he could understand." Those who attend the Medical Mission "listen with wrapt attention to the message of salvation, and some of them even refuse to receive a double portion of medicine because it would deprive them of coming to the service the following week." The attendance last year was 32,000.

The "Occasional Work" included the daily supply of soup and bread to about a thousand unemployed workmen during the late distress. A writer in Le Semaine Réligieuse de Genève, who witnessed this charity, says, "God only could put into the heart of a woman the strong desire thus to do good to her brethren; not only to their bodies but to their souls." A large number of Testaments and tracts were given away on the occasion of the late M. Gambetta's funeral, which the crowds were so eager to accept that the distributors had to take refuge from the pressure in shops.

A new branch of the mission has been opened at Aubervilliers, a suburb of Paris, at the urgent request of many of the inhabitants.

An invalid who gained blessing writes to the evangelist:—"I am no longer able to go out, but must thank you for having brought me into a spirit of humility, and confidence, and prayer, which sustains me through this long attack which is so sad and exhausting, and which threatens to stifle me at any moment." The report also tells of a woman who had firmly resolved to kill a man who had tricked her into giving him her savings, but she was completely turned from her purpose through what she heard in one of the meetings, into which she accidentally strayed. Such cases as these go perhaps more than anything else to prove the blessing which these missions dispense by the bountiful hand of God.

The Training Home, German meeting, various classes, and other branches continue to flourish, though of course needing continued support. The address of Miss de Broen is 3, Rue Clavel, Paris.

MISS A. VON MIELECKA has returned to England, where her address will be St. John's Vicarage, Ryde, Isle of Wight. She will be glad to receive foreign postage stamps, post-cards, wrappers, &c., as formerly.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Our summer campaign in the many tents of our Mission is now drawing to a close. In review of the Lord's mercy, may I ask your readers to unite with me in thanksgiving for the abundant blessing so graciously conferred? Your space will not admit of details of the services held in many parts of London and country towns in which the tents have been pitched, though pages could be filled with incidents of the deepest interest, of many souls brought to the feet of Jesus, among whom are some of the most abandoned characters. The work in Dorset has been of a specially interesting and fruitful character. I rejoice to say that in several of the halls, also, we have had much encouragement both in point of numbers and the spiritual results, so far as these can be traced. I earnestly ask the prayers of your readers for our winter work now about to commence.

THE CRY OF THE WOMAN CHILD.

SHE was only a slip of a child,
Wayward, and fond, and sweet,
Like a flower that blossoms wild,
When the spring and summer meet;
She was dainty and undefiled,
And the world seemed under her feet:
But alas for the woman child,
Who is thrown on the miry street!

In the happy twilight space,
When the shades their curtain spin,
She had learned the wondrous grace
Of the Man who is our kin;
But never she knew how base
Was her brother of earth within:
And alas for the baby face,
Which is early streaked with sin!

She was only a bit of a girl,
Tender and fresh from school,
To be caught in the cruel swirl
Of the black and boiling pool—
To be dragged beneath in the whirl,
An ignorant, pretty fool:
But alas for the innocent girl,
Who is made the rich man's tool!

As free as the birds that fly,
Where the labourers slowly plod;
As fair as the violet shy,
Which peeps through the winter sod;
As bright as the open sky,
In her purity she trod:
But alas for the children's cry
That goes up to the throne of God!

She was only a little maid
From her quiet cottage home,
Half forward and half afraid;
With the scent of the country loam—
With the light of the dewy blade,
And the freshness of the foam:
But alas for the helpless maid,
When her steps begin to roam!

She was only a simple lass,
On her life about to start,
Unskilled in the rocks to pass,
Unwarned of the tempter's art;
And the earth was a magic glass,
That gave back her guileless heart:
But alas for the simple lass,
Who is sold in the Devil's mart!

There were gardens gaily planned,
Though the worm was at the root;
In the brothers kind and grand,
Lay the demon and the brute;
And out of corruption's land,
Came the tallest bud and shoot:
But alas for the stainless hand,
When it plays with the poison fruit!

Where the stately mansions rise,
Went she wandering to her fate,
Where the wealth its victims buys
For the passion it cannot sate,
On a pathway paved with sighs,
To the gilt infernal gate:
But alas for the heavenly eyes,
If they look at the earthly bait!

She was only a father's pride,
The pick of a radiant wreath,
Borne along by the dancing tide,
With the waft of the blossom's breath:
A credulous baby bride,
But married to ghastly death:
And alas for the blushing pride,
Which is plunged in the night beneath!

There was laughter to smoothe the road,
There were voices that seemed to sing,
There were burdens that did not load,
And the shadow folded its wing;
The fountain with sweetness flowed,
And the pain had a pleasant ring:
But alas for the secret goad,
And the lips with a bitter sting!

She was only a doll, with hair
As fired with the sunshine's flame,
With her untaught foolish air;
Like a picture out of its frame;
Tricked to the altar stair,
And the offering without name:
But alas for the glorious hair,
That is turned to a crown of shame!

A handful of sweets was spread,
For the prey of the priceless cost:
And, to wile her wavering tread,
Every lure was lightly tost,
To the chamber of the dead,
Till the fatal bridge was crost:
And alas for the darling head,
When the jewel of jewels is lost!

She was only a country child
As merry and blithe as a boy,
From the lesson conquered, wild
For the pleasure that cannot cloy;
Trapt, and betrayed, and defiled;
Dashed down from the stars of joy:
And alas for the woman child,
Who is dropt like a broken toy!

Shall the cry go up from earth,
That pitiful baby wail,
In the midst of the sinful mirth,
From the hearts that ache and ail,
Unavenged, in the awful dearth
That is under the dead thing's veil?
But alas for the sisters' worth,
When their brothers faint and fail.

She was only the heir of Heaven,
Swept on the ocean swell,
Strong with the strength of seven,
In her holy maiden spell,
Till she tasted the bitter leaven,
And sank, as the angels fell:
But alas for the hope of Heaven,
Which is made the guest of Hell!

Shall our daughters pine with pain,
Now the chivalry is gone?
Shall our darlings weep in vain,
And the cursèd deeds be done?
Shall the leper's guilty stain,
Be a jest that babblers con?
Must we mourn for the honour slain,
While the murderer still lives on?

"BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN WORK."

KNOWING that many of your readers are interested in this work for God, I rejoice to be able to give a little outline of what I witnessed. Having seen in THE CHRISTIAN that Messrs. Wharton and Weaver were taking a Bible van to Bridlington Quay in August, I started off on a long journey from Ireland to see the work there. The place was crowded with seaside visitors, many of whom gathered round the carriage on the sands after the singing of a hymn. This was generally followed by one or two short Gospel addresses, after which Bibles and Testaments of every description were offered at marvellously low prices, as also carefully selected Gospel books, which at times were so eagerly applied for, that, were it not for the kind assistance of Christian friends, they could not be passed out fast enough. I was also delighted to hear of anxious ones inquiring the way of God more perfectly, of whom not a few found peace, and some backsliders restored. The glorious Gospel of the grace of God was preached twice each Sunday at "The Bethel," which was well filled, and I believe many were reached who seldom go to any place of worship.

The large Bible van has now been at Harrogate for nearly a month, with, I believe, still better results. It was no unusual thing to see large crowds remaining for the Gospel meetings in the open air till a late hour, even on some cold wet nights.

They have also conducted Gospel meetings at the Royal Spa Concert Room twice each Sunday during their stay, which have been crowded with visitors from all parts, who appeared fully to appreciate them, and not a few arose to confess they had received blessing.

I understand that during the season, now drawing to a close, nearly 20,000 Bibles and Testaments have been circulated, besides a vast quantity of choice Gospel books. Eternity alone will reveal the full results of such a glorious work, which commends itself to the prayers and sympathy of all the Lord's people. W. PERROTT.

REV. R. MACKAY.

ON September 22 an interesting service took place in the Pownall-road Congregational Church, Dalston, when Rev. R. Mackay was received as the pastor of the church.

The attendance was large, and the church and school-room were beautifully decorated with flowers and plants. Rev. William Tyler, D.D., presided, and interesting addresses were given by Mr. Edward W. Gates, Mr. J. M. Duff, and Revs. Andrew Mearns, William Williams, J. L. Forster, L.L.B., and W. Justin Evans. Rev. William Marshall offered the recognition prayer, and Rev. R. B. Lander, and Rev. T. J. R. Temple took part in the service, while Dr. Tyler gave Mr. Mackay the right hand of fellowship. Letters, expressing sympathy, were received from a number of ministers, and earnest laymen, wishing the pastor God's richest blessing in the work to which he was specially set apart in the great city. For more than ten years Mr. Mackay has laboured in Canada, having been sent to that country by the Congregational Churches in Scotland.

Remarkable blessing attended his labours in many parts of the Dominion. Hundreds are now in fellowship with the churches of different denominations in that land, through the blessing of the Holy Spirit on his labours, and some are now in the regular ministry who were converted in connection with these services. Since coming to London, God has owned his efforts, and it is the earnest prayer of those who know him that he may be even more abundantly blessed in the future.

THE HOWARD ASSOCIATION.

THIS Association, instituted for the promotion of the best methods of crime-prevention and penal treatment, has abundantly proved the necessity for its existence and liberal support. The committee were last year honoured with an invitation from the Home Secretary of State to contribute suggestions toward the preparation of a Bill touching the further efficiency of reformatory and industrial schools; and the annual report just published contains their memorial sent to the Home Office in response.

Rev. J. L. Milligan, the Chaplain of the Western Pennsylvania State Prison, says:—"When we are seeing, week after week, children forced into a criminal life by bad parents, it suggests to us that parental rights, when antagonistic to good order and the safety of life and property, ought surely to be supplemented by the absolute control of the State." Much valuable information is also given relative to reformatory and other schools. Systems of governmental training of pauper children in certain countries are variously defined and compared. In Michigan, the State retains its sole and absolute control over every destitute child until twenty-one years of age. The treatment of prisoners, suggestions for certain improvements in prison regulations, the bad influence of profane and savage officers, are subjects which are ably dealt with in brief and concise manner.

The Association has often rendered useful service to the Temperance cause by its advocacy through the public journals, and by the collection and diffusion of information on the subject. It declares that "the liquor traffic is ascending the throne of American politics. Whisky is king, or soon will be." Here in England things, it seems, are as bad, for at the Greenwich Police-court an inveterate offender was recently brought up for the 400th time. The offices of the Association, of which Mr. Tallack is the Secretary, are at 5, Bishopsgate-street Without, E.C.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—Mr. M. H. Sutton, of Reading, for many years a warm friend of this Mission, recently invited the missionaries who were spending their annual holiday at their Seaside Home at Ventnor (I.W.) to an outing at Blackgang. A party of forty were entertained at the hotel by their host. After tea, Mr. Sutton said that it gave him and his family great pleasure to afford the missionaries and their wives this enjoyment. It had been suggested by a daughter, whose birthday it was, that she should like it to be kept in this manner. One of Mr. Sutton's sons, a clergyman, also spoke. He said that having worked in Spitalfields, in the East of London, he had come in contact with them and their work, and could bear testimony to the good they had accomplished.

THE LORD'S WORK IN ZURICH.

HEARING there were meetings held a little out of the city of Zurich, we wended our way to the Grunenhof, Berg-strasse, Hottingen. They are held in a large upper room which contains about four hundred, and is usually crowded to overflowing. Two young women and a young man conducted the meeting with fervour and simplicity. There were prayers, hymns, and addresses. The audience joined heartily in the hymns, and were, on the whole, attentive; only a few idlers attempted to create a disturbance, but a solemn impression overawed them. Part of a chapter was read, and an address founded thereon, by one speaker, who earnestly warned her hearers that if they neglected the Gospel now, a time would come when they would call in vain. Several men and women, young and old, stood up in various parts of the room and testified to a changed life since they had found the Lord. We were greatly pleased and encouraged by this service, and can testifiy that nothing whatever was said or done by the promotors that could be reasonably objected to. Meetings are held here almost every evening at half-past seven, and on Sundays at 7 a.m., 10 a.m., and 2.30 p.m. People come miles to the early meeting on Sunday, remain until the second meeting, go home at twelve o'clock, and return at half-past two. The greatest interest is awakened; there appears a hungering and thirsting for truth. On Sunday afternoons the salle is so crowded that standing-room is not to be had by those who come late.

These meetings were commenced early in July. Already over a hundred names of professed converts have been entered in the books of the mission, a large proportion of whom have been converted at the meetings; backsliders have been restored, and all have found peace. Many come in seeking blessing, longing for rest of soul, so that these meetings are indeed dew-drops in a dry and thirsty land.

When I call to mind how an eminent bishop once lamented to me that during fifteen long years in which he had preached he had not seen any result whatever, and how several chaplains and evangelists have laboured for years without being able to point to any conversions, and when I remember the enormous sums expended on buildings and organisations on the Continent, surely the great results already attained by these few devoted missionaries at so small a cost may well excite wonder and surprise. I only wish all missions were as simply and earnestly conducted, and witnessed to by such manifest fruit.

We visited the Salvation Army soldiers in their humble quarters in 10, Prediger Gasse, and had the pleasure of sympathising with them in their blessed work. Surely they "endure hardship as good soldiers of Jesus Christ," and are certainly not entangled with the affairs of this life; so simple, so earnest, so devoted, it may be said of them, "This one thing I do."

The opposition which they have encountered has been very great. Sometimes roughs collect outside and create a noise with various instruments, and have even gone so far as to throw stones at the dispersing crowd. The police authorities are watching for a serious disturbance as an excuse to stop the meetings altogether.

Then the clergy are also indifferent to this movement, and won't go near them, though quite a new life has arisen in many of their churches. Many Christians look coldly askance, while their looks betoken a lack of that peace which full salvation confers. Even the City Missionaries oppose, and one of them whose daughter found peace at the meetings, actually forbids her further attendance. The Rationalists have it all their own way in Switzerland. The Bible is no longer taught in the schools, and they threaten to stop even Sunday-schools on the plea that the children have enough teaching during the week. A law has been passed forbidding all under sixteen from attending these Gospel meetings, although they are freely allowed to go to theatres and public-houses. Visitation from house to house is forbidden, and yet all this takes place in this so-called land of liberty. I have given a plain, unvarnished tale of what I saw of the "Heils-Armee" in Zurich. The Lord is with them, and it is a serious thing to be against them. Let who will condemn, I cannot but feel great sympathy with their efforts, admiration for their unselfishness and patient suffering; and rejoice to witness so earnest an effort to publish the glad tidings of salvation.

THE McALL MISSION IN LYONS.

DEAR SIR,—Nearly a year and a half has now elapsed since I accepted charge of this mission in Lyons, and to-day we have good cause to thank God for what He has done among us, and to take courage for the future.

The work has been carried on in the face of many obstacles. We have also met with much encouragement; above all, the sympathy and prayers of Christians at home. On the spot, we have found, in many instances, a remarkable willingness to help, the evangelical pastors being among the foremost, while several laymen, and many others, humble men and women in the meetings, have rendered good service. Many Christians have been stirred up in heart and life. Would it could be said of all! But alas! in Lyons, many so-called evangelical Christians are content with a mere form of religion, practically believing that listening once a week to preaching on the Christian life, is all they need. But true conversions have occurred, and we try to encourage and strengthen the converts, looking to Him who alone can give wisdom. We find it is just those who are not ashamed by their words and actions to confess the Lord Jesus who receive power; and it is on such that the efficacy and progress of the work will largely depend. At the present time they are to be found in every meeting doing their best to help.

The work is much more difficult than at home; above all, trying to the staying power of the workers. But a large prospect opens up, when we thankfully look to the progress already made, and reckon what, by the blessing of God, it may grow to. Many more would sympathise with us in Lyons were it not for the name of Jesus. But in this name is our power: "Without Me ye can do nothing." So we have to put aside those who would make our work a moral one only, who neither know nor preach the Lord Jesus.

We have to make it distinctly felt that our mission is not to provide a sort of gratuitous entertainment, where the people may listen to fine words, and go away untouched in conscience and in life. We are seeking their salvation: we preach Christ. We desire to cast aside the armour of Saul, and, with only the smooth stones of the brook, go out to meet the Philistine. We endeavour to make it understood that we sympathise with all evangelical Christians in their existing organisations, and that, should we find them discouraged or spiritually cold, we desire to encourage, and, in reliance on the power of the Spirit, warm them up to spiritual activity.

At the close of nearly every evangelistic meeting we have an after-meeting. Direct dealing with inquirers is, however, exceedingly difficult, and one principal reason is that our helpers, as yet, have absolutely no experience in it. I have personally, at the close of each meeting, too many people to speak a word to, to devote the time I would like to individuals. But we are not without witnesses to the power and efficacy of direct personal influence; among others, one of my most valiant helpers, an outstanding case of clear gain from the enemy—last year a Rationalist, now a humble disciple of the Master.

We have founded four Sabbath-schools, all doing well, a most gratifying feature being that a large proportion of those who assist are the fruit of the work, and that in teaching the children they are themselves taught, growing in grace and in knowledge. Last winter we had five Christmas trees, and in the springtime a delightful excursion to the country, when about sixty of the grown people joined the children; such holidays, for the parents at least, have been entirely unknown.

In our four salles we conduct sixteen meetings a week—eight evangelistic, four prayer meetings, and four Sabbath-schools, with a gross attendance of about 1000 souls. Others we hope soon to add, such as a fellowship meeting, a Bible-class, and a sewing meeting for women. Then we will strike for a new quarter of the city.

In the first week of November, with the aid of a well-known evangelist, a series of special Gospel meetings will be begun. It is believed that much direct good will be the result, and souls won for the Lord Jesus.

Christians, pray for much blessing on this difficult field, and that Satan may not be permitted to hinder either the sowing of the seed or its springing up.

Neat books for the vest pocket, containing details of our work, have been prepared, and may be had on application at the office of The Christian.—Yours faithfully,

A. S. D. Colquhoun.

TRANSLATION OF MR. MOODY'S BOOKS.

DEAR SIR,—You will be glad to learn that we have had seven of Mr. Moody's addresses translated into Tamil, and the first 1000 copies were disposed of in a few months. A second edition is to be printed. I send you with this a copy of the book in Tamil. It has been praised by everyone who has read it. Pastors, Catechists, Bible-women, and other native workers find it a great help to them in their work, full of suggestive thoughts, and a stimulus to their own spiritual life. We are now going on to have more of Mr. Moody's works translated into Tamil.

The directness, the earnest, living, working Christian tone, and the numerous illustrations, go to make Mr. Moody's writings very acceptable to these people.

I want his other works for free distribution among English-reading Christian workers here. I hope in every case to give them where they will be eagerly read and studied, and given out again in addresses to the masses, acting on the hint given where Christ says twice to Peter, "Feed my sheep," but only once, "Feed my lambs," for if the sheep are well fed they will feed the lambs.

Mr. Sankey's hymn-books are now being used by every mission in the island, and are doing much good.—Yours in Christian service,

A CURIOUS CEREMONY.

HEATHENISM is by no means a cheap form of religion. The Indian papers give the details of a curious ceremony which was performed the other day at Travancore. The Maharajah was weighed against a mass of pure gold, which was then dispensed in charity. This custom, called "Tulabhara," is one of the greatest antiquity, and is said to be traceable in Travancore to the fourth century. It is not unknown in other parts of India, though of course gold is only used in the case of wealthy persons, the humbler sort being content to weigh themselves against spices or grain. On the present occasion the Maharajah weighed a little over nine stone. The Brahmins, it is said, with much practical shrewdness, wished to defer the ceremony, in the hope that the Maharajah might more nearly approach the weight of his father, who did not undergo the rite until forty-seven years old, when he weighed $14\frac{3}{4}$ stone. A stout devotee would, on this method, find charity a much more costly virtue than one who was in poor condition. Christian beneficence is of course more intelligent than that which Brahminism enjoins; but it is also much more economical. Imagine a stout modern Christian invited to compete with the Maharajah in the grace of charity!—Southern Cross.

OUR "BLUE-JACKETS."

WITH a full heart I record the work of the past year, that your readers, who have been y kind and steadfast helpers for so many ears, may see how God has been blessing us.

First of all, I must cordially thank those who ave so liberally helped me, £82 having been ent me by readers of The Christian.

It is most cheering, after ten years at Devonort and five at Portsmouth, to report increase n the work on every hand. We have taken ver the counters of our five Sailors' Rests 12,599 during the year; our lodgers have umbered 64,790, which only represents those ccommodated with beds, for of the hundreds, mounting to thousands in the year, sheltered at ight under our roofs, and lying down on ouches, on the floor, under the bagatelle oards, &c., we take no account.

We have been enabled to open a new hall at ortsmouth, designed so as to be as bright and asteful as possible, and seating 1000 people. The ttendance for the year is roughly estimated at 50,000. Over 1000 pledges have been registered s the fruit of our temperance meetings. "I ouldn't have believed," said a young seaman, that I could spend such an innocent evening, nd yet enjoy myself so. I wish my mother ere here; you know, I generally get drunk on aturday evening, but I shall know where to ome now."

Our Gospel meetings are so filled that is often impossible to get a seat long efore the meeting commences. Meanhile, a band of Christian seamen uptairs are praying for God's blessing, and he power of the Holy Ghost; and in the eeting that follows, one or another of he brave fellows gives out a hymn, prays, eads, or gives a Gospel address. Then here are the happy and crowded Biblelasses in the private rooms, where fficers and men sit side by side, reading, nging, and praying together. Our openir naval band, or "life-boat crew," goes ut into the courts and slums of the towns, tell in song and testimony of the love f Christ.

Our chief agencies are the R.N. Christan Union, R.N. Temperance Society, .N. Purity Society, and Help One nother Society. I cannot here give etails of them, but a little book called The Sea and its Sailors," giving a fuller ccount, will be sent (post free 2d.) to ny wishing to see it. The Naval Brigade ews has had a circulation of 122,000, its eceipts realising £553 18s. 7d. The blue backs" have increased to 270,000. do thank God reverently as I hear the stimony on all sides of souls being led Christ through their instrumentality. One rave seaman, who fell in action in the Soudan, ad them in his pockets for distribution among e soldiers; they were taken from him soaked ith his life-blood.

The total expenditure has been, on Gospel ork, £1769 12s. 3d.; on building, £3936 9s. 4d. he amount received by subscriptions and donaons, £5559 19s. 7d. The profits of the business epartment are placed to the building account, at a deficiency remains of £565 11s. 10d. Our dited balance-sheet will be sent to all subribers, and to anyone desiring it.

In conclusion, of my noble band of lady helpers, eaded by Miss Winty, I cannot speak too armly. Not one receives any salary, and from orning to night, on board ship and at the ailors' Rests, they are ever labouring to lead ur blue-jackets to Christ.

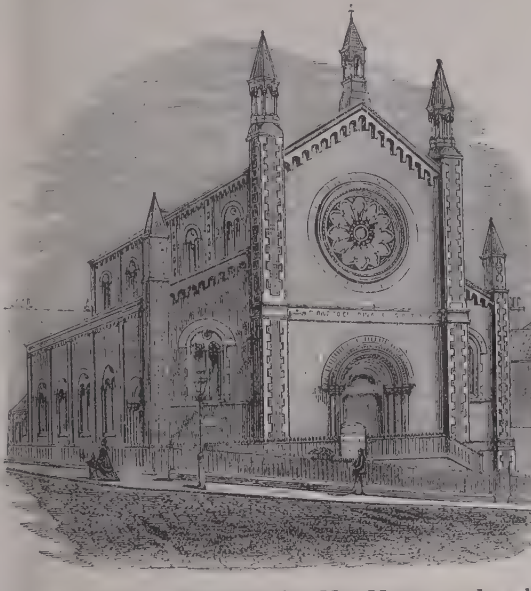
GRINDELWALD.—While staying here, the aughters of Mr. Cheyne Brady got up a singingass, and over fifty girls came twice a week to ng hymns and learn texts. They ended with a ast, and distributed a large number of tracts d Gospel leaves in German, French, and alian.

CITY-ROAD CHAPEL, BRISTOL.

JUBILEE SERVICES.

A VERY interesting series of services has been held to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of this church, together with the eleventh anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev W. J. Mayers (known to many of our readers not only as a preacher, but also as a singer of the Gospel). On September 2, 6, and 13, sermons were preached by the Rev. Francis Tucker, B.A., Mark Guy Pearse, and John Aldis; and on the 16th inst. the jubilee meeting was held. From the announcement, it might almost have been supposed that a gathering of the Evangelical Alliance was to take place. A prominent "Friend," Mr. J. S. Fry, was in the chair; among those taking part the names appeared, of the vicar of the parish, Rev. James Davidson, B.A. (a warm-hearted evangelical clergyman, who is cosecretary with Mr. Mayers in a very useful mission to the deaf and dumb); a Wesleyan brother (Rev. J. Banham); the former pastor of the church (Rev. J. R. Wood, now of Upper Holloway); Mr. James Wright (co-director with Mr. George Müller in the Orphan Houses); the Rev. Henry Wright (of Buckingham Chapel, Clifton); and several well-known Bristol Baptist and Independent ministers. The meeting, both in its high spiritual tone and the numbers who attended, was very encouraging to the pastor and his friends.



In his opening remarks, Mr. Mayers made reference to the good work of the first pastor, Rev. Evan Probert, who for thirty-two years laboured most successfully in Bristol, and nearly every speaker paid a well-deserved tribute to the work of this gracious and earnest minister of Christ. The friends at City-road have set themselves the task of raising a fund of about £1200 in connection with their jubilee celebration. Already some £650 have been paid in. The chapel has been thoroughly renovated, and large and useful improvements have been made in the vestry and class-room accommodation, and the church now rejoices in the possession of a very complete suite of rooms, most suitable for its various activities. It was mentioned as a pleasing proof of Christian fellowship, that the pastor's new vestry had been furnished by gifts from friends of all denominations, the very carpet being given by an "exclusive" brother. It is also hoped, before the fund is closed, to pay off a long-standing mortgage, taken up when the chapel was built. God's gracious smile has very manifestly rested upon the ministry of the Word, a large congregation is still gathered, and there are many signs and tokens of the Holy Spirit's presence and power.

The earnest prayers of our readers are asked that times of true reviving and refreshing may be given and continued.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE IN GLASGOW.

"AND it was dark, and Jesus was not come unto them." Such was Mr. Scroggie's text the other night, in the South-east end of Glasgow, where he has been conducting a series of religious meetings for the last three weeks, with blessed results night after night. The darkness of spiritual ignorance was described as resting on the masses, like that of the shepherd on the Cheviot Hills, who had never seen the sea, and when told of its storms, and shipwrecks, and destruction of human life, could not be persuaded to believe that such an element existed. No, forsooth, because "God was too good a Being to create an element to destroy life." But when brought to the East coast, a single sight of the sea in a storm scattered all his scepticism regarding the existence of the sea, and left an impression never to be forgotten. Similarly when the Holy Ghost in the preached Word, brings the conscience face to face with the moral law, eternal things become the all-absorbing realities: scepticism regarding heaven and hell is put to flight. But after all it is only like a storm in the night till Jesus comes. The awakened soul, like the disciples in the storm, is tossed, and toiling, and making no progress, and having the winds contrary, and ready to say "All these things are against me," because the Prince of Peace has not been received. But when the storm has made the need of the Master very evident, and the cry of distress is raised and reaches Him, He draws near saying, "It is I, be not afraid." And, when willingly received, there is a great calm, and progress also, for immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

At the close of the service about a hundred remained to the inquiry meeting. By far the largest number of these were believers, but a sprinkling of anxious inquirers was seen among them, and some of them cases of interest. The same has been the case at every service for the last three weeks. Mr. Scroggie and his friends night after night were looking for Pentecostal showers, and receiving gentle breathings of the Spirit of all Grace, producing, on one night, half a dozen cases of interest, nine on another night, eight on another, and so on, never leaving us without tokens of his presence and power to encourage us in the work.

Two cases in particular were deeply interesting. One was formerly in a good position, having had a shop of his own, and a good business, and very considerable prosperity. But company and the bewitching cup led to the neglect of business, and to commercial failure and grief. He came to the meetings, became interested and impressed; apparently looked to the Lord Jesus for help, signed the pledge, is now trying to bring others to the meetings in the evenings, and during the day is labouring with energetic effort to provide an honest livelihood for his family. The other is also a commercial man, rescued in time from the destroying cup.

Will the readers of The Christian breathe a petition to the God of help, that He may preserve these two commercial men, and carry on the impulse given to the Lord's work in this district through the instrumentality of Mr. Scroggie?

MR. SPURGEON presided at the opening meeting of a nine days' mission of the Blue Ribbon Total Abstinence Society in connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle, at the Lecture Hall, Newington Butts, when he strongly commended total abstinence.

SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.—The object of this Society is to give relief and employment to Jews, especially in the Holy Land, till they are enabled to form themselves into colonies on their own responsibility. "We do not," says Mrs. Finn, "attempt the restoration of the Jews to the Holy Land, but we see that God in his providence permits the persecution inflicted on them in Christian countries to be the means of driving hundreds of Jews thither for shelter. They are destitute, and we hope to enable them to obtain subsistence by industry." The office of this Society is 41, Parliament-street, S.W., and the lady secretary is Mrs. Finn.

JOHN HUSS AND JEROME OF PRAGUE:

A VISIT TO THE SPOT WHERE THEY WERE BURNED AT THE STAKE.

BY E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

I WISH to interest you, dear young friends, by telling you something about my visit to the very place where these good men were burned to death because of their great love for Christ. One morning I left our party at the Falls of the Rhine, and came alone to Constance. They went by a shorter route to Lucerne, reaching there before dark. I felt I could not go so near the place where these martyrs gave their lives for Christ, without visiting it.

I first saw the large hall in which the council of Constance was held. This council lasted for four years. It was conducted by about four hundred of the learned men of Europe, including emperors, bishops, popes, and cardinals.

It seems strange that such men should have condemned these noble Christians to be cruelly put to death, but certainly it is not more strange than that our blessed Lord should have been crucified by those who had seen his holy life from day to day.

The old hall was built five hundred years ago, about the time Huss was born. On its walls are beautiful paintings, some of them describing scenes in the lives of the martyrs.

A guide took me to the Cathedral of Constance, founded more than eight hundred years ago. It was in this church that John Huss was condemned to be burned. I was taken to the spot where he stood when he received the sentence. It is marked by a brass plate. Here he received his sentence without any sign of fear. At the close he knelt down and prayed, so that he was heard all over the great building, "May thine infinite mercy, O my God, pardon this injustice of mine enemies. Thou knowest how deformed with crimes I have been represented; yet, O my God! let that mercy which no tongue can express prevail with Thee, not to avenge my wrong!" How much like Christ's prayer on the cross! This only made his enemies the more furious. They put a paper cap on his head, on which was painted in large letters, A RINGLEADER OF HERETICS. This, instead of making him angry, rather led him to pity those who were so blinded. He could love his enemies! Can you do that?

He then turned to the crowd of people who were present, and spoke to them in a most earnest manner. He said, "You well know that I have never taught any of those things of which I have been accused." He told them that he was willing to die rather than deny the great truths of salvation which he had preached to them.

The bishops then delivered him over to the emperor. His books were burned at the gate of the church.

The emperor had sent Huss a passport, promising him safety as he passed to and from the council. On his way to Constance the people in great numbers thronged the towns and cities in Germany to meet him. Some, because they loved him and the truths he preached; others, out of curiosity and hatred.

As soon as he reached Constance he was arrested and cast into a dark, filthy prison. In the daytime he was loaded with fetters so that he could hardly move. After he had passed through one examination, he was fastened every night by a ring against the wall. Bohemian noblemen drew up a petition for his release, which was presented to the Council. They were reminded of the promise made by the emperor, but the answer of the Council and the Pope was, "Faith is not to be kept with heretics."

Twice he was brought before the Council; but each time he remained firm in his determination to die for Christ rather than deny Him. He was put into a large cart (which is still preserved in the museum in Constance, and in which I was permitted to sit) and taken about half a mile from the cathedral outside the city, to be burned alive. On reaching the place he sang several hymns; and at last he looked up towards heaven, saying, "Into thy hands, O Lord, do I commit my spirit. Thou hast redeemed me, O good and faithful God!"

He was then chained to an iron stake; and while they were fastening the chain about his neck, he said, with a smiling countenance, "My Lord Jesus Christ was bound with a harder chain than this, for my sake; then why should I be ashamed of this old rusty one?"

As the faggots were piled around him, the Duke of Bavaria begged him to deny the Bible truths he had taught; but he answered, "No; I never preached any doctrine of an evil tendency, and what I taught with my lips I now seal with my blood!" and he added, "You are now going to burn a goose (the name Huss means goose), but in a century you will have a swan that you can neither roast or boil!"

Some think that this prophecy was fulfilled in Martin Luther, who had a swan in his coat of arms. As soon as the fire began to burn, Huss burst forth in a song of praise. His cheerful voice rose above the crackling of the burning wood and the noise of the great crowd which witnessed his triumphant death.

I felt it was worth a long journey to have the privilege of standing upon this spot where John Huss and, a year later, Jerome of Prague, suffered martyrdom.

He, too, was treated in much the same way as Huss. After he was condemned his enemies placed a long paper cap upon his head. Jerome said: "Jesus Christ, when He suffered death for me, did wear a crown of thorns upon his head; and I, for his sake, will wear this adorning of derision and blasphemy." When the executioner went behind him to set fire to the faggots, he said, "Come here and kindle it before my eyes; for, had I been afraid of it, I had not come here, having had so many opportunities to escape." He was a very strong man, and it was quite a long time before the flames put an end to his life, and he suffered dreadful agony. The last words he was heard to utter were these: "This soul in flames I offer, Christ, to Thee!"

While standing near the monument which marks this spot, my heart was deeply moved. Again and again Christ's words to Paul in 2 Cor. xii. 9 came to my mind, and these lines were forced upon me:—

MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE.

See that martyr near thee stand!
He has heard his Lord's command:
"Be thou faithful unto death,
I will note thy parting breath."
Thou of fear canst see no trace;
"All sufficient is my grace."

Higher still the faggots rise—
Flames are leaping toward the skies—
Fiercer still the words that fly,
Piercing him thus called to die.
Yet behold his smiling face—
"All sufficient is my grace."

Yes, this word it buoys him up,
While he drinks the dreadful cup;
Promised life, yet wrapped in flame,
Still he sings of Jesu's name;
Oh! what rapture in his face—
"All sufficient is my grace."

Standing near this sacred place,
Lord, I see thy smiling face:
Thou art saying, "Trust in Me.
Boundless is my grace to thee—
Though a martyr's death be thine,
Still remember thou art mine."

Lord, I hear thy loving call;
At thy feet again I fall;
Let sufficient grace abound,
Worthy then may I be found
E'en to suffer death for Thee,
Since, Lord, Thou hast died for me.

CHRIST BY THE SEASIDE.

Summer wavelets gently rippling
  O'er the shingle and the sand
Oft reminding us of Jesus,
  And his faithful fisher-band.
Near the coast their boat is anchored,
  Whilst the people throng the shore,
Listening to his holy teaching,
  Words that live for evermore.

To the distant hills of Judah,
  Streaked with hues of emerald green,
Jesus pointed; for the sower
  On those sunny slopes was seen.
Thus He showed them how his teaching
  Was like seed sown in the earth,
That the flowers and fruits of virtue
  In their hearts might spring to birth.

It was only sin that hindered
  Love's sweet buds and blossoms rare,
Fruits of meekness, truth and patience,
  Faith and hope that should be there.
Then He told them how the angels
  Would descend from heaven above,
Bearing wheat and fruits He cherished
  To his harvest home of love.

Yet, though Nature all around them
  Spoke his tenderness and skill,
And at his Divine commission,
  Angry winds and waves grew still,
They were groping in the darkness,
  Wandering midst doubt and fear,
Little thinking their Creator,
  Full of love and truth, was near.

But we have a deeper insight,
  By God's Spirit sent from heaven;
We are conscious that his mercies
  As sweet proofs of love are given.
Work is joy, and rest is peaceful,
  God is with us everywhere;
We're surrounded by his goodness,
  Truth and light, and loving care.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT MILDMAY.

EACH day during last week a morning service was held at 11 o'clock. They were well ttended by adults and children. Most of the atter were of the higher classes, who had come vith their parents, but there were also groups of ery poor children, who came because they liked o be there, having been present at the mass neetings of the children held in the Great Hall n the previous days. The singing from Gems f Praise has a great power in unifying the eelings of the mixed multitude that comes ogether, whilst the short, impressive prayers eem to gather up the desires of aching and urdened hearts and lay them before the Throne f Grace. Then follow words of Gospel truth—o elaborate essays, no exhaustive exposition of octrines; but in simple language Mr. Hammond peaks for instruction, for warning, for refreshnent, for blessing.

Several have borne testimony to the power of he Spirit of Truth working in their own souls ince the commencement of these services.

The vivid consciousness of a new power, a ew life in the soul, is an experience which every ne must realise for himself and herself. But hat it is a great reality is incontrovertible, for it rings with it a language of its own, and proclaims its own presence. Though the experience f one may differ from that of another, it is the ame life, the one Spirit pervading all and fulfillng the words of Christ, "That they may be ne, even as we are one."

The evening services were held in the great all. The children were crowding in by halfpast six o'clock. In anticipation of this, the umerous choir were in their places, the voices f the singers being led by both piano and organ. Ir. Hammond does not wait for any particular ime; when there are children to sing he is lways there to lead them in singing the heartstirring hymns which many of the children have lready learned.

Children do not weary as long as the affections re engaged, and when vivid objects are preented to their imagination by a few bold, raphic touches. Mr. Hammond possesses the power of the bold artist in creating a picture before the mind distinctly and rapidly. The bjects are always unmistakable, and they are mbodiments of those permanent truths which, when once clearly apprehended, are never obliteated; like cameos cut in stone, they last for ever.

A large number of ladies and gentlemen were also present, many having come to assist n the after-meetings, by having direct personal alk with individual children and young people who desire to know more for themselves of he great salvation and the Saviour of men. The belief is being recognised in the churches nd outside of them that the Church of Christ s not complete without the children. The wonder s that such recognition has come so late. The ime has come at last; let us take heed, and fulfil he behest of Jesus, "Feed My lambs."

It is the religion of the heart that unifies, and, without breaking down or obliterating differences f disposition, or of character, has the magic power to harmonise these differences, and thereby to preserve an endless variety of gifts and alents among men, all held together by the bonds of one pervasive and vitalising Spirit. It s this great heritage of sanctified affection which with the conversion of children will be dded to the churches. Then will the churches have power.

When Jesus of Nazareth rode into Jerusalem on a young ass through the crowds who thronged about Him, the voices of the children were heard the most distinctly above all the tumult of the multitude. They sang aloud the Hosannas, and that is one of the most touching parts of the whole narrative. Little did those children think as they were singing in the jubilant gladness of their hearts in honour of the lowly Jesus, whom they hailed as "King," that the part they enacted then would form an integral part of the Holy Scripture, in the record of Christ's triumphal entrance into the Holy City.

Our hearts are full of praise for the numbers of children and of Christian workers gathered in night by night. The wonder is, not, that some were restless—but that such a vast number, most of them of necessity so far from the speaker, were so orderly and quiet. The moment the first meeting was over, the second began, and deeply interesting was it to see so many pleading with, and praying with and for, the little ones. Of the results of these meetings a better idea will be formed by giving a few notes of the MORNING MEETINGS.

These were very informal and varied, hymns, short prayers, and counsels from Mr. Hammond and from various well-known men of God. The presence of the Holy Spirit was most manifest. We believe there are many, both old and young, who will look back to these morning meetings as the time of their second birth.

On Tuesday, and each following day, a portion of the meeting was devoted to praise.

Rapidly one after another rose to give thanks. We extract the following from our notes:—

A young man, for himself, that he had found Christ in these meetings. A clergyman, that this young man, his son, on going back from the meeting, had spoken to his brothers, and he trusted not without result. A lady, for two of her class now singing of Jesus. A worker, that he had been stirred up by these meetings to speak to some fifty children in Hyde Park, six of whom professed to give themselves to Christ. A clergyman's wife, for the professed conversion of all the boys in the choir. A lady, for two of her children and a servant; she asked prayer for the only unconverted one in the household.

Wednesday.—A teacher, for two little girls, who said they had come because they wished to be saved. "When?" "To-night." "Why?" "Oh! because we are not safe till we are saved." Afterwards they very simply thanked Jesus for having saved them. A lady, for her servant now trusting. For four little girls who were weeping on Monday night, and rejoicing last night. The leader of the choir, for the conversion of his little girl. A little boy gave thanks that he was saved yesterday, and Mr. Hammond prayed for him that he might become a missionary to the heathen.

A lady asked prayer for her class of "step" girls who were coming that night to the meeting. She explained that "step" girls went out to clean doorsteps. Mr. Hammond prayed they might take the three steps to heaven: "out of self, into Christ, into glory." A lady told how a child went home to her mother; and said, "I've given my heart to Jesus mother; you never go to church, won't you come to these meetings?" Another went home to "read the hymns to mother."

Friday Morning.—On testimony being asked for, as to results, the following were given in rapid succession:—

Mrs. Mathieson spoke to a group of four belonging to one family who had been all converted, but on different days this week; they seemed so happy together, and were hurrying away because "Mother would not like us to stay any longer."

A deaconess told of a mother of her district who brought her family on Wednesday, and went away rejoicing over three saved, aged twelve, ten, and seven. The seven-year old child was very bright next day, and quite understood he was now Christ's little soldier and servant. Mr. Storr had spoken to a young man, an apprentice, he believed he intelligently received the Lord Jesus as his Saviour. Here Mr. Hammond remarked, that it was his experience that the little ones, under circumstances like these, were not more liable to be deceived as to their conversion than grown persons. He believed ninety-five out of a hundred were genuine cases when they had been properly instructed in Christ's work for them and prayed with.

Mr. Peters, curate at St. Jude's, said he was asked to speak to five children. One of these, when first asked to come to the meetings, said, "I won't;" but afterwards, he said, "You see I'm one of you now." He was one of five Jewish boys who professed to find Christ.

A deaconess said two women came in when the first meeting was over. After half-an-hour's conversation one accepted the Lord.

Another said, "I asked prayer for a class of 'step' girls who promised to come on Wednesday. However, as the hour drew near, they got frightened. Very late six came in, too late to hear any of the addresses. Two of these, it is believed, accepted Christ. Will you pray for the rest?" A lady said, "I had taken a very young girl into my house as servant, she being in special circumstances of danger, and I trembled as to whether I did right. She came on Monday night, and was saved, and she said to her fellow servants, 'I never knew it was such a simple thing.' She has been very bright ever since."

A gentleman, who had come 270 miles to attend this meeting, told how he had read about Mr. Hammond's meetings till he longed to be present at them; so he went to Sheffield last spring. He intended to sit in a back seat, but Mr. Hammond did not believe in back seats, and brought him up to work. He spoke to several little children, who gave themselves to Jesus. Next day he met them, and asked, "Are you a Christian?" "Yes; don't you remember we did it last night?" Another day, said he, Mr. Hammond sent me into the gallery to speak to twenty. I never saw such a sight in my life: people all weeping, bathed in tears. I could only fall on my knees, and pray with them. I went to Sheffield that I might be helped to preach, and I was blessed; I learnt a new way of preaching: just lifting up Christ; and I am expecting that these meetings will be the means of a revival breaking out somewhere else.

Mr. Spiers said he had given his time last night to a school of boys from St. John's Church, who had been brought by their clergyman for the first time. He believed numbers of them accepted the Saviour. Thus for the week evening gatherings have ranged from 2000 to 2500, and large numbers of all ages have professed conversion. On the Sabbath evenings about 3500 were present, the hall being considerably more than filled.

Mr. Josiah Spiers and many leading members of the Children's Special Service Mission have rendered unflagging assistance, with most gratifying results. Large numbers of the leaflets published by the Mission have been distributed to the children; also some thousands of copies of Good News, from the Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling. Ellis.

MR. WOOKEY AT BRISTOL.

A LARGELY attended meeting of men, under the auspices of the Bristol Rescue Aid Society, was held last Wednesday evening at the great Association Hall, St. James' Square, to listen to the first of a series of addresses by Mr. James B. Wookey, on "Personal and Public Morality." The Rev. Talbot Greaves presided, and was supported by a large number of the leading clergy and Nonconformist ministers, magistrates, and influential citizens. Mr. Wookey, in an earnest and eloquent address, denounced in the most scathing terms the let-alone principle adopted by the Government for so many years. The announcement that it was thought desirable to oppose the late Home Secretary and others who had shown themselves to be unfavourable to the raising of the age of protection to the daughters of the poor at the next election, to prevent their being returned to the new Parliament, was loudly cheered.

On the names of Mr. Stead and Mr. B. Booth being mentioned, the enthusiasm was immense. Mr. Wookey declared the Government had shown plainly whose side they were on, but the friends of purity had nothing to fear. The great heart of England was or soon would be on their side, and with the help of God, those who had been toiling long years will live to see the day dawn when the infamous traffic in English, Scotch, and Irish girls would be a thing of the past.

ERRATUM.—The name of "Mrs. M. B. Tugalls," mentioned in our last issue as connected with the American Baptist Mission in Burmah should have been Mrs. Ingalls.

DUNDEE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

THIS Annual Conference was held on Tuesday, 15th ult., and the two following days, when very rich blessing was received both by believers and by the unsaved. Accordingly we are led to repeat the words of the disciples, "Did not our heart burn within us while He talked with us by the way, and while He opened to us the Scriptures ?"

The subjects for the three days were: (1) Christ for us—our Justification ; (2) Christ in us—our Sanctification ; (3) Christ with us—our Power for service.

TUESDAY.

Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, in presiding, said: Let these gatherings be landmarks in our Christian life. If we are to profit by such meetings we must seriously aim at getting a deeper sense of our responsibility, and at making a distinct advance in the service of God.

After prayer and praise, Dr. Baxter, Blairgowrie, in an address of great clearness and fervour, set forth the cardinal truth of the Gospel as expressed in the words "Christ for us." Christ as our substitute obeyed the Law ; charged with our responsibilities, He fully met them. Christian people frequently cherish a legal spirit, thinking after a time of declension to regain their standing by their own doings. This is only a sincere obedience, whereas we stand upon a perfect obedience.

Rev. Edward Brailsford, Blairgowrie, gave a telling address on the same subject. Of the subjects for the three days, "Christ for us" is fundamental. When did He begin to be for us ? He was foreordained for our salvation before the foundation of the world. Three points in his work as our substitute are his Incarnation, his Death, and his Exaltation.

In the afternoon a conversational meeting was held on the subject—"How may the way of salvation be put clearly before inquirers?"

Rev. J. Mackay, Glasgow, opened with an address of much interest, and was followed by Mr. McPherson, Mr. Moodie, Soldier-Evangelist, and a number of local ministers and Christian workers. The chief points brought out were: (1) Let the inquirer understand that he is brought face to face with God—to transact business for eternity with Him, and that his only authority and guide is the written Word. (2) What is the inquirer ? The world has an opinion of him. The Church has an opinion of him. He has an opinion of himself. These are of no value. God, in his Word, speaks with an authority, and says that he is a sinner. He must not make an exception of himself in any way, e.g., that he is too great a sinner to be saved, or that his sins are so trivial that he can do without Christ, or that he is not sufficiently anxious or sufficiently convicted of sin. Let him believe the Word of God—that he is a sinner, lost and undone, instantly needing salvation. (3) God says Christ is an abiding and an all-sufficient Saviour, and that simple acceptance of Christ on the warrant of God's Word certainly brings salvation.

WEDNESDAY.

Mr. J. Campbell White, Glasgow, presided in the morning, and, in opening the subject, "Christ in us," said: Many are ready to be satisfied with pardon without seeking victory over sin and power for service. The principle of sin is not eradicated, but its power is destroyed. Sin no longer is the ruling power. Some Christians have not liberty and power, because they have not realised Christ as dwelling in them.

Rev. A. T. Donald, Glasgow, said: Let us intelligently mark how Christ dwelling in us must necessarily make us holy. (1) We have the mind of Christ, 1 Cor. ii. 16. If we practically let the mind of Christ be ours we cannot fail to be holy. (2) We have the will of Christ, Heb. x. 10. Every believer has a Gethsemane. What a happy triumph, when, after a mighty conflict, we are enabled to make a total surrender, and say "Not my will but thine be done."

Rev. Dr. Black, Inverness, then gave a very helpful address, dwelling largely upon Gal. ii. 20. The body is the battle-field upon which the great conflict with sin is fought. "Christ dwelleth in me." What a surprising, what a comforting truth ! Then the unselfish, the pure life, the life of devotion to the Father, and of kindness and grace to men, which Christ loved, will be manifested and reproduced in us.

In the afternoon fully a thousand people were assembled to learn the mind of God on "The Holiness of Salvation." In an able opening address, Mr. Buchanan Blake, said that Christianity was established to deliver man from the dominion and degradation of sin. In India, where he laboured for eight years, it was a common saying in Benares, the holy city of the Hindus, that the holiest spot was the most impure, showing that their false religion is utterly impotent for good. Mr. Mackay, Mr. Glenny (Kabyle Mission), Mr. G. Clarke (Railway Mission), and others spoke on this most important subject, pointing out that hearty consecration of the body, the mind, and the soul to God, which is our duty and privilege, is to be secured through faith and prayer, ever remembering that Christ dwells in us.

THURSDAY.

The concluding meetings of the Conference deepened in interest. Provost Swan, Kirkcaldy, presided and introduced Mr. G. Muller; Bristol, who addressed the large gathering on the subject of "Christ with us." He spoke in his usual genial, kindly way, pouring forth his soul in fervent adoration and in warm admiration of the love of God. He said: All who can, on Scriptural grounds, say Christ is for me, are warranted to say Christ is with me. This brings Heaven's joys now into the heart. Christ is a real presence with us, in conflict with evil, in preaching the Gospel, and in all service, in reading and understanding the Scriptures, in bodily affliction, in family affairs, and in business. Many difficulties arise here, as in the training of children and in dealing with servants and employés. Some may say it would be childish to depend upon the presence of Christ with us in dealing with these difficulties. I have, for more than fifty years, trusted Christ in all these things, and in hundreds and thousands of instances I have received the help I needed. We live in difficult times. Let us bring Christ into the firm, and conduct business for the glory of God, and give of our prosperity to the poor and to advance the cause of Christ, and we shall not fail to have prosperity.

Rev. James Stevenson, Leith, said: Christ with us is a real presence. It is as real as the existence of sin in the world. He is with us in all the sympathy and grace of his mediatorship. Believers can speak of special times of manifestation of the Lord's presence with them—e.g., on the day of conversion, on the day of hearty and unreserved consecration, when we signed our covenant engagement to be the Lord's. It is good to do this with pen and ink, to read it, and often to renew it, as Matthew Henry frequently did. Day by day let us keep before our minds this glorious truth.

The afternoon was devoted to missionary addresses.

Mr. Glenny gave an interesting account of the Mission to the Berbers in the North of Africa. With the exception of two missionaries to the Jews, no mission work was carried on in Morocco, Algeria, Tripoli, and the Sahara, until four years ago. The people of these lands are Mohammedans, yet they heartily welcome the missionaries. They give a striking testimony to the Gospel. They look upon their own religion as corrupt, but regard Christianity as holy. Hence the lives of the missionaries are perfectly safe.

Mr. George Clarke followed, with a sketch of the Railway Mission. Three and a half years ago he went to a meeting of railway-men in London. When pressed to speak, he could only, with stammering lips, tell of the love of God to lost men. One man in the meeting, who had been spending fifteen shillings a week in drink, was converted, and became a most successful worker for Christ. Mr. Clarke engaged a large hall for a meeting, but was sorely disappointed, as only six men came to it. His faith, however, was soon rewarded, for now there are 155 missions to railway-men in various parts of the country. Soon he started a publication—The Railway Signal—and from a small beginning it has now reached a monthly issue of 26,000 copies.

Mr. Müller spoke of his well-known work, which began on a very small scale in 1834, but now, by the blessing of God, has assumed such large proportions. He has at present thirty-nine day-schools, forty-three Sunday-schools, and three adult schools. Several of these are in Spain, and in various parts of the world. They have contained altogether 100,000 souls, and there have been 7160 orphans in his Homes.

Each evening, at 7.30, an evangelistic service was held. Earnest, searching, and loving addresses were delivered by Mr. Mackay, Mr. Brailsford, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Müller, Mr. Donald, Dr. Black, Mr. Stevenson, and Mr. James Balfour. Many anxious souls were conversed with, and not a few professed to receive Christ. It has been a most profitable season, a time of feeding and of quickening, reminding us of 2 Sam. xxiii. 4—"And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain."

SAILORS ENJOYING THEMSELVES.

"I WAS a stranger, and ye took me in," was again most effectively illustrated at the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway, last Thursday evening. The Christian ladies and gentlemen, who so lovingly care for seafaring men who come to the Thames, had a social gathering to which about 200 had been invited. It would have cheered the hearts of all interested in "Rests" to hear the testimony of the sailors as to their value.

I was, said a fine, fresh-looking young fellow, going along this highway some two years ago half drunk and half naked, when someone invited me into this building, and I heard words that melted my heart and led me to trust the Lord Jesus Christ. Another said, I was enticed to go into the Rest, at Park-lane, Liverpool, by a dear lady ; I was then a Roman Catholic, and knew nothing of Christ, but soon found He was my Saviour. Another sailor, who had gone to sea with his ship that morning, left a letter behind him to the lady from whose lips he had, as he said, heard the Gospel which had touched his heart for the first time. He described in this letter how he had been well educated by his parents, but had gone from bad to worse, until, through crime committed, he had fled from his own country. He said, "If the religion of Christ be true, I am lost," and begged the lady to write to him at the port to which his ship was bound.

This work is carried on entirely by volunteers, and at a very small cost. Mr. T. J. Isaac, Honorary Secretary, may be communicated with at the Rest, 163, Ratcliff-highway, E., by any wishing to have a share in the work.

THE DEAF AND DUMB.—The British Christian Mission to the Deaf and Dumb, founded last year, continues its beneficent work among the poor mutes of Bristol. No one will doubt the necessity for such an enterprise who reads that "even in our little circle of deaf mutes strong drink and kindred evils have had their victims." The Report testifies to good results, and appeals for support on the ground of the unsectarian character of the mission, and the obvious need of its existence. Rev. J. Mayers, pastor of the City-road Baptist Church, is the Secretary.

MRS. HILTON'S CRÊCHE.—The Crêche Annual just published, contains facts, anecdotes, and report of the fourteenth year's work. The writer says: "How gladly would we, were it possible, convey to our subscribers and friends an idea of the real joy and comfort they enable us to dispense to the desolate and sorrowing men and women around us." The Crêche and Infirmary, the Orphan Home, and the Training and Convalescent Home, are each centres of benevolent enterprise, and will be seen by readers of the report to be prospering. It may be obtained of Mrs. Hilton, Langveld House, Burdett-road, Limehouse, E.

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.

IMMEDIATELY on arriving in Figueras, a few miles from the French frontier, we became forcibly aware that we had reached the cholera-stricken land. Our baggage was taken from us, and fumigated for some hours in a large room. From the leading men of the town we obtained information as to the most needy cases among the refugees, who had come from various parts to escape the cholera. They, being unable to find employment, were destitute of daily food. We also visited the poorest parts of the town, and in two days distributed 342 tickets, which consisted of Mrs. Grimké's attractive Gospel text cards, with stamped numbers on the back. These texts excited much curiosity, and those who could not read, supposing the words to be an advertisement regarding the time or place for receiving relief, would not rest till they had been read to them. Since then hundreds more have been distributed, and thus God's word has reached very many for the first time. May we not claim the promise: "It shall not return unto Me void." Every Saturday these destitute people assembled in our Mission Hall, and whilst taking their seats our school children sung bright hymns. Pastor Rodriguez earnestly and clearly preaches the Gospel, and is listened to with attention and respect, though all present are Roman Catholics.

On looking at the strange assemblage of poor, blind, lame, and aged folk, whose sunburnt faces told of years of toil, we could enter somewhat into the Master's feeling of "compassion for the multitude," who are indeed "as sheep without a shepherd." At the close each one comes up in turn, presents the ticket, and receives rice, beans, and bread, to last for a week, with such expressions of gratitude as "God give you long life and glory," "A thousand thanks," "God reward you." We only wish that the kind contributors could be present to receive the thanks we now hasten to send.

"Succour.—At ten o'clock on Saturday morning, at the Protestant Chapel in the New-street, a goodly number of rations of bread, rice, and beans were distributed to the destitute, and every Saturday, at the same hour, the same will take place so long as the special circumstances of need shall call forth compassionate help."

Small towns and villages around Figueras, which had hitherto escaped the cholera, have this month been attacked, but not extensively. On hearing of its outbreak the pastor and his brother visited the infected places, and, whilst I am writing, they are on a similar errand of mercy. In Escala there has been and is much distress. When visiting San Pedro Pescador, a poor widow, to whom relief was given, repeatedly kissed the donor's hands in token of gratitude for the unexpected and much, needed help.

Last Tuesday-week, at 9 p.m., our schoolmaster, from Villabertran, came hurrying to tell us that two persons had died suddenly, and that one of the converts was dangerously ill. Immediately Pastor Rodriguez went off in a tartana (cart) to visit the sick one. He found her in great pain, with vomiting and diarrhœa, and, giving her thirty drops of chlorodyne, told her husband to take measures to induce rapid perspiration.

The pastor then offered prayer that the remedies might be blessed. Before leaving the poor woman said that the pain was somewhat relieved. Great was her gratitude as she thanked him, adding, "You actually took the trouble to come at this late hour, only for me!" She slept soon, and is now, we are thankful to say, recovering.

Wishing to make the most of the relief fund entrusted to us, we have sent money or medicines according to the need, to be distributed by Christian workers in other provinces, including Huelva, Reus, Barcelona, Granada, Saragossa, and Valencia. From the latter place, where the cholera has been carrying off thousands, come distressing accounts of numbers of little uncared-for orphans wandering about the streets, living on scraps of food and fruit given by kind-hearted people. Surely it is not the will of our Father in Heaven "that one of these little ones should perish." Who will send us help to rescue them? Pastor Rodriguez is now in communication with a friend, one of the Consuls, and other gentlemen in Valencia, as to the prevailing distress, preparatory to going there himself.

Autumn is here; stern winter will soon follow, and, owing to the general depression, there will be much more distress. We therefore appeal earnestly for the orphans, that Christian friends will send us in time means to enable us to gather the forlorn little ones into the shelter of a happy, Christian home. All contributions should be sent to Colonel Baynes, 87, Elgin Crescent, Notting-hill, London, W.; or to the office of The Christian. We are much indebted to Dr. Kidd and Dr. James for kind gifts of camphor and chlorodyne. Later on, a balance-sheet giving details of expenditure of the relief fund entrusted to us will be sent to each kind contributor. Meantime, will they not rejoice to know that they have "delivered the poor that cried, the fatherless, and him that had none to help him, and caused the widow's heart to sing for joy."

Yours in the Master's service of love,
Emily Lopez Rodriguez.

YOUNG MEN AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

LAST Friday evening a meeting was held at 186, Aldersgate-street, to extend foreign missionary work. The lecture hall was filled with an enthusiastic audience, composed mostly of young men. M. H. Hodder, Esq. presided.

After the opening prayer by Mr. Milne, the Chairman remarked that he was especially pleased to be present to hear the words of friends connected with foreign missions from all parts of the world, who had been doing service, and who were going to do service as missionaries. He was thankful that there was such interest taken in foreign mission work by the young men of the Y.M.C.A.

Rev. J. Piper, a returned missionary from Japan, stated that he and his wife had worked together for six years in Hong Kong. They went out to Japan in 1874, and after some difficulty a house was found, or, as he humorously put it, "a building with a roof on." The room was twelve feet square, and just a little higher than himself. Two and a half years were spent learning the language, and becoming familiar with the people. A church was built to accommodate 250 persons, and a school to hold 60 children, which was nearly full when they left Japan seven years after, and there was a congregation of fifty Christians. He found the circulation of literature a great help. In 1878 he wrote a tract, and circulated 10,000 a year, as the people were fond of reading. A man came sixty miles to hear the word through reading a tract. There are now 3000 Christians where there was not one before.

Mrs. Piper stated that, ever since she had been seven years old, she had longed to be one of God's missionaries. She mentioned how she had won the women by speaking to the children. "One woman wanted to see our baby; she had seen English babies, but had never touched one; would it cry like her own? She asked, 'What would you do if this little baby were to die?' I said, 'I do not know what I should do. I think my heart would break; but we have a hope that you have not. If it were taken away, and its precious soul should leave the body, you would have no hope, but I should. I should meet the little one in our heaven!' I then showed her the garden, and told her that God sent the sun and the rain upon it, and I thanked Him for it, but He also sent it upon the beautiful garden opposite, belonging to a rich man who never thanked Him. I date her conversion from that time. When I started a Bible-class, I was greatly afraid that I should not make myself understood, but the same woman said, 'I am sure God will bless this meeting, for my husband and I have been praying since dinner. I am sure if you tell them about the sunshine and the rain falling upon the just and the unjust they cannot help believing in God!' and God did bless it; three souls were saved."

After another hymn, Rev. T. Walker, M.A., of St. James', Holloway, appointed to the mission at Tinnevelly, South India, addressed the meeting. This mission, with ten thousand native Christians connected with the C. M. S., had only one white missionary, the work resting upon the native clergymen, of whom there are sixty. He believed that they were on the eve of a great missionary epoch. There were many young men in London, at the present time, who were asking "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" There is one danger to be avoided—an idea of romance about missionary work. There is only one motto which we should adopt: "The love of Christ constraineth us." A missionary must be a good servant, a good soldier, and a good steward. To be a good servant he must be willing to go anywhere and everywhere in the service of his Master; to be a good soldier he must be able to endure hardship for his Captain, the Lord Jesus Christ; to be a good steward he must see that his Master's provision and treasure are properly administered. God's house is a large one; we are his stewards, and must give our fellow-servants their meat in due season He asked prayer for those missionaries who were abroad, that God would hasten the time when the Gospel would be proclaimed to all nations. He thanked God for the privilege of belonging to the C.M.S. to be a missionary amongst his own countrymen.

Mr. Samuel W. Sutton, M.D., who had been appointed to commence a Medical Mission at Quetta, hoped that the enthusiasm which they had shown would not drop when they got home; they should read about the mission work, and pray in a methodical way for its continued success. Some people said there was nothing about medical missions in the Bible, but did not Christ say, "Heal the sick, and preach the Gospel"?

Mr. Churcher, from Tangiers, and Mr. Eugene Stock also took part in the meeting.

INDIA'S INNOCENTS.

WOULD that the awful social revelations to which The Christian has given a far-reaching voice had no parallel in India! But those of us who have taken part in some midnight mission in a great city of this land know more than an indignant pen may now tell.

But the British public may help to save many of India's daughters from harm by placing them in Mrs. Hard's Boarding School, at Khandwa, in the Central Provinces, a central point for the whole country. The door is open to every class with equal maternal regard, Europeans, East Indians, Natives. Here they are taught English and a Native language, not only to receive the truth, but to prepare for usefulness in the home, as teachers, for Zenana work, as Bible readers, in such ministry of word and deed as God may appoint. Many poor and worthy girls are applying to come. If not permitted to do so, they are exposed to many temptations.

The institution is a development of William Taylor's self-supporting mission in India. References: Messrs. Dickeson and Stewart, 4, Mansion House Buildings, Queen Victoria-st.; W. J. Van Sommer, Esq., Redhill, Surrey.

VICTORIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

OWING to a variety of malign circumstances Victoria bids fair to become a "shocking example" to her happier neighbours. In most of the colonies the erratic proceedings of our Government have elicited strong adverse comment, and now New Zealand takes up its parable against us. We are told by the most vigorous and successful of its weekly journals, the N.Z.M. Times, that "the colony of Victoria is winning an unenviable notoriety among all English-speaking communities by the hostility of the State authorities to the Christian religion. We are aware that this is a hard saying; but scarcely a week now passes without fresh evidence being tendered in support of such an allegation." After pungently referring to our expurgation of the State-school books of all religion save a thin Deism; to the reprimand administered by the Education Department to a teacher for the crime of starting a tune during voluntary instruction of the children; to the recent increase of our Sunday railway traffic; to the double-barrelled fusilade against Christianity by Judges Higinbotham and Williams; to the Dowie persecution; to the interference of the police with Mr. Davies, M.A., of Caulfield; and to the annoying patience exercised by the Government towards the Liberator and its editor of Sunday entertainment fame, our contemporary may well congratulate itself that New Zealand has no such record of official wrong-headedness. We regret, however, that Victoria should be subjected to the humiliation of such unfavourable contrasts, and venture to express the hope that the prevailing evil policy will speedily undergo a radical and permanent change.—Southern Cross.

Notes and Comments.

WE are deeply grieved to state that the truly noble and saintly Earl of Shaftesbury lies at Folkestone in a very precarious state. Much prayer is being made that, if it be the will of God, he may yet be spared awhile to the nation which he has probably done more to benefit than any other living man.

The discussion respecting the new star that has appeared in what is termed the Andromeda Nebula teaches little more at present than that even astronomical science has been far too confident. There is no satisfactory evidence that this star is a globe in process of formation, or a world in conflagration. This, however, is apparent: Signs in the heavens indicate that the present order of things may be changed when men look not for it, and that the powers of heaven shall be shaken. On all hands the word comes to hasten the day of Christ's kingdom, so that there may be a gathering out of the Gentiles of a people for the Lord's name.

We observe from the columns of The Nonconformist and Independent that a serious correspondence is going on respecting the refusal of a Congregational Association in the West of England to admit a young minister to its fraternity. We gather, from letters that appeared in the above journal for the 17th ult., that doctrinal differences are the points of dispute. The precise view of the proper Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ has not been "fully formulated." Evangelical Protestantism cannot hold together without the corner-stone of this vital doctrine, and it may be thought nothing short of dishonest for a man to enter as a teacher an orthodox denomination who has not made up his mind about it.

Between the Authorised and Revised Versions of Rom. x. 9, there is a change which has not been sufficiently noticed. In relation to the belief of the heart, whereby a man is saved, the former reads, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus;" but the latter makes it "Jesus as Lord." From the margin we learn that some ancient authorities give it, "If thou shalt confess the word with thy mouth that Jesus is Lord." To confess the Lord Jesus may not to some mean much, but to confess the risen Jesus as Lord in a Divine sense, and to accept with the heart all the new life of loyalty that the belief carries, is a much more definite and fuller statement. And this was "the word" the Apostles taught.

Open-air Harvest Thanksgiving Services will (D.V.) be held in Hyde Park on next and the following Sunday, October 4 and 11, at 3 p.m., in recognition of the blessings of the harvest which the Father of all mercies has so abundantly bestowed. The meetings will be addressed by well-known speakers, and a choir of a hundred voices will attend.

One of the conferences of this month is that of the Christian Women's Union at Clapham. Among the subjects for the three days are Woman's Services at Home and Abroad, Faith Missions, Rescue, Penitentiary, and Hospital Work, and Bible Classes. Our warm sympathies are given to such an excellent programme. The age is being benefitted beyond measure by the enthusiasm, the fervour of sympathy, the impulse, and the emotion, which Christian women are bringing to bear on vital social problems.

Nothing could be more appropriate, as we enter on a month unusually marked by the most important of congresses and conferences, than that the Lord's "remembrancers" should pray day by day that blessed and adequate results may come from these manifold deliberations.

A few years since Romanists and Ritualists were hand in hand, busily engaged in tracing their relationship and family resemblances, and some of the leading organs of the latter party even advocated disestablishment as the one thing needful. To-day, however, we have changed all that, and it is somewhat difficult to discover why. Can it be that the Ritualists have come to recognise the fact, evident to everyone else long ago, that if they had to depend entirely upon voluntary support they would be utterly unable to erect their altars in the hundreds of places which they now take possession of as clergymen of the Established Church? Or is it that they have found out by experience the truth of the old axiom that Rome takes everything and gives nothing?

Speaking of secessions to Rome, the leading Ritualistic paper says openly that sentimentalism had an enormous influence in promoting them, "when the freak was most in fashion," and asserts that "much of what is intellectually and morally feeblest in the Roman Catholic system is also capable of looking graceful and romantic, and of attracting people who care more for having their emotions stimulated than for the healthiness of the stimulus itself." This no doubt is very true, but it is just what acute observers have, for years back, been saying of that which is feeble in the Ritualistic movement.

The writer goes a little further, however, and alludes to "the cultus of the Blessed Virgin" as having a strong attraction for hysterical and ill-balanced minds, but being without any basis except "sheer sentimentalism, though its advocates and especially those who wish to see it imported into the Church of England, try to persuade others, and perhaps themselves too, that their aim is to honour the Son by honouring the Mother."

It certainly is a sign of changed times to find in the journal in question such a leading article, ending as it does with a quotation from the celebrated Father Curci, to the effect that devotion to Christ, and even mention of Him, has virtually disappeared from popular devotions in Italy and from average sermons, "though both are crammed full of Madonnas of all sorts."

The Hymnal used by the High Church party, however, has some verses which seem to verge very closely upon the cultus, one hymn headed "For the Blessed Virgin Mary," beginning—

"Shall we not love thee, Mother dear?"

and containing the following:—

"And as He loves thee, Mother dear,
We, too, will love thee well;
And to his glory, year by year,
Thy joy and honour tell."

Our young friends, and some older ones too, must not suppose that everything done in the name of Temperance is necessarily associated with holiness and righteousness. There are certain halls, central and uncentral, where, under the name of Temperance, entertainments and amusements are provided little better than those of low-class theatres and music-halls.

At a penny for admission the pit is crowded with an audience composed largely of such lads and lasses as are in the habit of frequenting the above places. Here are seen women dressed in indelicate theatrical garb, and whose gestures are indecent and lewd. The songs sung, as well as the remarks interspersed, are, many of them, brimful of innuendo and double entendre, suggestive and immoral.

The fact that intoxicants are not sold on the premises may be viewed by some as probably tending to diminish the amount of evil; but, on the other hand, many respectable and pure young persons of both sexes are, doubtless, thereby led for the first time into an impure and demoralising atmosphere, who would never enter such a place but for its misleading association with non-intoxicants and the word Temperance.

As a supplement to The King's Highway, has been published a full report of the Southport Convention (Woolmer, 6d.). It contains copious reports of all the addresses delivered (many of them full of power and spiritual profit), revised in each case by the speakers.

We are pleased to receive the following good tidings of our friends Rev. and Mrs. J. Mountain, who are labouring in New South Wales:—

> You will be pleased to learn that God has opened to us a wide door in the Congregational Churches of this colony, and that He is bestowing signal blessing upon our labours. We are devoting ourselves to purely spiritual work, as Temperance work has been and is still largely attended to. Both ministers and laity are showing us much sympathy, and are availing themselves of our help. We are now in our seventh mission since we arrived, four months ago. Other missions are opening up; but, as this is the best time for Queensland, and we are cordially invited there, our committee of advice recommend our accepting the invitation. We, therefore, sail for Brisbane on August 4, for two or three months' work.

The new Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin seems to take a very broad view of the fourth commandment. After presiding at High Mass on Sunday week, at a village church in Wicklow, an address was presented to him in the chapel, the Archbishop being "received with loud applause," and Dr. Walsh did not consider it out of keeping with the day and the place to give a long political address to the congregation on the selection of candidates for parliamentary honours. In the Cathedral, Dublin, at a later hour in the day, other addresses were presented and "his Grace ascended the pulpit and replied." Afterwards Dr. Walsh drove to a village five miles from the city, his carriage "being preceded by a band playing, and a large crowd," and there, a platform having been erected for the occasion in the grounds of the Catholic chapel, another address was presented, his Grace making only a short speech in reply, asking to be excused on account of the fatiguing day he had spent, but afterwards giving the kneeling crowd the episcopal blessing. If this is a sample of an Archbishop's Sabbath day one cannot wonder at the unlettered peasant spending Sunday after Mass at noisy League meetings.

The rapid growth of Methodism during the period between the formation of the "Holy Club" at Oxford in 1729 and the death of John Wesley in 1791—there being 77,000 members of the Methodist Society when Wesley died—is not more remarkable than is the steady increase to-day. According to the Minutes of Conference just published, there are now in Great Britain 413,163 Wesleyan members, exclusive of 80,000 "on trial for church membership," and members of Junior Society classes, the increase for 1884 being 2967. In Ireland there are nearly 25,000 church members, an increase of 105 over 1884. Altogether, at home and abroad, the members number 631,799, and the ministers 2787.

John Wesley himself was by no means inclined to take steps to bridge over the gulf between the exposition of the Scriptures by laymen and preaching, and he was caused much anxiety when one of his "lay helpers" took to preaching. Hurrying from Bristol to London to interfere in the matter, he was warned by his saintly mother: "Take care what you do with respect to that young man, for he is as surely called to preach as you are," and, after taking Mrs. Wesley's advice to "examine the fruits" of the layman's preaching, the great leader sanctioned the new departure. To-day there are 14,721 of these accredited Wesleyan lay, or local, preachers.

A London publisher has sent out a volume of "First Lessons in Christianity." The Christianity which is inculcated in the volume is, however, based upon another foundation than that of the New Testament, and the writer boldly affirms that "instruments of tradition," such as "the writings of the saints, doctors, fathers, theologians, and historians of the Church," are "certainly true and of Apostolical authority," though they be not found in Scripture. And upon such testimony the Romanist writer teaches that "the Mother of God was assumed, both body and soul, into heaven."

Some recent police prosecutions in Glasgow have revealed the existence of a horrible and revolting trade in a compound of spirits of wine and naphtha, originally intended for the use of painters and French polishers, but now purchased for consumption by the depraved of both sexes. The destructive drink is aptly named "finish," and it is stated that not only will a couple of twopenny glasses of it produce intoxication, but that a larger quantity will prove fatal. The witnesses declared that in one druggist's shop where the mixture was sold, the business "was as big as a good-going public-house on a Sunday night."

The account given of a den in which a number of women were suffering from the effects of indulgence in the vile compound was intensely disgusting, and it is almost incredible that there are people vile enough to heap up riches obtained at the cost of the bodies and souls of the poor wretches whose vices they encourage and feed.

We believe it is not generally known by our readers that, at the Convention recently held in Keswick, it was resolved that a petition should be sent from thence to Parliament, asking for the parents' power over daughters to be extended to the age of eighteen years. Mr. Thomas Frank Southam, a medical student in the University of Edinburgh, proposed as an amendment that the age should be extended to twenty-one years. The amendment was not put to the vote, or doubtless it would have been unanimously carried. We shall be pleased to hear of other students in the same profession showing a similar spirit.

In glancing over the list of preachers for Sunday in one of the Saturday daily papers, it was significant to notice that at the end of the list was a series of announcements of meetings to be held in connection with Secularists and kindred societies. The number of these was in excess of the number of Gospel meetings announced to be held in mission halls throughout London. Might it not be well for those in charge of important central missions to keep them permanently in this Saturday advertisement?

Can anything be done to bring before the notice of the great Atlantic steamship companies that the habit of leaving the ports of Liverpool and New York on a Saturday, practically shuts out all possibility of the crews ever being able to attend a Sunday service on shore? The arrival of the fast steamers takes place on the Sunday or Monday, and it is, therefore, no marvel that religion should have but little, if any, hold on the minds of officers or crew.

It will interest our readers to know that the important paper on "The Female Labour Market," in our issue of September 17, was by the author of "Ragged Homes, and How to Mend Them," a book now out of print, but which pioneered the way to the present attention to the dwellings of the poor.

Mr. Stanley Smith writes from China:—"Mighty times are coming, I believe. 'They shall come from the Land of Sinim.' China only needs a band of men and women living near to God—people of prayer, and filled with the Holy Ghost."

This is the need in England as well as China; indeed, it is the only need in order that the last command of Jesus may be fulfilled, "Preach the Gospel to every creature." Mr. Aitken at his farewell meeting on Friday thanked God for "these wondrous days in which God's people are waking up from the sleep of centuries to a deeper sense of the depravity of sin. What we want is more of God: Christ looking through our eyes and speaking through our lips. Is not each child of God entitled to aspire after the blessing, yea, bound to obey the command, 'Be filled with the Spirit—filled with all the fulness of God.' When all with one heart and one soul seek this, fulness of blessing shall flood the land."

This is the subject of William Arthur's "Tongue of Fire," and of Griffith John's "Spiritual Power for Missionary Work." And this is the purpose of the many Christian conferences which are being held in England, Scotland, and Ireland, in America, and in many parts of the world. When they who fear the Lord and think upon his name are thus found speaking often one to another, acknowledging the need of the Holy Spirit, and stirring up themselves and one another to take hold on God for the promised power of his outpoured Spirit, surely the blessing must be near at hand—a blessing poured out from opened windows of heaven, which there shall not be room enough to receive.

Only let the tithes be brought into the storehouse, whether these consist of fasting and prayer, of praise and thanksgiving, of alms to the needy, or offerings cast into the treasury as the Lord hath prospered; and God will rebuke the devourer for our sakes, and the Gospel shall be preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and great multitudes shall be added to the Lord.

And there is an increasing need. There is no doubt that the vice and crime in high places and in low, recently revealed, the unwillingness to legislate in the interests of purity, except as demanded by the people, and the evident bitterness of judges, magistrates, and public prosecutors, against those who have forced the hand of Government, have combined to encourage vice and to embolden criminals. God in his great goodness has brought the evil to the surface, instead of permitting it to fester beneath unheeded and unseen; and nothing but the power of God the Holy Spirit can enable his people to fight the good fight which lies before us.

Sir,—In reading your issue of Sept. 17, I find a startling quotation from The Daily News, that fifty years ago a Dr. Maclean evicted in a single week 750 out of a population of 1000, inhabiting a certain Shetland island, and turned it into a deer forest.

I have been ten years in the Shetland Islands, and it is only now I ever heard of such a story, and the first time that I hear there is a single deer in the whole group. Unless the word "Shetland Isles" is a clerical error for "the Hebrides," I have no hesitation in saying there is no foundation whatever for the story.—I am, yours truly,

P. H. Russell.

MR. AITKEN'S VISIT TO AMERICA.—Rev. James Stephens is to accompany Mr. Aitken on his American missions. Their work in New York will be part of the general mission there, in which about twenty of the Episcopalian Churches will take part. There is every probability of Rev. G. W. Walpole Warren (another member of the Church Parochial Mission) being the missioner at Trinity Church, Madison Avenue, one of the most important churches in that city. Mrs. Crouch and Miss Salome Parker will also accompany them, and will address meetings of women, and take part in the after-meetings. Mr. Aitken's engagements are as follow: Quiet Days for Clergy at Garrison, Oct. 14—16; Mission at Newburgh, Oct. 17—30 (Rev. O. Applegate, rector); Mission at Brooklyn, Oct. 31—Nov. 13 (Rev. G. R. Van de Water, rector); Mission at Newark, Nov. 14—25 (Rev. J. S. Reed, rector); Mission at St. George's New York, Nov. 28 (Rev. W. Rainsford); Clergy Quiet Days and Missions at New Orleans; the Bishop and Clergy from Jan. 1. A farewell meeting was held in the Council-room, Exeter Hall, on Friday evening last, attended by a large number of ministers and friends.

CROMWELL HOUSE, WOOLWICH.—An interesting gathering assembled recently at this Home for Working Boys, at the instance of the Secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, comprising about a score of "old boys" and from thirty to forty of the present residents. After tea Rev. G. Mallows Youngman presided over the meeting. He explained that the object for which they had been called together was to form a Band of Hope among themselves, in order that they might, by united effort, strengthen themselves in the pursuit of a sober life. Mr. Samuel Sims, of Greenwich, whose experience in this matter was very extensive, said he was pleased to speak to the lads upon this subject, and he could speak to them with feeling, having been an abstainer for nearly forty years. He did not, however, purpose to lecture upon the subject, but entering into the spirit of the meeting, he should ask their attention while he related the incidents of a boy's life, in the hope that they would be able to discover for themselves what he had already announced as the subject of his address, "A Life Motto." The story was listened to with rapt attention by the lads, and elicited much applause at the conclusion. Short addresses followed from Rev. Joseph Jordan and Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, after which twenty-five lads came forward to sign the pledge.—Kentish Mercury.

CHRISTIAN MARTYRS IN EAST AFRICA.

THE following sad tidings of the Nyanza Mission are sent to us by Mr. Eugene Stock, of the Church Missionary Society :—We have received an important letter from Mr. Mackay, giving the history of the mission to May 20. It tells a remarkable story of chequered fortune, of imminent peril and merciful deliverance, of expected expulsion and restored favour. Almost the last scene is the young king, Mwanga, receiving instructions privately from Mr. Mackay; but we deeply regret to say that at the height of the hostile influence of certain chiefs, three of the baptized Waganda youths were cruelly put to death.

The facts may be thus briefly summarised :—The November letters were brought across the Lake by Mr. Mackay, who was commissioned by the king to bring to U-Ganda three English missionaries, who it was hoped would by that time have arrived at Msalala. But unfortunately they had been detained at other stations nearer the coast, and on Mr. Mackay's return Mwanga was very angry at their non-appearance. Rumours were spread that white men were in Busoga, the country on the east side of the Victoria Nyanza with a large force, probably occasioned by Mr. Joseph Thomson's visit to that end of the Lake a year before; but the suspicious kind, stirred up by hostile chiefs, chose to think that the men Mr. Mackay had failed to bring were in Busoga, and were negotiating with the enemies of U-Ganda. At the end of January, Mr. Mackay obtained permission to cross the Lake again, but was met on his way to the port by an armed force, and compelled to return to the capital, while some Christian lads with him were arrested. Being unable to get at the king, Mr. Mackay appealed to the Katikiro (chief judge and virtual prime minister), but was ejected with violence and insult. A judicious present of cloth appeased both Mwanga and Katikiro, and earnest efforts were made to obtain the release of the arrested boys. Three of them were liberated, but two of these reported as follows :—

"They had been taken with Kakumba, Mr. Ashe's boy, and Serwanga, a baptized lad, whom Mujasi (the leader of the hostile party) had caught, to a place outside the capital. There all three were tortured by having their arms cut off, and were then bound to a scaffolding, under which a fire was made, and they were slowly burnt to death. Mujasi and his men mocked them, and bade them pray now if Jesus Christ would rescue them from his hands. The dear lads clung to their faith, and in the fire they sang, 'Killa siku tunsifu' ('Daily, daily sing the praises')."

This distressing information—and yet not without cause for thankfulness and joy—was afterwards confirmed by other testimony. Mr. Mackay observes that it was not a case of "religious persecution," but a burst of fury against the Englishmen and any who consorted with them. Still the fact that the lads were taunted with their faith in Christ, and died singing his praises, may justly claim for them the right to a place in the noble army of martyrs. Let us thank God for the witness He enabled them to bear, and pray that like faithfulness may be given to the rest of the converts.

The missionaries now, in the probability of being compelled to leave, made plans for the organisation of the Native Church they would leave behind. Half a dozen "of the more staid and advanced men," having besides "a respectable standing among their fellows," were chosen as elders to conduct services at various centres in case of the regular services at the mission being discontinued. Of the Church Prayers, and the texts, hymns, &c., which had been prepared, 1000 copies were printed for distribution. But the storm blew over, and through God's mercy the mission still goes on.

Meanwhile, neither Christians nor inquirers seemed at all daunted. On February 22, Mr. Mackay writes, "Considerable numbers still come on Sundays, while those in greater danger of arrest come at nights. Not a few have been eager for baptism, and have after examination been admitted into the visible Church. Strange that the present time has rather increased than diminished the desire to become Christians. We are astonished at the fortitude of many. Even some of Mujasi's men who helped to entrap us have come for instruction. One of these was so impressed by the behaviour of our dear boys under torture of knife and fire that he has determined to learn to pray also." Up to the middle of May there had been twenty more baptisms, 108 in all from the first.

In May, however, we find the king "very gracious," and listening repeatedly with marked attention to Mr. Mackay's instructions in private interviews. The Katikiro also was friendly again. From Msalala Mr. Mackay appeals most earnestly for reinforcement, adding that Mwanga, on the non-appearance of the expected Englishmen, had sent to the French priests on the other side of the Lake to come back again, and three had arrived. If God prosper the way of Bishop Hannington and of Mr. Hooper and his companions, both their parties should be in U-Ganda by the end of the year.

Mr. Mackay's letter will be printed in full in the C.M. Intelligencer for October.

SAILORS' HOME AT HAVRE.

THE lease of the house on the Quai Casimir Delavigne, used for the last three years as a home, mainly for British and Scandinavian sailors, expires at the end of the current month, and a few friends, deeply interested in the welfare of sailors, are determined that the work shall not be allowed to drop, but shall, by God's help, be continued in larger and more suitable premises. More than 25,000 out of the 40,000 sailors who annually visit this port, sail under the British flag, the peculiarity of this port being that in the case of sailing vessels the crews are almost always paid off on arrival, and the sailors left to find lodgings on shore as best they can.

They are thus immediately exposed to all those evils which workers in seaport towns (even in our own country) know too well, and become the prey of those who, for the sake of the few pounds in their pockets, lie in wait for them.

Many proofs could be adduced of British sailors being waylaid and illtreated in every conceivable way; while instances of drugging, kidnapping, robbery, and even worse, are by no means unknown. The following instance, however, may be cited as a specimen of some of the cases daily occurring. On August 7 last the British ship Orissa arrived in port, and the men left the ship the following day. Some of them were enticed into the low dens called "boarding houses;" and on August 10, when the crew were paid off, the crimps who were lying in wait outside of the Consulate, for those men who had been staying with them since they landed, came forward and demanded payment for their enormous bills for drink and other imaginary supplies given to them while in their dens. One man who had just received 400 francs as his wages, had a whisky bill presented to him by a crimp for 396 francs, after having been ashore only fifty-six hours. Thus, in a few hours his hard earnings were gone into the hands of the crimp, who, after he had got the man's money from this voyage, sent him to sea the following day, in another ship, and, in his self-constituted office of "shipping master," pocketed a month's advance from the poor fellow, all in payment of imaginary debts. Thus the "boarding master" appropriated 460 francs during the seventy-four hours in which the sailor had been on shore.

This Home then endeavours to afford at once a retreat for those who wish to avoid such haunts of infamy, and a refuge for those who otherwise would certainly be engulphed in them. A large house, lately an emigrants' hotel, in Rue Dauphiné, close to the principal shipping quay, has been secured at a rental of £144 per annum, with a premium of £200 to be paid down at once; the lease being determinable by the lessees at the expiration of any triennial period from Michaelmas, 1885. In it accommodation can be provided for about one hundred sailors. There will be also a good Temperance bar (the first established in Havre), a large mission-room, and apartments for officers. For this end some alterations are required, besides painting, gas, and water fittings, which, with the additional furniture required for the larger Home, will cost about £600.

Owing to the great expenses of housekeeping in France, in order to carry on this important work, about £500 a year will be required beyond what is received in board and lodging from the sailors.

The Superintendent, Mr. Hermann (late of Honfleur Sailors' Rest), who lives in the house, is an earnest Christian worker, a good linguist, a faithful and economical manager, and is most ably assisted in all things by a very efficient wife. Of the £800 required for entering the new Home, about £400 have been received, and somewhat more than £220 has been secured in annual subscriptions.

Could those who have the means to give, and hearts to care, but realise the perils of the sailor ashore in Havre, they would surely give of their abundance, or better still, at some personal sacrifice, to aid in providing a Home and Christian influence for their fellow-countrymen waiting re-employment in this port.

Reference is permitted to Mr. F. H. Tritton, 54, Lombard-street, and Mr. Edward Trotter, 5, Montagu-square, W., who have investigated the matter on the spot, and can testify to the need of the Home; or to the Hon. Lady Beauchamp, 3, Cromwell-road, S.W.

A local Provisional Committee has been formed, comprising Mr. Daniel Danielsen, (Acting Consul-General for Sweden and Norway), and Mr. Frederick Simson, 75, Rue d'Orléans, Havre, the latter of whom has consented to act as Treasurer, Lady Beauchamp filling the same capacity in England. It should be added that the work of "The Missions to Seamen" Society does not include a "Home" at Havre, and that cordial sympathy exists between the two superintendents.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

BULL FIGHTS.—The Bishop of Nimes has published a mandate in which he forbids his parishioners to take part in any of these disgraceful scenes.—Témoin de la Vérité.

M. CAPELLINI, who has devoted himself to evangelising among the soldiers of Italy, states that, since he began his work thirteen years ago, about a thousand men have embraced Protestantism.

BUENOS AYRES.—An evangelist has been seeking to carry the Gospel into the prison here, where many persons are kept one, two, three, or four years waiting for their trial. But his visit was not pleasing to the chaplain. The evangelist, who was provided with New Testaments in English, German, Italian, and Spanish, was forbidden to give them to the prisoners or even to enter the prison.—Témoin de la Vérité.

DUSSELDORF.—The sale of Bibles by the colporteur in the small towns and villages around Düsseldorf has met with much opposition, chiefly by women, who, when they see him, go forward and warn people not to purchase or receive the Bible and tracts, because they are "wicked, poisonous books." Sometimes he is taken by the arm, and turned out of the house. But, as he says, "God be thanked, this is not my only experience, as may be seen by the distribution of 130 Bibles, 524 Testaments, 30,000 tracts, almanacks, &c., in six months."—Wahrheitszeuge.

THE ROMISH CHURCH.—For the third time a Papal Decree has been issued from Rome that the whole month of October shall be devoted to the Virgin Mary. Already the whole month of May belongs to her, and more Festival days are held in her honour than to the Saviour. The whole of October is devoted to the "most blessed Virgin Mary of the Rose-garland, everywhere, so long as the present melancholy condition of the Church continues, and until the Pope is restored to perfect freedom." To those who will visit the churches, and say certain prayers every day, "indulgences" for seven years are granted. Solemn processions are to be made wherever possible.—Evan. Anzeiger.

DROME.—In Barnave, Drôme, Pastor Marzials and his wife have set going various branches of evangelical work, which promise to be a source of light and help to that part of France. It includes a girls' school with thirty-four pupils, mostly from the neighbouring villages, and an orphanage for the education of twenty orphans, taken chiefly from families who are descended from the Vaudois Huguenots. These are trained for domestic service as nurses or teachers. Last year four were placed in English families. From the dispensary help and medicines have been given to more than 200 persons. Preaching tours have been organised, fairs visited, and more than 2000 Bibles or portions of the Scriptures have been distributed. The Sunday-school is attended by more than 100 children, is well-conducted, and the coffee-houses do much to check the torrent of intemperance.

"SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC DOCTRINES."

Sir,—Your correspondent is much mistaken in supposing that there is any necessary connection between Socialism and Infidelity or Immorality. In days of old it was "them that believed" who "had all things common." In modern days Mr. Maurice and Charles Kingsley were prominent in the Christian Socialist movement, which does not lack devoted supporters at this moment. Mr. Bradlaugh has always been an avowed enemy of Socialism. He has no more belief in universal brotherhood than in the universal Fatherhood. The "sacredness of property" is preached everywhere by powerful voices. May we not suggest, without incurring suspicion of Atheism, that redeemed humanity is sacred too.—Yours obediently, O. E. H.

[Mr. Edward S. Jones also writes that Mr. Bradlaugh is entirely opposed to anything like Socialism. In our Note we confounded Socialism with Secularism. The split to which we referred has developed into what Dr. Peter Agate terms "Palæo-Secularism" and "Neo-Secularism," in a pamphlet in which he denounces Mr. Bradlaugh's writings as immoral. —Ed.]

"THE FEMALE LABOUR MARKET."

Sir,—I am more than pleased with the letter of "Mary Bayly" on "The Female Labour Market," which we had on Sept. 17. It is passing strange to me that women will overlook the work for which Providence has specially fitted them, and try to push themselves into positions which belong by right to men, and should be occupied by them only. Can you or your readers give us the reason of this, I mean more particularly in the case of single women? Why do they prefer to keep on for hours together at monotonous work and starvation wages, when all around there is such a dearth of servants, whose work, if they choose to make it so, is various and interesting, with abundance of food, and wages sufficient for suitable clothing; and, if careful, a trifle to put in the bank beside? I cannot but think that those ladies who are for ever on the alert to open new channels for female labour, are unconsciously doing more harm than good. Let the women take to domestic service, and the men provide for their little ones in places and ways which are suitable.

What single thing is there in household work which is derogatory? I quite agree with "J. H. D." that the so-called "Lady Helps" need not emigrate; there is plenty for them to do at home, if they are disposed to do it. Let them put their pride in their pockets, and go in for honest service, taking first modest situations with the idea in their minds of qualifying for better. Then, instead of accepting charity to take them abroad, they may find comfortable homes with food and clothing, and feel themselves to be useful instead of useless members of society.

I should like to see institutions where women could show their capabilities and receive diplomas in accordance therewith, first, second, and third class, and that a certain wage should attach to these classes of say, £10, £15, or £20 a year. This would relieve both employers and employed of much disappointment. Now, a servant asks £20, and when she has got into the house it is found she does not know her duties and is not worth £10. On the other hand, some whose ideas are more modest value themselves at £10, whereas they might easily get the diploma for £20. Cooks, especially if they have really learned their business and take a pleasure in it, can command double these sums. Payment should be by result. If women are wanting employment, there is plenty for them, admirably adapted to their strength and constitutions, and this without robbing the men of their work.

In conclusion, let me say that, if all the readers of The Christian alone who are in want of servants would write to you, I think one post would convince you, if you need convincing, that this department of the female labour market is not by any means crowded. T. H. N.

[Our correspondent "would not object to give prizes of £5, £3, and £2 for the three best essays on The Advantages of Domestic Service over all other Employment for Women." We would rather that the subject were a little more broadly stated, so as to include whatever may need to be advanced on the other side. Domestic service, like everything else, has its trials and difficulties, and it would be well for essayists to take these into account.—Ed.]

PARLIAMENTARY CANDIDATES.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of September 3, I observed a letter signed "F. Wimbush," in which I concur, save in one point, about which there must be a mistake, and I think it desirable to correct it.

He speaks of a number of "Bills" which he thinks a candidate ought to be asked to "support," and amongst them is named the "Parliamentary Oaths." Surely by this cannot be meant a Bill to do away with the oath in order to admit Mr. Bradlaugh to Parliament, and so let Atheism be at last triumphant! Yours truly, J. P.

Notices of Books, &c.

A Roll of Golden Thoughts for the Year. 1s. 6d. Fisher Unwin. A choice and delicately produced little roll, containing the best sentiments uttered by a host of eminent men, for each day in the year.

Lives of Dr. Guthrie, Father Mathew, Elihu Burritt, and Joseph Livesey. This is another of the World's Workers' Series (1s. 6d. Cassell & Co.), by Dr. J. W. Kirton, who in his characteristic and vivid style, has presented in a nutshell the leading features of these noble men. It is a model of brevity, conciseness and interest.

Gleanings among the Sheaves. By C. H. Spurgeon. 1s. Passmore & Alabaster. "Respectfully dedicated by the publishers to the hearers and readers of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's sermons." These gleanings, numbering upwards of one hundred and fifty, are most of them, though brief, equal to an ordinary sermon, and are full of experimental spirituality.

Cruelty to Animals. By Lieut.-Col. John R. Campbell. 6d. Partridge. A seasonable protest against cruelty as practised in sports, in cooking, in driving, in transport, in slaughtering, and other ways of the so-called "necessary" inflictions of pain upon the lower creation. There is often much wantonness in these matters, and we trust that public feeling may be aroused by this able little pamphlet.

Our Daughters. By Mrs. Reaney. 3s. 6d. and 1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Many of our readers are probably familiar with this excellent book. With a full heart yearning towards the class of whom and for whom she writes, the authoress seeks to set before young women the highest object of life, and with tenderness and love urges the claims of a crucified and risen Saviour upon all. It is a book which we should like to see in the hands of every young woman, whether at home, at school, or in busy spheres of active life. The elegant edition now published at 1s 6d. renders it accessible to all, and we trust that Christians will widely extend its usefulness at this time when so much attention is being directed to the welfare of our young women.

Morning Thoughts for our Daughters is another valuable and practical work by the same writer, upon Scripture texts. They are very helpful and suggestive, told in clear and winning language, and interspersed with a number of touching and illustrative incidents. 1s. Hodder & Stoughton.

Simon Jasper, Homely Talks, Cornish Stories. By Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. 1s. 6d. each. Woolmer. All the writings from the pen of this gifted author are of such approved excellence that it were invidious to draw comparisons between them. Of this we are sure, that it is impossible to read any of his fascinating narratives without profit and keen enjoyment. They are second to none for brilliant, captivating style, vivid description, genuine humour, and sound healthy sentiment. His rule of life, to look at the bright side of things, and see Christ in them all, has caused his writings to shed beams of light wherever they have gained admission, and have led thousands to rejoice in their Christian faith. No one need be dull with one of these delightful books in the house. The cheap editions of nearly all his works now published will be a great boon to many, and deserve a very wide dissemination.

A similar edition of his deeply spiritual and practical Thoughts on Holiness, which originally appeared in our columns, is also issued by the same publishers, price 1s. It is a very elegant and helpful little volume.

Requests for Prayer.

For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway in new Congregational Chapel, Penarth, near Cardiff, Oct. 1 to 5.——For blessing on evangelistic services in Paisley, Oct. 4—23.——For the "Christian Women's Union" Conference, to be held in October. That the Holy Spirit may be poured out on all who attend it, and specially that the "purity" meetings may be made useful for the training of the young.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Oct. 4, Luke xvii. 1—19; Oct. 5, xvii. 20—37; Oct. 6, xviii. 1—17; Oct. 7, xviii. 18—30; Oct. 8, xviii. 31—43; Oct. 9, xix. 1—10; Oct. 10, xix. 11—27.

PATAGONIA.—Under the direction of Father Bosco, some Italian monks have invaded Patagonia. A bishop has also been nominated there, but just as he was about to take his seat, the bishop and the monks were arrested by the Government of the province.

CARRUBBER'S CLOSE MISSION, EDINBURGH.—Nearly three years have elapsed since the last account of this Mission was published. The report just issued will be read with much interest, showing, as it does, that the new premises, costing over £10,000, were secured mainly through the influence of Mr. Moody. The progress of the work in its various branches is narrated, forming altogether a very instructive reading. This includes the chief incidents which have marked the growth of the Mission since 1882. Worked on thoroughly evangelical lines, and by labourers imbued with Mr. Moody's spirit, our Edinburgh friends will not fail to go on conquering and to conquer. The number of workers, all unpaid, now reaches 300. Mr. C. B. Muston, 97, Marchmont-road, Edinburgh, is the Secretary.

CHINA.—The testimony of some English, Swiss, and German missionaries is given in the Evangile et Liberté of Bâle, to the effect that the French attack upon China has rather furthered than hindered the progress of the Gospel in China. The Chinese were deeply impressed on seeing the French receive the wounded in order to take care of them. After a bombardment, they expected a general pillage, or worse; but no, they learnt with astonishment that women and children, so far as possible, were removed from danger. In the frequent Chinese civil wars, neither age nor sex is spared. They are getting to understand that, even in war, Christian nations behave differently from heathen nations. Mr. Stuart, an American Missionary, says the Chinese are "learning three important things: geography; to distinguish Protestants from Catholics; and that the pretended cruelties of the French are small in comparison with those committed by their own soldiers." Since the foreign occupation, preaching has been more numerously attended, and more attentively listened to, and the colporteur of the American Bible Society has "sold an enormous number of books."

THE ARMSTRONG TRIAL.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to say one word, through your columns, to Christian friends concerning the Armstrong trial. Mr. Stead, Mr. Booth, and Rebecca Jarrett, have been committed for trial, and the whole force of a Government prosecution, paid for by Government money, is being brought to bear against the persons who were, under God, chiefly instrumental in bringing about the great and needed reform in the law recently made, and in giving that powerful impulse to the conscience of the nation which cannot fail to produce further light upon the "hidden things of darkness," and an earnest and prolonged effort to purify our land from the abominations which were bringing down upon it the curse of heaven. It is a terrible thing to think that, while the Government of this country has not lifted a finger against any one of the real criminals, monsters to whom the children of our people are sacrificed in such numbers, the one prosecution upon which it has entered is against those whose whole life is now devoted to a passionate opposition to those crimes.

For many years past, English girls have been carried off to ruin and death in evil houses on the Continent. We ourselves (Mr. Scott's Committee) exposed this traffic, and in our difficult endeavour to save a few victims, we were not only unaided, but positively hindered by the police. It is true that after an investigation set on foot by the authorities, a committee of the House of Lords endorsed all the horrors we had proclaimed; but, Sir, is it not painfully significant, that among the multitudes of such girls and children so decoyed and ruined, in not one single instance have the police ever brought one of those girls back; nor has the Government ever instituted any proceedings against their abductors, although those persons are perfectly well known at Scotland Yard! The one girl produced by the police is little Eliza Armstrong, for whose pretended abduction our friends are now on their trial.

Surely these astonishing facts will have an influence on the approaching General Election. I believe that the sense of justice and manly pity for the murdered innocents is not dead in our land, and that a day of reckoning cannot be far off.

I need not say a word in vindication of the methods employed by our friends in the particular case for which they are committed for trial (a case in which I am ready to bear my own share of responsibility, as I urged my dear friend and fellow-worker, Rebecca Jarrett, into this difficult service), for those are completely set forth in the address of Mr. Stead, part of which he was able, with repeated interruptions from the magistrate, to deliver in the Court, and which has been published in the special morning edition of The Pall Mall Gazette of Monday. I trust everyone who cares for justice will read that defence.

The employment of such and such methods, however, is not the point at issue. The great fact is, that here, in our England, is a great travesty of human justice. Here are the persons who labour for moral reform prosecuted for felony, while not one of the real felons is touched. The case of the Birmingham "Minotaur" is an additional proof of the awful truth of The Pall Mall revelations, but that monster has been ferreted out, and is being prosecuted by a private Society, not by the Government. Will the unfortunate institution of a Public Prosecutor ever be used on behalf of justice? We are living in critical times. As I sat in that police-court on Saturday last, and observed the animus of the Government authorities, the conviction came upon me that these people will end by pulling down many things which they would rather see standing, and that they are undermining the very ground upon which they themselves stand.

I ask the prayers of all Christian friends for those three persons I have named about to be tried. I wish that I could, without breach of confidence, take your readers a little within the inner circle of those who have been with them through this bitter time, and let them see the purity of aim, the suffering, the gentleness, and the courage, which I am sure would enlist sympathy. Mr. Stead is publicly known only as a brave and enterprising reformer. But to my mind the memory is ever present of a dark night in which I entered his office, after a day of hand-to-hand wrestling with the powers of hell. We stumbled up the narrow, dark stairs; the lights were out, not a soul was there, it was midnight. I scarcely recognised the haggard face before me as that of Mr. Stead. He threw himself across his desk with a cry like that of a bereaved or outraged mother, rather than that of an indignant man, and sobbed out the words, "Oh, Mrs. Butler, let me weep, let me weep, or my heart will break." He then told me in broken sentences of the little, tender girls he had seen that day sold in the fashionable West-end brothels, whom he (father-like) had taken on his knee, and to whom he had spoken of his own little girls. Well might he cry, "Oh, let me weep!"

Christian parents, I ask your sympathy for, or at least your respectfully suspended judgment of, this man's actions.

When I looked also at Mr. Bramwell Booth, whose hair is blanched during this last fortnight of anxiety and trouble, and whose face bore traces of great suffering, I thought of the blessed work which he and his family have done for the outcast and lapsed masses, and I recalled many such trials of just persons in past history.

I have not a doubt as to the final result of all that is passing; I would only ask our Christian friends to stick to the right, and to do their duty now in opposing the crimes which have been exposed with so much pain and risk by others.—Yours ever, JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

BOW COMMON.—Mr. Grove, Berger Hall, is conducting a mission in a large tent in Bow Common-lane, in connection with the Mr. Guinness's Home Mission work. The Lord is blessing his word in a wonderful manner, and many souls are enquiring the way of salvation every night. On Sunday nights the tent, which holds nearly nine hundred, is not nearly large enough. Many of our Wesleyan friends, and brethren from the Edinboro' Castle, are joining heartily in the services.

H. H.

FINSBURY PARK.—From September 20 to 27 inclusive, a special mission was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. The week-night attendance was not large, varying from 100 to 400 young men only. But on Sunday, Sept. 20, the hall was nearly full, and last Sabbath there was not sufficient standing, room. The committee have long felt the need of more room for the Sunday evening meetings; the carpenters have, therefore, been busy in taking down partitions, &c., which now admits about another 100 people, and the concluding meeting showed that the committee were justified in this step. The power and blessing of the Lord was manifested, and not one night passed without souls being brought into the kingdom, whilst the closing meeting was a scene never to be forgotten. The larger proportion of the audience stayed to the after meeting, and many hearts were opened to receive Christ. A WORKER.

BALLYMONEY.—Mr. J. Eyres commenced a series of children's services in the town hall, Ballymoney, on September 12. The meetings were very encouraging, the attention and interest of the children being very remarked. The inquiry-meeting after each service was largely attended, and the prayer-meeting at 7 a.m. on the Sabbath was truly a time of refreshing, Mr. Eyres looked for fruit, and God gave him his desire. We have good reason to believe that many children were led to give their hearts to the Lord, and believers felt the quickening power of the Divine Spirit. We hope that arrangements will be made for at least another week of such glorious meetings for the young people. Ministers of this town, always ready to help on the Lord's work, threw themselves heartily into the work, as did many other Christian workers. Mr. Eyres has gone to Portrush, and we hope and pray he may see his way to come to Ballymoney soon again, when both young and old would give him a hearty welcome.

LETTER FROM MR. J. E. MATHIESON.

DEAR FRIEND.—I am anxious that whilst dear Payson Hammond is in London, the missions he is preparing to hold in various quarters should secure the sympathy and support and prayers of warm-hearted Christian workers; and that, above all, ministers of Christ should be ready to give him a cordial welcome, as so many of them did to our dear friends, Moody and Sankey.

I confess that before I had heard Mr. Hammond, or seen him at work, I had in my mind an indefinite apprehension that his meetings would not be very much to my own personal liking; but as I did not like this quarter of London to miss its share of blessing, I got Mr. Hammond to promise, some months ago, that he would come here in the autumn. Under a strong sense of duty rather than of interest in this form of work, I was thus led to invite our friend hither, and now I rejoice that he has come.

We have now had eight days of crowded meetings in the Conference Hall, on both Sunday afternoons the place being packed with Sunday-school children. We have to thank the neighbouring ministers for their cordiality in bringing or sending their Sunday-schools. At every meeting we believe that grown-up people as well as children have been brought to the Saviour, and He has received and blessed them; and we are looking for a much larger blessing in the week that lies before us.

No one need feel alarm about Mr. Hammond's methods; the most sober-minded Christians will soon learn to appreciate his ways of reaching peoples' hearts; they had better come and judge for themselves in our meetings at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.; 3.30 and 7 p.m. on Sundays. The sufferings of Christ, as depicted in the Gospels, form the staple of our friend's addresses, and the childrens' attention is held by appropriate illustrations and the sweet hymns from "Gems of Praise," probably the best childrens' hymn-book in existence.

When one looks around at the awful temptations of our city, and of this present time, do we not tremble for those who are not "kept by the power of God"? How soon are we to expect this power to be operative on young hearts? Ah, would that some of us had been taught to ask for it, to expect it, from our earliest days! He can keep, He does keep, the "little ones who believe in Him" (Matt. xviii. 6); and it is the unbelief of us older people that frequently hinders early conversion, and a full lifetime of blessed service being yielded to Christ.

Surely, as Mr. Hammond well puts it, a fresh, fragrant flower is more acceptable than a faded flower; and is not a very young and comparatively unsoiled life more acceptable to the Master than a life half worn out or near its close, with all the bloom and freshness gone out of it?

Our morning meetings have been bright and happy gatherings, full of thankful testimony to the grace of God, which has brought salvation into many homes, through Mr. Hammond's ministrations here.—Yours ever truly,

JAMES E. MATHIESON.

A SERVANT'S INSTITUTE has been established in connection with the "Homes for Working Girls in London," which will, it is hoped, prove efficacious as a medium between mistresses and servants. It is most important that reliable agencies of this kind should exist, and we trust that this may prove eminently successful in finding good situations for young women. The office is at 36, Hart-street, Bloomsbury, W.

WOOLWICH GOSPEL MALE CHOIR.—Ten of the members of this Choir drove out into the surrounding country on Saturday, the 19th ult., to proclaim and sing the love of God. On the journey through Welling, Bexley, Blendon and Foot's Cray, to St Mary's Cray, the Word was scattered abroad, some twelve hundred Gospel books and leaflets being distributed. After tea, the third and largest meeting was held in St. Mary's Cray. Four addresses were given, sinners being urged to repent and come to Christ.

Notes on Daily Readings.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 1.—REV. VIII.

v. 1.—"And when he opened the seventh seal, here followed a silence in heaven about the space of alf an hour" (R.V.).—The Greek is literally there came to pass a silence," &c. This seems to enote a postponement of the announcement of ne crisis naturally to be expected when the seventh eal is opened. Although Rev. xix. 11 is not said o be the resumption of what is here postponed, it ooks very like it. "Let the reader (says the late dward Bickersteth) compare diligently the harmonies of chapters iv.—vii. with chapters xix. and x., and he will see how fully chapters xix. and xx. orrespond to the sealed book, and complete its isions in the promised glory of the Church of hrist. The silence described (viii. 1) is broken xix. 1). The emblem of the white horse (vi. 2) ppears again (xix. 11). The testimony given vi. 9) appears also (xx. 4). The kings, captains, c., all in terror (vi. 16) are vanquished (xix. 18). he judgment delayed (vi. 10) is executed (xix. 2). he robes made white in the blood of the Lamb vii. 9) are mentioned again (xix. 8—14)."

v. 2.—"And I saw the seven angels which stood efore God; and to them were given seven trumpets." "The preparation for a new series of visions ow begins. This series, which covers the same eriod of time as the visions of the Seals, is a 'Reapitulation,' as the ancient expositors express it." Sp. Com. The Trumpets may be looked upon as ivine judgments sent as solemn calls to repentance, which warnings being neglected, the last series—hat of the Vials—represents the final outpouring f God's wrath upon the impenitent. The different istorical events, such as the invasions of the Goths, Huns, and Vandals, which seem generally to correpond thereto, as blasts of trumpet warning calling o repentance, are worth careful consideration.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 2.—REV. IX.

v. 2.—"There arose a smoke out of the pit."—'Mede's interpretation has found favour with any: the smoke is Mohammedanism, which overed with a new darkness the world already llumined by the Sun of Righteousness. The eneral applicability of this Trumpet to Mohamedanism is deserving of notice."—Sp. Com.

v. 13.—"And the sixth angel sounded."—"The udgment of the second war trumpet is inflicted by vast army of horsemen (ver. 16, &c.); and this is ollowed by two episodes (as in the case of the sixth eal), the first of which is contained in chap. x., he second episode being contained in chap. xi. —14."—Sp. Com.

v. 14.—"Loose the four angels which are bound n the great river Euphrates."—"Taking the uphrates to mean the literal river, Mede, Faber, lliott, &c., refer this trumpet to the invasions of he Tartars and Turks."—Sp. Com.

v. 16.—"And the number of the armies of the orsemen was twice ten thousand times ten thousand." —"'Two myriads of myriads,' or two hundred millions The vastness of the number shows that o literal army is intended."—Sp. Com. But the vord is "armies," not "army," and if the mystic umber in the last verse be taken (as Sir Isaac Newton, Mede, and Elliott take it) to denote a eriod of nearly four centuries from the time that he Turks crossed the Euphrates to the capture of onstantinople (A.D. 1453), the greatness of the umber would present less difficulty.

v. 20.—"And the rest of the men which were not illed by these plagues yet repented not," &c.—"Elliott efers these verses to Western Christendom, . . . vhose religion and crimes throughout the middle ges he considers as here described."—Sp. Com.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3.—REV. X.

v. 1.—"And I saw another mighty angel come lown from heaven, clothed with a cloud."—"With he early expositors generally, Mede, Hengstenberg, Wordsworth, &c., understand Christ."—Sp. Com.

v. 2.—"And he set his right foot upon the sea, and is left foot on the earth."—"Intimating the judicial uthority committed to him over the whole world," or claiming the world which He had redeemed.

v. 6.—"That there shall be time no longer."—Or lelay no longer (marg. R.V.).

v. 9.—"Take it, and eat it up."—"For the symbolism here see Ezek. ii. 9; iii. 1. The meaning is explained in Ezek. iii. 10: 'All my words that I hall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear vith thine ears.'—In fact the Seer was to assimiate, to make thoroughly his own, the contents of the little book.'"—Sp. Com. Elliott argues with much force from the analogy of Ezek. ii., iii., that the little book must be the Word of God, "either the whole Bible," or, as the little book might suggest, "the New Testament, Christ's Gospel-ministers' chief manual."

v. 11.—"And He said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."—Elliott's explanation of this cloud-clothed angel from heaven with the little book is one of the most interesting and convincing parts of the "Horæ Apocalypticæ." He regards it as the history of the Reformation in epitome. The little book so long closed by man, brought down "open" by Christ. John represents the Church, or especially the ministry of the Church, and in the command to eat the book, we have Christ's charge to his ministering servants, as to what their message henceforth was to be, and in the bitterness following the first sweetness of the inward reception of the Word, is hinted the trials and persecutions which awaited his faithful ministers in the discharge of their "prophesying again before many peoples," &c.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 4.—REV. XI.

v. 1.—"Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein."—"The mention of worshippers proves that the measuring is symbolical. 'To measure' is to separate for sacred purposes; what is excluded from the measurement is accordingly more or less mingled with evil. The 'sealing' in chapter vii. is a figure corresponding to 'measuring.'"—Sp. Com. It is worth observing, too, that as the "sealing" (chapter vii.) occurs in an episode between the sixth and seventh seals, so the "measuring" here occurs in an episode between the sixth and seventh trumpets.

v. 2.—"For it is given to the Gentiles."—More literally, "it was given to the Gentiles," apparently referring to the character of the Dispensation. "And the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months."—A plain allusion to our Lord's words in Luke xxi. 24, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," from which the conclusion would seem to follow that "forty and two months" (the well-known 1260 days, or three and a half years, of prophecy) = "the times of the Gentiles." "The numbers in this book properly belong to the province not of chronology, but of symbolism."—Sp. Com.

v. 3.—"I will give (power) unto my two witnesses." —Omit "power" as not in the Greek; so R. V. It seems to mean, "I will grant unto my two witnesses that they shall prophesy, &c." Whether these two witnesses are two literal persons yet to arise, or are a mystical designation of the Church in its witnessing character, whose mystical death and resurrection either took place at the time of the Reformation (Elliott) or are still future (Garratt), cannot possibly be considered here.

v. 15.—"And the seventh angel sounded," &c.—Here ends the second septenary series of visions, that of the Trumpets, and it ends, as does each of the others, at the final crisis.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 5.—REV. XII.

v. 1.—"A woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars."—"The woman who gives birth to the Messiah (ver. 5) can only be the Old Testament Church of God, the true Israel."—Düsterdieck. See "of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came" (Rom. ix. 5). Compare also, "Upon her head a crown of twelve stars" with "whose are the fathers" (ib.).

v. 5.—"A man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron."—"These words cited verbatim from the LXX. of the Messianic Psalm ii., and preceded by the 'who' of personal identification, leave no possibility of doubt who is here intended. The Man-child is the Lord Jesus Christ, and none other."—Dean Alford.

v. 9.—"And the great dragon was cast out," &c.—Our Lord proclaimed this as the immediate result of his approaching death and resurrection: "Now shall the prince of this world be cast out" (John xii. 31).

v. 12.—"Having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time."—"The shortness of the 'time' allowed for Satan's Antichristian work is founded simply on the principle which pervades the Apocalypse, that 'the time is at hand'—that 'the Lord cometh quickly.'"—Sp. Com.

v. 15.—"That he might cause her to be carried away of the flood."—It is remarkable how often Gibbon and other historians (who could never have intended to illustrate this prophecy) describe the invasion of the Roman Empire by the barbarian hordes of Goths, Vandals, Huns, &c., under the figure of "floods," "deluge," "streams," &c. That Satan's object was to sweep away Christianity can well be conceived. That he was foiled in this by "the Roman world receiving the wild Germanic masses and reconciling them to Christianity" (Auberlen), is a matter of history.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER .—REV. XIII.

v. 1.—"A beast . . . . having seven heads and ten horns."—The reference to Dan. vii. and the fourth beast therein described as "dreadful and terrible and strong exceedingly," is so clear and so generally admitted, that there seems to be no doubt whatever that here, as there, the Roman Empire is described. But one note of time, viz., the horns being crowned (ver. 1) fixes the time of this phase of the Roman Empire as being subsequent to the division of the kingdom (see Dan. ii. 41, "The kingdom shall be divided"), which historically took place after the Gothic invasions of the fifth century. Speaking generally, therefore, one may say that chapter xii. presents the Roman Empire in its Pagan phase; chapter xiii. in its professedly Christian, but really Antichristian phase.

v. 3.—"And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death."—The imperial power was extinguished at Rome for sixty years by the sword of the Gothic kingdom, and all but extinguished in the East till the recovery of Rome by the conquests of Belisarius and Narses (A.D. 536).

v. 8.—"All that dwell upon the earth shall worship him."—Luther, writing to the Emperor Charles V. after the Diet of Worms, says: "Where eternal interests are concerned God wills not that man should submit unto man, for such submission in spiritual matters is a real worship, and ought to be rendered solely to God."

v. 11.—"Another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon."—If the first beast be the secular power of the Roman Empire, this is the ecclesiastical.

v. 14.—"They should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword, and did live."—No historical interpretation of the image of the beast is so satisfactory as that held at the time of the Reformation which identifies it with "the Holy Roman Empire," and Mr. Bryce, the able historian of that wonderful institution, which lasted more than a thousand years (A.D. 800—1806), thus speaks of its rise: "The strong hand of the first Frankish Emperor raises the fallen image and bids the nations bow down to it once more."

v. 16.—"A mark in their right hands or in their foreheads."—"Commentators refer this mark or brand to the heathen custom of branding slaves or soldiers, in token of their obedience to their master or general."—Sp. Com.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7.—REV. XIV.

v. 1.—"Behold the Lamb standing on the Mount Zion" (R.V.).—"Here only, and in Heb. xii. 22, do we find Mount Zion ('Jerusalem, which is above') mentioned in the New Testament. In Heb. xii. 18, the spiritual Zion is contrasted with the outward and earthly Zion."—Sp. Com.

v. 3.—"No man could learn the song save the hundred and forty-four thousand, even they that had been purchased out of the earth" (R.V.).—This seems to identify the 144,000 here spoken of with the Redeemed. In chap. vii the number seems to stand for the Jewish remnant, though even there many take it for the same body as the countless multitude.

v. 5.—"And in their mouth was found no lie: they are without blemish" (R.V.).—A striking picture of the recognition above of Christian standing in Christ, so often denied below.

v. 9.—"If any man worship the beast," &c.—The terrible doom here pronounced upon those who do so, must fairly be limited to the time following the proclamation, "Babylon is fallen."

v. 14.—"And I looked, and behold a white cloud." —This vision of the coming of the Son of Man closes the series of visions which have formed an episode since the seventh trumpet sounded, in ch. xi.

v. 15.—"The harvest of the earth is ripe."—Dean Alford says, "I much incline to think that the harvest is the ingathering of the saints; God's harvest, reaped from the earth, before the vintage of wrath which follows."

v. 18.—"The vine of the earth."—The figure seems to point to the professing Church, after the true Church has been gathered in, as ripe for judgment.

PERTH CONFERENCE.—In the Report of the Ladies' Meeting at Perth Conference, our correspondent's figures were not correct. There are not 2000 policemen in Glasgow, but 1100, and of that number eighty are members of the Christian Policemen's Association. Helpers are needed in this work. Anyone wishing to help may communicate with Miss Campbell, 16, Woodside-crescent, Glasgow.

Portuguese Protestant Schools, Madeira.—A notice of these schools appeared in The Christian of August 27 As the work is proving fruitful, it is greatly to be regretted if it should be abandoned for want of funds. THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

I have received many interesting and encouraging letters on the "First Sheets," of which the following, the first received, from a sister in the Lord previously unknown to me, will serve as a good specimen.—(J. P. Wilson, 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.)

"I have read your little book, lent me by a friend; and I do desire heartily to thank my God that it was put into my hands. Though for years I have known my Saviour's love, and experienced the incoming of the Holy Spirit in power in my soul, yet, since reading 'Scriptural Proofs,' I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in his capacity of Saviour, and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my deliverer from indwelling sin, and that on the truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read. There is so little of man in it and so much of God."

THE FOREIGN AID SOCIETY.

What is it? It is a Society which has been labouring for more than 40 years past for the Evangelization of France, Italy, Belgium, and Spain.

How does it Work? Believing the instrumentality of a native agency to be the best and speediest means of spreading the Gospel, it collects money in England, and gives grants to various native organizations (Sociétés Evangéliques), concerning whose Protestant, Evangelical, and Missionary character there can be no doubt.

Who are its Friends and Supporters? Its Committee consists of a number of leading Evangelical Clergymen and Laymen, of whom Joseph Hoare, Esq., is Chairman. The Secretary is the Rev. H. J. Browne, Vicar of Christ Church, Barnet, who will supply further information, and thankfully receive contributions.

Why ought we to Help it? Because Europe needs yet to be evangelized. Because the door is open. Because the encouragement is great. Because we have received much light from the Continent, and owe a great debt to the Huguenots of the past. Because Christ bids us, the Spirit calls us, the Bible directs us, and because the Christian is a debtor both to the Greeks and the Barbarians, to the wise and unwise.

Will you not Help this Good Cause?

IMAGINARY CURES.

One of the strange opinions passed upon the success of Curative Magnetism is that faith is one of the chief factors by which cures are wrought. A little deliberation, however, will show that some more potent influence than mere faith in the remedy has been operating in the removal of paralytic, spinal, and muscular affections such as we from time to time report.

There are men, women, and children who were at one time bedridden and incapable of exerting themselves in the least, but who have been, by means of our treatment, raised from unmistakable pain and helplessness. These were not ailments of that imaginary nature which are so plentiful among nervous sufferers; they were those of disabled and chronic invalids who, in many instances, had resigned themselves to their fate. Even if confidence in our treatment had alone effected cures in such people, we should still have reason to pride ourselves upon the result. The case is greatly altered, however, when we reflect that those of whom we speak had lost faith in everything curative, abandoning all hope. Surely if orthodox remedies had failed to awaken faith, such a simple remedy as Magnetism could not have much influence upon the minds of the sufferers.

Many of our most successful cases commenced with little or no faith in the remedy:—"My husband has not the slightest faith in Curative Magnetism;" "I shall try your treatment with very little expectation of receiving benefit;" "I simply laughed at my friends who recommended it;" "My wife disbelieves in Odo-Magnetism;" are common expressions in our ears, and we can understand them. When people have been subject to years of suffering, we generally find that, through repeated failures to obtain relief, they are thoroughly convinced in their own minds that there is no help for them, and often they are really averse to trying anything further, and will even resist the efforts of friends to induce them to try yet one thing more.

We are fully prepared to admit that faith in a remedy is helpful, but we must also remember that where a remedy is received with apathy and even mistrust, all good accomplished must be by the unaided virtue of that remedy, the help of a favourable state of the mind which faith would induce being wanting.

What can be plainer than this? To right-thinking people nothing more is needed, but, unfortunately, there exists a class of sceptics who will not consider the logical sequence of cause and effect, but form their ideas solely upon the misrepresentations of others. However, we cannot do more than commend to those who seek the truth a careful perusal of the reports of our patients, and we feel assured that an unbiassed mind will find little ground for the presumption that imaginary cures (which means cures of imaginary ailments by imaginary remedies) are in any sense equivalent to the cures of real and confirmed complaints, so well attested as the result of Magnetic treatment.

Mr. Joseph Moore, County Police Station, Guildford, writes, Sept. 3, 1885: "It is a year since your treatment was commenced, and I can say I am now as well as ever I have been in my life. I wore your appliances from August to May, and since doing so I have had no return of my complaint, and the wound in my side, which the doctor said would never get better, is quite healed up. I am now able to dispense with the garments altogether. I can only thank you for what your treatment has done for me, and shall be pleased to recommend it to anyone."

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

The book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted under his ministry."—Christian Leader.

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ADVANCED CONSUMPTION.—CASE of Mrs. E. REED, of PRESTON, SUSSEX.

The patient is the wife of a Sergeant of Police, Police Station, PRESTON, BRIGHTON.

This case was introduced to me at commencement of April by Mrs. HIBBERT, of COLLEGE PLACE, BRIGHTON, who had recommended my medicine with great success prior to this. The patient commenced ailing about July of last year. Inflammation of the left lung ensued, followed by abscess. She had now been ill in bed for nine months. "Her cough is violent (the writer states), with spitting of blood, great pain in the shoulders, wasting all over; the expectoration is a thick, yellow matter, such as in the last stage of Consumption, and she has a great deal of fever; she has been inhaling iodine and has taken cod-liver oil. Her doctor tells her now the right lung also has begun to go. The case seems far advanced, but there are cases such as this that have recovered that are mentioned in your book." Advice and medicine were at once sent from Coombe Lodge, and afterwards continued until the end of July.

In about three weeks another friend wrote me for this patient (Mrs. Hibbert being away), and reported some favourable change.

On the 2nd of May her husband writes me—cough not troubling her now in the night:—"Before we commenced (he says) she had no sleep night or day for cough; it was distressing to see her; she is now getting better and stronger every day."

Letters of 16th and 28th of May speak of continued improvement. "The day cough and expectoration decreasing, appetite better, strength increasing, able to get outside of the house for a short time."

By the middle of June her husband reports her "able to walk without help; still weak through continuance of night perspirations." This symptom was removed by hot vinegar-and-water sponging (see page 15 of book).

Other letters might be quoted, but suffice it to say she recovered her strength and health so as to come to London and call upon me about the end of August. "People say I am a miracle," were her words. She also called upon me September 14, having left off medicine for some weeks.

MANNA CAKE.

THE "REFUGE" SYSTEM.

By Rev. J. E. LINNELL.

"Down in the human heart, crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried that grace may restore;
Touched by a loving hand, wakened by kindness,
Chords that were broken may vibrate once more."

AH! it is a loving hand, skilled for the work, firm as you please, but still loving, that is needed for the rescue of fallen womanhood.

"Take her up tenderly," says Tom Hood; and he is only thinking of the clay tenement whence the spirit has gone. Take her up much more tenderly, then, you who deal with her while the spirit is left in her. A harsh word, an unkind look, the lack of sympathy at the needful moment, and she has gone down again to depths lower than those from which she was taken, and, most probably, you have lost her for ever.

And how many have been thus lost? Almost saved; and yet, from positive ignorance, or lack of thought, on the part of their would-be saviours, driven back to damnation after all!

Whatever pain may be caused by these remarks, I feel that, while the wrongs of womanhood form the topic of the day, the working of our "Refuge" system must be pondered well, and, if possible, thoroughly revised.

I was once talking to a poor girl, living in Watney-street, St. George's-in-the-East, whom I met at a tea which some kind lady had provided for the unfortunates of that district. A most beautiful girl she was; and, though her clothes were rented at so much per night, she was dressed so well, and so modestly withal, that one might readily have taken her for some lady who had come to preside at one of the tables. Said I, to myself, "She must be saved from the dissolute life she is leading;" and, as she had been more or less impressed by the address to which she had been listening, I felt that, with very little persuasion, I should get her off to a "Refuge" that night. But never shall I forget her scorn at the mention of my proposal. "I have tried a Refuge already," said she, "and such was the treatment I received while there that I will never enter another."

Poor child! I did not so much wonder at her, when I remembered a conversation held with the matron of a "Home" in another part of the country. I had gone to this place to see a young girl who had been literally driven on the streets. Her father had occupied a good position, and she had received a fair education. But her mother died, and her father married, for his second wife, from some large millinery establishment, an Irish Roman Catholic girl, who became a very vixen to the children thus placed beneath her care. My young friend was soon forced to leave home, and, from her point of view, to make her choice between the river and the streets. She reluctantly chose the latter, but her soul revolted at the life she led, and very, very soon she implored a dear friend of mine to get her into a "Refuge." He readily met her wishes, and in about six months' time he asked me to call at the place and learn how she was getting on. The door was opened by one of the inmates, after a good deal of effort expended on the lock. Then, as soon as I had entered, the creaking of the same horrid lock acquainted me with the fact, that for the time being, I, myself, was a prisoner, and fully prepared me for what was to come.

My poor friend was not altogether satisfactory; at least, so said the matron. She had no definite charge to advance against er, but there was a tendency to insubordination in her. "Let me tell you," said she, "what happened the other day, and then you will know the kind of girl she is. I sent her into the garden to plant some stocks, telling her to put them along the border. Well, what must she do, but go and, in a most artistic fashion, arrange them so as to form the words 'God bless our home.' I very soon made her uproot them again," continued my informant, "telling her that I could have designed the same thing had I considered it necessary." And so the lingering love of the beautiful, on which tact might have fastened, and which kindness might have used to the poor child's moral salvation, was crushed by this senseless tyranny. "I cannot remain to endure this," said she; but I believe her desire to reform prevailed, and she actually remained there two years.

Once, when on a visit at this institution, I was made very uneasy by constant screams that proceeded from a room at some distance from where I was sitting in conversation with the matron. At last, I asked their cause—to be told that a very refractory girl had been deprived of her shoes, and fastened in that room, by way of punishment. "Let us go to her," said I, and, accompanied by one of the committee who had just joined us, accordingly we went. The tigress just deprived of her young could not have glared more fiercely upon us than did she when the door was opened, and the petty tyrant who had imprisoned her began to proclaim her many misdeeds in my hearing. Yet, in a very few minutes, sobbing like an infant, poor thing, she was on her knees, and joining me in prayer. I believe it was the question: "Have you a mother?" which unlocked the heart that had been closed to unkindness.

The matron of the "Refuge" is sometimes chosen through the influence of personal friends on the committee, because the place is calculated to suit her. But ought she not, on the other hand, always to be chosen, because calculated to suit the place?

What a pleasure it was, when in Glasgow some few years since, to mark the influence exercised on a large number of girls by their lady-superintendent, Mrs. Nott; and how much have I enjoyed calling at the very much lesser "Home" in Preston, and noticing the confidence gained from the inmates by my worthy friend Miss Scott?

But in many cases where the matron is all that may be desired, the "Refuge" is not what it should be. "Cursed by committees might be written against this work," said the energetic superintendent of one "Home" I visited. And I readily understood her. Good, well-meaning ladies, with but little knowledge of the world, and as little of human nature, were constantly framing vexatious rules for the establishment generally, or seeking to exact reluctantly given homage from the girls individually. Maggie was to remember what had been done for her; and Emily told that her defiant bearing did not become one who had been what she had been; and thus Maggie, Emily, Annie, and others, growing weary of so much of this kind of thing, were ever ready to be off again to the haunts whence they had been taken.

Oh! for more common-sense to be mingled with some folks' piety! "What subject shall you take?" asked this self-same lady, while the girls were assembling to receive an address. "Ruth and Orpah," said I. "Do you know why I asked you?" I instantly grasped the meaning. Nine out every ten clergyman and evangelists who visited the institution took, "The woman who was a sinner," and the girls, it appeared, were wont to say, when the Bible of the speaker was opened, "Here comes the woman who was a sinner." Poor things! I spoke on that occasion in such a manner as, with God's blessing to excite hope; and though I said nothing about sin, except in connection with the sinner's end, nearly every one rose to he feet when I finished, as a mark of anxiety to close in with Christ. I was afterwards taking a mission in Islington, and at one of the after-meetings I found a fine-looking young woman, who asked me if I had forgotten her. I was forced to confess that I had. "I was the first to rise and take your hand," said she, "when you came down to N——r. Now I am working for the rescue of others."

As the "Refuge" is considered a half-way house between degradation and respectability I trust that this subject will receive attention and that fewer evil reports of such places wil have to be taken back to the poor degraded by those who affirm them to be sometimes little better than prisons.

Pavenham Vicarage, near Bedford.

REPLY BY THE SUPERINTENDENT OF A HOME

I have given the above a very careful reading. I know the working of very many Refuges and Homes in the metropolis and country, and am convinced that great kindness to poor girls is the general rule, and that acts of apparent harshness are rare exceptions.

Matrons have very much to try both their patience and faith. The wickedness of men is by no means the sole and entire cause o female demoralisation. Idleness, disinclination to submit to proper authority, bad tempers, pride, &c., all combine to drag girls down to the streets.

Most fervently do I wish that those who seek the rescue of the fallen would aim at the Christian's legitimate point, viz., to seek in all cases, first to bring the subject of the evil of immorality as a grave sin against Almighty God, and then seek Spiritual repentance. Where true contrition for sin is realised, a readiness will be induced to put up with some few inconveniences while passing through a period of necessary probation. I hope ere long a meeting of actual workers will be convened.

EDITORIAL.

There is much truth in what Mr. Linnel says, but we believe also, with the Superintendent, that the old-time Refuge has been to a large extent transformed into the Home. Still, as Miss Leigh intimated, there remains some red tape to be got rid of. The hospita for the reception of those who have been bruised and injured in body or soul, or in both, should have an ever-open door, and the treatment should be at once kind and firm.

No system, whether of the old type or the new, will be so influential for good or evil as the personal character of those engaged in it. In a continental city there is (or was year ago) only one Refuge or Home for the fallen of the weaker sex. It is conducted on the early principle of lock and key and punishment.

We saw a wooden compartment at the end of a room and were told that it contained prisoner in solitary confinement in the dark. Twelve hours was the term of punishment. It grated upon our ears, and we thought how English sentiment would be outraged by such a method. But the lady in command was an embodiment of kindness, as well as an unflinching disciplinarian, and the girls al loved her. It might even be that the very fact of being locked into a Refuge and a Home gave a sense of safety and security to some who had known the depths of Satan as prisoners in one of those ante-chambers o hell, a maison tolérée. Life is mightier than system, and although a good system is of very great importance, it needs to be remembered that a good man will work better in a faulty system, than an indifferent man in a good system. In dealing with our fellow sinners, as in everything else, it seems inevitable that we should try with law, and fail, before we learn the mightier influence of grace.

THE CHRISTIAN HUSBANDMAN.

"The husbandman that laboureth must be the first to partake of the fruits."—2 Tim. ii. 6.

"The husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit, . . . and hath long patience. . . . Be ye also patient." . . .—James v. 7, 8.

PATIENCE must precede fruitfulness, both in the natural and in the spiritual world. Husbandry may be divided into four sections: Ploughing, sowing, watering, reaping.

(1) Ploughing.—"He that plougheth should plough in hope" (1 Cor. ix. 10). Deep ploughing will produce a heavy yield. Mere scratching of the surface will not suffice, the rousing of the feelings and stirring of the emotions is not enough. The secret, unseen thoughts must be turned up, conviction must go deep. "They that plough iniquity and sow wickedness, shall reap the same" (Job. iv. 8). This principle of deep ploughing holds good on the opposite side, and how prolific is the yield therefrom. "The ploughers ploughed upon my back: they made long their furrows" (Ps. cxxix. 3).

Here the ploughing of human hatred has resulted in the marvellous yield of the grace of God to sinners. "Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together (Deut. xxii. 10). God will not sanction the yoking together of the Church and the world for the furtherance of the Gospel. "No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God" (Luke ix. 62). A man, engaged by a farmer to plough, beginning well, but soon ceasing to give his whole attention to his work, will make uneven furrows, and spoil the prospects of harvest. He will be discharged for "looking back," and being attracted by the passers-by. Many a worker began well for the Master, but the passing things of this life have distracted him, and he has been discharged as unfit for responsible work.

(2) Sowing.—When shall we sow? "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand" (Ecc. xi. 6.) Be always at it, and let the children in the morning of life begin to sow, and continue until evening. None are too young, none are too old, whose hearts are full of love to Christ. How shall we sow? Not "sparingly" but "bountifully," according to 2 Cor. ix. 6. The Master loves to do things on a liberal scale. "In tears" (Ps. cxxvi. 5, 6), like the Master Himself, who wept over Jerusalem, at the grave of Lazarus, in the Garden of Gethsemane. Where shall we sow? "Beside all waters" (Is. xxxii. 20). Some waters are clear and sparkling, and the murmur of their ripple gladdens the ear, sow there, of course. But there are turbid, angry waters, fouled and polluted, sow beside them also. Into the bright, sunny, prattling lives of the little ones cast the precious seed, but also, all the more lovingly and skilfully, when the swollen torrents of sin rush past. God is able to make it grow and take root there; and also beside the stagnant pools of stolid Atheism. "Thou canst not tell whether shall prosper, either this or that." It is no use either for us to try and form an opinion as to how far the sowing may prove a success. "He that observeth the wind shall not sow" (Ecc. xi. 4). This is a great temptation. We look out for what we call favourable circumstances, and so miss many a good opportunity.

What shall we sow? "Precious seed" (Ps. cxxvi. 6). "Incorruptible seed" (1 Pet. i. 23). "The Word of God" (Luke viii. 11.) Every promise of God contains a germ of everlasting life. Drop the seeds of promise into human hearts, and they will one day spring up. But we are to remember "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. vi. 7). "He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity" (Prov. xxii. 8). "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind" (Hosea viii. 7). Many Christian families are reaping an awful harvest of whirlwind. The children often hear their parents ridicule the minister's style, and criticise his earnest appeals, or cast doubt on certain portions of God's Word, or excuse themselves on trifling grounds from attendance at church; and these small seeds, apparently such trifles, have taken root, yielding a harvest of scepticism, indifference, and joking over holy things.

(3) Watering.—"Apollos watered" (1 Cor. iii. 6). There is abundant work to be done in watering by those who are unable to sow. Follow up those who have been interested in spiritual things, who have been awakened to a sense of need—write to them, visit them, open your house to them—and thus water by sympathy and prayer the precious seed of the truth of God.

(4) Reaping.—"In due season we shall reap" (Gal. vi. 9), that is God's time. "In Joy" (Ps. cxxvi. 5), that is God's way. "Sheaves," that is God's measure. Be patient, therefore, brethren. God has promised we shall reap, let us believe it, and begin now to look up to Him for the fulfilment of his promise. Is the absence of any visible result an indication that our ploughing and sowing are unblest? Not necessarily. There are many whom God has called to glorify him by patient continuance in well-doing, without their knowing what He is accomplishing by them. Let the absence of manifest result lead to close self-examination, to see if there be any spirit of selfishness or worldliness, or bitterness, checking the manifestation of God's work, and if nothing can be found standing between the work and God, and if a clear testimony for Him is being given, let us wait on Him with confidence for the fulfilment of his promise. One cause of unfruitfulness is the teaching of truths which we have not ourselves experienced. If we speak of the Gospel as saving men from the power and love of the world, and yet have not ourselves been saved from it, or if we try to enforce the need of submission and obedience to God's will, while our own lives are in direct antagonism to our teaching, how can we marvel at there being little, if any, result? The woman who touched the hem of Christ's garment testified of what she had experienced through contact with Him, not what she had learned theoretically.

In 2 Cor. ix. 10, we read: "He that supplieth seed to the sower and bread for food." A similar thought is expressed in Is. lv. 10, 11. His Word gives not only supply for service, but also strength for service, and he who goes forth to sow must first sit down to eat.

And now, after all our ploughing, sowing, watering and watching, how much have we accomplished? Scarce anything. "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase" (1 Cor. iii. 7). The husbandman works by day, but God works by night and by day. It is his ceaseless vigilance, his watchful care, and the power of his own love that cause the up-springing of the seed, and the ripening of the harvest. "Ye are God's husbandry" (1 Cor. iii. 9). What fruit has the Great Husbandman gathered yet from us? Has He not had long patience with us, and is He not still patient? When we are inclined to be impatient over our work, and sigh for fruit, let us think how much we may be trying his patience. Let our lives be fruitful to Him, and He will see to the fruitfulness of our work in others.

PEACE AND THE GENERAL ELECTION.

THE following address to Christian ministers has been issued by the Lancashire Committee of the Peace Society:—

Dear Sir,—In view of the approaching appeal to the country, when so many electors will be entering for the first time upon their serious and important trust, the Committee of the Peace Society, meeting in Manchester, desire very respectfully to invite you, as a minister of the Gospel, to take an early opportunity of specially urging upon your congregation the duty that belongs to a highly professing country like England to strive to uphold the full standard of Christian morality in its intercourse with other nations.

By the providence of God this country holds at the present time a prominent position in the van of Christian civilisation. The nations look to her to lead the way. Through Divine help she has been already enabled to do noble work in the advancement of civil and religious liberty, in the abolition of slavery, and in the promotion of freedom of commerce and friendly intercourse between the inhabitants of different countries. But war still remains the reproach of the Christian Churches and the great impediment to the spread of the Gospel. Europe groans under the weight of continually increasing military establishments. Standing armaments of five millions of men, at an annual cost to the nations of over three hundred millions sterling, represent the "armed peace" of Europe at the present time. Such a condition of things is as dangerous as it is oppressive: and it surely ought to excite the earnest solicitude of all the followers of the Prince of Peace.

It is, however, in the intimate relation of this question with religion and morality and the spread of Christianity in the world that your attention is now earnestly invited to it. A growing love for peace, and a growing hatred of war and its unchristian practices, are apparent among the people. But this feeling needs to be diligently fostered, and Christian ministers can render important help in this direction. As this pacific tendency of the rising democracy comes to be rooted in Christian principle—in the love of God and the brotherhood of man—it will create by degrees a settled public opinion that will insist upon statesmen uniformly adopting a just and conciliatory attitude towards other nations, and will require them steadily to aim at settling all international disputes in a friendly and reasonable spirit.

Your kind help in this blessed work of the Peacemaker is earnestly solicited.—On behalf of the Committee, William Pollard, Secretary.

Peace Society, 12, King-street, Manchester.

P.S.—The Committee will be glad to forward, to any friends of peace, papers and information on the subject.

Notes and Comments.

NO parts of a communication are generally more indistinctly written than the names of persons and places. We beg our readers to save themselves and us the annoyance of errors in print, by writing distinctly. Other words can be made out by the context, but there is nothing to help the printer in reading names.

We have had in the hands of the artists for some time our "CHRISTIAN ALMANACK" for 1886, in the centre of which there is a striking portrait of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, produced in colours, by which is secured an effect similar to an oil-painting. We little thought that before this portrait was completed the revered Earl would have passed away from our midst.

Many of our readers are annoyed because they find a notification at the end of so many articles that funds are needed. We sympathise with them; and yet they must know that no work can be carried on without funds. We beg our readers to bear this always in mind. We shall, for our part, endeavour to confine appeals to special needs.

The full programme of the October meeting of the Congregational Union, to be held in the Staffordshire Potteries, has many points of strong interest. They are such as Special Missions, the Children of Christians, the present temper regarding Foreign Missionary Work, Home and Social Purity, Christian Recreation, and a meeting on Total Abstinence.

Precision and conciseness are as valuable in theology as in natural science, as in both it frequently happens that the meaning is obscured by words. Some men possess, in an eminent degree, the faculty of presenting, in a few words, the greatest truths. Take, in illustration, the following from one of the pulpit utterances of a well-known clergyman, now deceased:—"Baptism proclaims the child of God. The Romanist says it creates him." "The order of Christian life is from within to that which is without; from the spiritual truth to the material expression of it. The Roman order is from the outward to the creation of the inward."

How different from this are Dr. Pusey's often laboured sentences, and what a wide gulf between the beliefs of the two divines. One would be tempted to smile at some of Dr. Pusey's opinions if they did not fill us with sorrow. Speaking of unbaptized children, the leader of the Tractarian heresy said:—

> "It is now the universal belief that although children who had not been made members of Christ are not admitted to that bliss which Christ purchased for us—the Beatific Vision of God, yet since they were not created for it, they do not feel any loss, but lead lives of natural happiness—a happiness which has one element wanting to that of adults still in the flesh, that they never, in thought, word, or deed, knew of actual sin against God who made them."

It is evident that Dr. Pusey himself shrank from his own opinion, and that the man's heart cried out against the theologian, and it is hardly necessary to assert that a dogmatic statement from which every one who has the Spirit of the Master must needs dissent, cannot fairly be termed a universal belief.

Without expressing a party opinion on the matter, it is evident that the question of Disestablishment will soon profoundly agitate the country. We notice, therefore, a very timely sermon lately preached in Lichfield Cathedral. The question, argued Canon Curties, should be approached in a spirit of good temper, with a keen sense of justice, a sound practical judgment, and with the remembrance that the Church is not man's, but Christ's.

This controversy on Disestablishment is testing the spirit of men. It is painfully demonstrating that many utterly fail to distinguish between the external and the spiritual Church. In the numerous letters on the subject, which we have read in The Guardian and Record, low and even questionable considerations against Disestablishment are urged. Arguments that from a period anterior to the Conquest the Church was an integral part of the nation, and that the main point is that of Disendowment, may be of value or otherwise; but, while the whole nation is looking on, it behoves Churchmen to base their objections on higher and Scriptural grounds.

The following important correspondence has taken place between Mr. Walter Shirley, the Liberal candidate for the Doncaster Division of Yorkshire, and the Rev. Henry Sandwith, Vicar of Thorpe Salvin, a resident elector in the constituency:—

"Thorpe Salvin Vicarage, Worksop,
"Sept. 29, 1885.

"DEAR SIR,—I venture, as an elector, to trouble you with a question on the subject of Disestablishment. I am well aware, from your public utterances, that you are theoretically in favour of that measure, but I am anxious to know what you are prepared to do in the next Parliament. If, without any fresh appeal to the people on this momentous subject, you will be willing to vote for the Disestablishment and Disendowment of the English Church, then I, although a consistent Liberal of many years' standing, and thoroughly in accord with the rest of Mr. Gladstone's manifesto, must, with much regret, deny myself the pleasure of giving you my vote, and whatever influence I may possess.

"It will not satisfy me to be assured that, most likely, the subject will not, in the face of other pressing matters, come on the carpet in the ensuing Parliament. But, in the uncertain temper of an immense democracy, it may, and I must respectfully press for an answer as to what you would do then.—Awaiting the favour of a reply,

"Believe me, dear Sir, faithfully yours,
"HENRY SANDWITH.

"Walter S. Shirley, Esq.

"P.S.—I reserve to myself the liberty of making what use of this letter, and of your reply, I may think fit."

"Doncaster, Sept. 30, 1885.

"DEAR SIR,—It is refreshing to find here and there a Liberal clergyman, and it gives me great pleasure to reply to your letter. I sincerely wish that more clergymen would look upon Disestablishment from the same sensible standpoint.

"You are quite right in saying that I am 'theoretically in favour of Disestablishment;' but I will certainly not support any Bill with that object until the question has been definitely made the subject of appeal to the country; for I think no Government would be justified in dealing with it without a distinct mandate from the electors.

"I have always said the question was not likely to be made an issue at the next general election; and, judging from Mr. Gladstone's manifesto and the recent speeches of Mr. Chamberlain and other leaders of the Liberal Party, I take this to be now absolutely certain.

"I should, therefore, oppose any attempt to deal with it in the next Parliament.

"I am, dear Sir, yours very faithfully,
"WALTER SHIRLEY.

"Rev. Henry Sandwith, M.A.,
"Vicar of Thorpe Salvin."

There could be no mistake made more menacing to Great Britain than for magistrates and police to give proof of unfairness, and provoke a conflict which will leave Socialists masters of the situation. Socialists are not all Communists, but the more moderate party may come to make common cause with Anarchists and with such Freethinkers as have just passed a resolution at Antwerp that "moral responsibility does not exist." There are dangerous elements among us, and, if they do not mind, magistrates and police may incautiously develope a state of things they did not intend, and help Socialists to prove that at short notice they can bring together tens of thousands of the people.

The "Mind Cure" brought out some pleasant banter from The Times when it was first heard of in England. In America, so it is stated in The Laws of Life, the new cure is assuming an unobjectionable and wholesome form. No one can doubt the power of mind over the body. The new teaching, therefore, is not to think about maladies any more than can be helped; to direct the thoughts outside ourselves; to concentrate the intellect and emotions on the Divine love; not to yield to bodily depression; to ask help for self-abnegation, and not to remit efforts for self-government; to regulate the life in order and simplicity; and to cherish hope and confidence in God. This is the new curative process.

About fifty years ago a distinguished Court physician, Dr. Hilton, brought out an English book on "Rest." It had a wide sale, and showed, by innumerable cases, that bodily and mental rest alone had been the method of cure for almost every kind of complaint. There need be no mystery then about "Mind Cure," nor a resort to hypotheses of magic, electro-biology, and so-called psychic forces. John Wesley used to say he was too busy to be hurried. And, avoiding worry or discontent, both of which eat into the very fibres of strength, we may fittingly recall the Lord's words in the pressure of our modern life, "Come ye apart into a desert place and rest awhile."

Another note on the subject of Health is called for. Herbert Spencer says: "All breaches of the law of health are physical sins." Wendell Holmes wrote earlier: "It is a sin to be sick." But sickness which is borne for the sake of others may have a blessing in it, and there is a finding of the life by losing it. Nevertheless, the work of the Lord may be hindered by self-induced complaints, and doubtless cholera of late has been invited by human neglects. In all such cases we must be careful how we charge God with bringing disease, and we may with faith and hope remember the word, "I am the Lord that healeth thee."

We desire again to call the special attention of our friends to the publication of the interesting little book entitled "The Conversion of Lydia Montefiore." We trust that many will read it and also procure copies to give to their Jewish neighbours; and, as the result, may they be led to do what Lydia urges them to do: "Search the Scriptures, and find through them the Lord Jesus as their own Messiah and Saviour." It is published at this office, price 9d.

The friends of the London Missionary Society in Bristol have made an effort to raise £4000 towards the debt of £11,000 by which the Society is so seriously hampered. The appeal has been generously responded to, and gifts or promises to the amount specified have been received.

It is unfortunate that poor-rates should be heaviest in the most distressed districts. In some of the Irish unions the pressure is excessive, the poundage reaching as high as six shillings, and that, too, in the very districts where the people find it hardest to live.

The bitterness engendered by the collection of such crushing rates is intensified by the impression that only a portion of the sum reaches the destitute poor. In 1884, for instance, the total cost of maintaining the inmates of the workhouses in Ireland was £443,761, and the outdoor relief amounted to £181,210. The "administration" of this relief cost no less than £308,288, or nearly fifty per cent. Perhaps the infusion of a little more practical Christianity into the working of the Poor Law would be found the best economy, for it certainly would seem that, under the present arrangements, it is necessary to spend twopence in order to give a penny.

The popular idea that England can claim an unworthy and unenviable pre-eminence as regards the frequency of suicide is very far from accurate; for, as a matter of fact, Germany takes the lead with 469 per million as compared with the 74 per million of Great Britain. In England, the eighth in rotation of the European countries, the increase during the past five years has been 7 per million, in Germany the increase has been 170 per million during the same period.

The painful statistics of suicide show, too, beyond doubt, that there are more suicides in summer than in winter, and in low-lying districts as compared with mountainous. A high rate of madness and of suicide seems to run along parallel lines with our advanced thought and civilisation, and it is far from certain that we have not been progressing somewhat too quickly. Myriads of men today are living lives of so restless a nature, physically and mentally, that there is no room in them for that peace which the world can neither give nor take away.

In a recent sermon upon Spiritualism, a Roman Catholic preacher, Father Clarke, urged that the Roman Catholic Church recognises prayer to the blessed, and prayer for the dead, "death raises no absolutely impassable barrier between this world and the next," and that although there is an "abstract possibility of other communications with the spiritual world," the Church opposes those who deal with them. "The very idea of anyone receiving money to induce him to be the means of communication between a man and his deceased friend is repulsive, and contrary to common sense," said the preacher.

In Ireland the half-starved relatives of a deceased person frequently sell and pawn all their little goods in order to pay for the masses which they are taught to believe are necessary in order to reduce the purgatorial punishment. The ceremony is a somewhat costly one to the bereaved poor, and it would not be out of keeping with the above sentiments if Father Clarke and his brethren were to refrain from receiving money for performing such offices when the sorrowing people are as poor as they are ignorant.

"The Dissenting meeting-house has collapsed, and the Dissenting Sunday-school superintendent has joined the Church, so the district is wholly free from schism." This intelligence, which finds a place in a religious weekly, has reference to the proceedings at a harvest festival held recently in the school-chapel of a little hamlet in Lancashire, where, doubtless, before the school-chapel was built, a few godly men and women did their best to teach and preach Christ, and Him crucified. That a larger work should take the place of a smaller one is not to be deplored; but it is to be regretted that the historian of the fact did not, when writing, remember the little narrative contained in Luke ix. 49, 50.

Already in Ireland a little cloud no bigger than a man's hand seems to foretell a coming storm between the politicians and the prelates. Mr. Parnell has for too long a time been accustomed to absolute rule to take kindly now to the dictation of Dr. Walsh and the parish priests, and, as, on the other hand, Rome is not likely to follow the lead of a layman and a Protestant, any very close union between the two parties seems to be out of the question. It will be interesting, however, to watch their movements, for, whatever may be thought of their harmlessness, both, doubtless will give evidence that they are wise as serpents.

Rev. E. P. and Mrs. Hammond recently visited Miss Pryde's Home for English Young Women, in Paris, and, although they have not been able to write an account of it, they warmly commend it to the sympathy and support of English Christians, as a highly valuable and deserving work on behalf of their young fellow countrywomen in often difficult and perilous circumstances. Miss Pryde's address is 22, Rue des Acacias, Avenue de la Grande Armée, Paris.

"Where ignorance is bliss," they say,
"'Tis folly to be wise;"
But where it leads to misery,
I don't think this applies.

It appears from an account in The Times, that Dr. Ferrier's late experiments have been such as these:—

> "In one series of experiments the hinder lobes of the large brain were removed to test the effect on sight; in others a convolution in the temporal region was removed to test the effect on hearing; in others the frontal regions of the brain were almost entirely destroyed, and temporary paralysis of the lateral movements of the head and eyes was the result. The 'experiments had to be repeated and varied,' and the 'animals operated upon, after recovery from the injury, showed some mental deterioration, characterised by general apathetic indifference or purposeless unrest.'"

Does anyone believe that He whose tender mercies are over all his works ever intended that knowledge should be acquired by such cruelties as these? or that He will reveal through such operations the secrets of wisdom?

"A Country Director" has the most thorough disbelief in the "commercial depression" and "loss of interest in missions" theories. In a letter to The Nonconformist and Independent, he proposes that a few changes, such as the following, in the methods of management which would strike a chord of sympathy throughout all the churches, and revive their zeal in a wonderful degree:—

(1) That the Directors should use up all their stock straightway, never keep a reserve fund, but trust in the Lord with all their hearts. (2) That the present method of printing the list of subscriptions be done away with, and simply the names of places from which money has been received and the amount published; for if we honour men we lose touch with God in a proportionate degree. (3) He has a very deep conviction that a lack of prayer is the real secret of the present troubles. Prayerfulness should pervade our whole organisation, and dependence on God, not looking to man, should distinguish the working of the Society. Therefore he desires to see a weekly prayer-meeting established at the mission-house in the board-room (which seats 180) on Saturday or other afternoons.

Such a service (adds this wise and spiritually minded Director) would be a central meeting-place for all interested in missions. Missionaries, missionary students, and directors would be brought into touch with one another, and with the best workers in London and country. Upon the missionary students in particular such a prayer-meeting would have the best effect. In a service such as this, Madagascar would be remembered in her trial, Central Africa in her despair, and New Guinea in her hope.

Not only the Society specially addressed, but all our churches, societies, and missions, will do well to take earnest heed to the concluding sentences of this appeal:

> "If we want funds, let us meet and ask God for money, and, in God's name, let us not be guilty of the folly of merely issuing circulars in a formal manner. When our constituents see that we are really trusting God they will untie their purse strings, and give us all we want. At present the intellect of our people in regard to the work is enlightened; but something has quenched their emotional view of it, and I believe the secret is that our churches want to see a mode of management more inspired by faith and piety than it is at present. People will always give when their hearts are moved, and I know of no other way of doing this than by the spirit of consecration that makes God our one and only hope in all our work."

Mr. Sutherst has done well to call attention to the overworking of railway servants. A Midland guard worked $194\frac{1}{2}$ hours in twelve days; an engine-driver $105\frac{3}{4}$ hours in one week. In one case a fireman actually worked thirteen days in a week. Comment is needless.

On the afternoon of Sunday week, to a deeply-interested company of steerage and other passengers on board the ss. City of Rome, in mid Atlantic, Miss von Finkelstein gave a most instructive talk on social life in Jerusalem. This lady, who was born and has spent the greater part of her life in Palestine, is now on a visit to this country. After a period of rest she purposes giving public lectures on subjects relating to life in the Holy Land, as confirmatory of Scripture teaching, illustrated by native costumes, &c. Both by natural gifts and intimate knowledge she is well suited for the work she has undertaken, and we trust many of our Churches will avail themselves of her services. Particulars may be obtained by addressing her, care of Thomas Cook & Son, Ludgate-circus, London, E.C.

Friday last was the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness' marriage—their silver wedding. There was a specially happy gathering for praise and prayer at Harley House, with between two and three hundred friends—praise for twenty-five years of "goodness and mercy," and prayer for the work of the Institute during the session that has just commenced. During the afternoon meeting Mr. Guinness read some letters recently received from his son, Harry; the Lord has been very remarkably blessing his evangelistic work in Tasmania and Australia. Mr. Guinness spoke in the evening upon some of the lessons learnt in a quarter of a century of Christian work and experience.

We hear, with deep regret, that Miss Mittendorff's Orphan Home, Clayton House, Epsom, is in very urgent need of help at present.

We have received from Pastor Chiniquy a few copies of his "Fifty Years in Rome." The tearful story of the young Canadian lady, whose death of a broken heart, brought about by the horrors of the Confessional, was one of the steps leading to the deliverance of Father Chiniquy from Rome, is a most affecting and effective illustration of the debasing character of that atrocious institution, with which, nevertheless, Romanising false Protestants are labouring to curse our English nation. The book is a bulky octavo volume, of 832 pages, and can be obtained at this office for one guinea, carriage free.

It has been remarked by some that the late Earl of Shaftesbury did not take any very active or pronounced part in promoting the spread of Total Abstinence principles. With so many other good works in hand, it is little wonder that he was not prominent in the Temperance reform, but it must not, therefore, be supposed that his warmest sympathies did not lie in that direction. In Mr. A. Gustafson's remarkable book, "The Foundation of Death" (Kegan Paul), these weighty words, spoken by his lordship to the author, are quoted :—

> "It is absolutely impossible to do anything to permanently or considerably relieve poverty until we have got rid of the curse of drink."

Truth is almost alone among the secular papers in speaking a fair, not to say a kindly, word for Mr. Stead :—

> "That Mr. Stead and his friends should have been committed for trial was a foregone conclusion. Motive may weigh with a jury, and if a verdict be found against a man, it may weigh with a judge in pronouncing sentence. A magistrate has, however, only to look to the letter of the law. If he considers that there is primary evidence against an individual of having done an illegal act, he is bound to send the issue to a jury. Mr. Vaughan, however, went entirely beyond his functions in expressing his views upon articles in The Pall Mall Gazette, and in asserting that they had greatly lowered the English people in the estimate of foreign nations. These articles were not before him; and they had absolutely nothing to do with the question whether or not the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette had violated the law in regard to Eliza Armstrong."

The case is stated in a nutshell in the following paragraph in the same paper :—

> "The case is pretty clear. Mr. Stead wished to prove that certain things could be done, and he sought to prove this by doing them. He desired Mrs. Jarrett to obtain a child for certain purposes from her parents. On this Mrs. Jarrett and a Mrs. Broughton induced Mrs. Armstrong to part with her daughter Eliza. Mrs. Armstrong was told that Eliza was to go to a situation at Croydon. No mention was made of wages, Eliza was dressed up in new clothes, and was taken away by Mrs. Jarrett. Here assertion becomes conflicting. Five pounds was undoubtedly expended, and Mrs. Armstrong's husband showed that his view of the transaction was unfavourable to her by blackening her eyes. Eliza was taken to a house kept by a Madame Mourez. She was received there without any protest on account of her age, and then a sort of dramatic representation of what might have occurred had she really been brought there by ill-disposed persons took place. After this, she was sent away to France, and there seems to have been placed in a respectable situation. In the meantime, the articles in The Pall Mall Gazette, and particularly one giving some account of the adventures of a certain Lily, attracted the attention of the neighbours of Mrs. Armstrong, and they seem to have accused her of selling her child. Stung by this accusation, Mrs. Armstrong went to the police. The child's whereabouts were eventually stated by Mr. Stead, and, after an attempt to induce the mother to assent to the child remaining in the situation that had been found for her, she was restored to her parents."

The following circular has been issued, and copies may be obtained from the Office of the Defence Fund, 5, Bishopsgate-street Within, London, E.C. :—

> "Sir,—You are aware that Mr. Stead and Mr. Bramwell Booth, and certain of their assistants, have been committed for trial at the Central Criminal Court. This will not imply approval of all the means adopted by Mr. Stead and his friends, nor any opinion on the merits of the case now before the Court, but only a desire to see fair play, and that those persons who have been instrumental in securing a great reform of the law and of public opinion, and who have been actuated by the most virtuous motives, should not be crushed for want of money.
> "The necessary expenses of the defence will be very large, and are estimated at over £5000. But even such an expenditure cannot be regretted if, as is confidently expected, the trial shall have the effect of giving greater impulse to the present moral movement. Please address your reply to the treasurers, care of P. W. Bunting, Esq., 11, Old-square, Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C., to whom subscriptions should be sent, which the donor may, if he desires, appropriate to the expenses of any particular defendant."

A large and telling placard, addressed "To the British Nation," and setting forth some facts relating to the prosecution of Mr. Stead and Mr. Booth, has been prepared by the Defence Committee, 5, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C. The surprising circumstance is emphasised, that while the real perpetrators of crime are left undisturbed, the money of the nation is being freely used to prosecute the very persons who have brought these dastardly crimes to light. Parcels of the placard will be sent free to any part of the kingdom; we hope the friends of morality will send for copies, and have them displayed in every town and village throughout the land.

> "Almost the last—if it was not the very last—public utterance of the revered and beloved Earl Shaftesbury was the speech at the Mansion House on July 10, at the meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, in which, speaking with the rich experience of half a century passed in constant endeavour to raise the standard of public and private morality, he struck at once at the root of the question when he declared that the only hope of progress was in exciting and educating public opinion. He said: 'Before we can make any great advance there must be a considerable movement in public opinion. It must be vigorous and determined, and it is our duty to bring that voice of public opinion to bear on this question. In order to do so effectually you must never be silent, but go about crying, "Unclean, unclean!" and not relax your efforts until some determined steps have been taken. Law can be evaded in every possible way. The only thing that defies evasion is a widespread and universally extended public opinion. I think we must have an entirely new agency at work to discover and stop these crimes. I hope that we shall be able to create such a public feeling. The plague-spot is too deep, too wide, and there are too many persons interested in the continuance of it, to enable us easily to wipe it out. Uncommon energy will be necessary, and I hope we shall raise such an amount of popular indignation that the effect will be irresistible.'"

Manifestly Mr. Stead, from whose paper the above is quoted, must have been greatly influenced by this penetrative and outspoken utterance from the aged and saintly Earl.

A classically-educated man and a classical schoolmaster is glad to see Truth opposing "the classical education nuisance." He says :—

> "Modern languages and sciences, properly taught, can give a mental discipline of the same sort and value as dead languages and pure mathematics. Their practical value decides the question in their favour. It is gradually becoming easier to get masters who can teach modern subjects with the same thoroughness with which a good classical master teaches Latin and Greek, and at the same time exercise an equally valuable influence over the boys, who are, to put it shortly, gentlemen and disciplinarians, as well as capable teachers. Cambridge has lately set an example which will do as much to raise the standard of scholarship in modern languages."

A great possible gain to good morals is here indicated.

Mr. Henry Varley has written the following letter to Captain Morley, in relation to the licensing of the London Pavilion :—

> "Sir,—I write to you in your capacity of Chairman of the Middlesex Bench of Licensing Magistrates. On Thursday last, at Clerkenwell, you said, in relation to the New London Pavilion Music Hall, 'that the judgment of the Bench was that this license should be granted.' I desire to ask how it comes about that, with the knowledge your worshipful Bench possesses concerning the notoriously immoral character of this house, you could make such a statement? With the well-known fact before you that for a lengthened period this house has been the constant resort of profligate men and women, how could such a judgment be given? It is known to some of the magistrates that on the boards of this palace of shame women have been seen dancing in close-fitting flesh-coloured costume, so arranged and painted that to the audience they appeared absolutely nude. In the face of these facts, was not your judgment corrupt, and a practical endorsement of the vice and crime so long continued in this stronghold of wickedness? I place on record the most solemn protest against the action of your worshipful bench, and do not hesitate to describe that action as a distinct premium placed upon vice and crime. In my judgment it is monstrous that out of so large a number of magistrates thirty gentlemen (the number present) should have the power to put the law on the side of vice and crime by giving license to this splendid temple of licentiousness. Were you not aware that a sum of £15,000 was dependent upon the affirmative judgment of the Bench? Was it seemly for the Middlesex Bench of Magistrates to allow this corrupt compact to pass unchallenged? In harmony with the opinion of large numbers of my fellow-citizens, I hold that no more corrupt judgment has been given in this generation. I think it right to say that I intend publishing this letter, in order to bring to public notice the action of your worshipful Bench concerning this notorious house.—Believe me to remain, yours faithfully, KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—It will be seen on our announcement page that the meetings usually held at Miss Mason's House of Rest, Kilburn, are now resumed for the winter season.

MR. C. H. SPURGEON AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—On Monday afternoon, Sept. 28, Mr. Spurgeon delivered an address in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House in connection with the London Banks Prayer Union. The first anxiety of every man, he said, should be to get into the kingdom of God, and the next object should be to continue there, to be loyal subjects, to be obedient to every command, and to enjoy every privilege of that kingdom. The next business should be to spread that kingdom, and to bring others to Christ. This should be the life-work of each man. But to the seeking of God's kingdom was added a command to seek "his righteousness," by which was meant the practical part of true religion. Let them aspire after a high degree of holiness. If they were living as they ought to live they ought to promote everything that was pure, honest, and of good repute. He did not want to argue there about the sad wickedness of these days. Each man in his own position should labour after purity. Every Christian man should have a hand in every fight for virtue and goodness. The religion of Christ was not to save one's-self only, but to make a man a warrior for everything that was pure, and to fight everything that was evil.—City Press.

TROUBLES IN BASUTOLAND.

SIR,—I ask your prayers for our dear mission. May the Lord incline the hearts of many of his children to remember us before the Throne of Grace. At present the whole land is visited with a very severe drought. For several months past not a drop of rain has fallen. The people (natives) have sown wheat on a very large scale in these last winter months, and it is sad to see the tender blades withering for want of moisture. One of the principal chiefs, although a heathen, last week begged the missionary of this place (Mr. Mabille) to make special prayer that the Lord would be pleased to look in his great mercy upon the Basutos, and send down his blessed rain, so that famine should not destroy them. The chief himself was prevented by sickness from being present at the meeting held last Sunday, but sent two of his sons to represent him. They came with a large number of their followers, and I think at least 2500 persons were assembled, thus giving us (the missionaries) and many native Christians an opportunity to exhort, warn, and entreat for mercy. Other churches attached to our mission will also hold meetings for special prayer. Our neighbours in the Orange Free State have appointed September 6 as a day of humiliation and prayer, for their land is also suffering very severely.

I regret to say the smuggling of Cape brandy into this country, by Boers, to which I alluded in my letter of June, is still continuing, and greatly demoralising the natives. The representatives of the British Government, who are supposed to direct our affairs, have no force to assist them in their desire to suppress this odious traffic. Some of the chiefs encourage it; others, however, are becoming alarmed by the insubordination it creates among their people, and are now trying to arrest its progress; but the Boer is not easily diverted from his project.

My son (who was once a worker with dear Miss McPherson) has lately visited several of our out-stations, directed by native teachers in this district, and although no notice had been given of his intended visit, he was rejoiced to find the schools well attended, and the work in general giving much encouragement.

It is with great pleasure many members of our mission read the details given by The Christian of the efforts made to check immorality, and to arouse all England to repent and turn to the Lord ere his judgments are poured out on the nation on account of its connivance with certain forms of vice. May you, dear Sir, be abundantly blessed in all you are doing for this end, and may you soon see glorious results.—Believe me to remain yours sincerely,

Hamilton Moore Dyke,
Paris Mission.

Morija, Basutoland, S. Africa, Aug. 27.

In another letter, dated September 2, Mr. Dyke says: Having sent you a cry of distress, it is but right and honest that I should tell you of a great deliverance which has been granted by the Lord. I mentioned that on the preceding Sunday, an influential chief, although a heathen, had requested the Church in this place to make special intercession that the Lord would extend his great mercy to the land and avert famine. On the day after I had posted my letter to you, the sky being as brass above us and the earth like stone, black clouds suddenly arose, and soon the blessed showers began to fall, the first real rain we had seen for nearly five months. For the last five days we have had the joy of seeing heavy rain or showers watering the fields and refreshing the pasturage.

It is not only Basutoland which is thus favoured, but the Free State and other parts have had a share in the blessing. Thus the Day of Supplication and Humiliation which is appointed in the Free State for the 6th inst. may well be also a day of devout thanksgiving. Would that these heathens could recognise God's hand in this, his act of mercy, in covering the land with precious rain.

On the day we were holding our great meeting for prayer at Morija, other meetings were being held in different parts of the country, and were well attended, especially I may mention one, which took place at the town of a son of Letsie; he has great influence in the tribe, he is still a heathen, and moreover, a great brandy-drinker. His eyes seem, however, to be now opened to the greatness of the evil caused by this abominable drink. He foresees that ruin will come on the tribe if the Boer brandy-seller is permitted to pour in the poison, as he has lately been doing. He has, therefore, had some arrested and taken before the British authorities to be heavily fined. He requested two of our missionary brethren to hold a service on August 23, in his town, in which, before a large assembly of his people, this chief (Lerotholi), whilst confessing his own weakness and love for brandy, which he knows his health is suffering from, entreated his people to refrain from its use, and promised to do all that was in his power to prevent smugglers from coming into his distrrict. Our missionaries and some of our native catechists had an opportunity of setting before the people the fatal consequences which must result from drink, and also for urging them not to resist the calls of God, but to turn to Him, who alone can save both body and soul. It is truly a subject for praise that on one Sabbath several thousands of these natives can be brought together to hear the blessed invitations of the Gospel. The Temperance work, I am glad to say, is gaining ground.

Messrs. MOODY and SANKEY AT WORK.

[BY OUR OWN COMMISSIONER.]

THE old saying about prophets not being without honour save in their own country, would not seem to have any sort of application to these evangelists, whose names are—

> "Familiar in our mouths as household words."

No reader of The Christian needs to be convinced of their great and abiding popularity throughout the British isles. From time to time I have avouched it in these pages from personal testimony; for I have been an eye-witness of their public work in almost every corner of the three kingdoms. Now that I have enjoyed the added privilege of seeing them in their own homes and among their own people, I have the same story to tell.

Among the last things I did, before quitting the American shores, was to visit the little town of Orange, in the State of New Jersey—some half-an-hour's ride by rail to the south of the city of New York—where the evangelists were holding a four days' mission with all the old-time success. This, however, was not their start-off in Gospel work for the fall of the year. The Northfield Convention was scarce a fortnight gone by when the evangelists were preaching and singing the old, old story at that fashionable watering-place, Newport, Rhode Island. I was then in Canada, and could not see for myself how their message was received by the votaries of recreative pleasure that flock thither in the bathing season from New York and Boston. Vast assemblages are now considered so much a matter of course in connection with the labours of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey that the daily newspapers take little notice of what in other circumstances would be a phenomenon worth recording in columns of close print. The Newport meetings, I understand, were no exception to the rule. Then short visits were made to places within easy distance of Northfield, in some cases by the evangelists singly. After my visit to Canada, Chicago, &c., I returned to Northfield, in order to see the schools in full working order after the summer recess. There I found Mr. Moody on the eve of departing for Brookfield, Mass., where he was to be joined in the work of the Gospel by Messrs. Mateer and Parker, evangelists from England. These brethren were to continue the special services after Mr. Moody had left. They are certainly fortunate in having such an auspicious introduction to an anticipated campaign in the United States, and I trust they may have an abundant success wherever they may be called to labour.

Orange, whither Mr. Moody next went, and where he was rejoined by Mr. Sankey, is, as I have said, but a short run from the metropolitan city of New York. It lies in a pleasant and well-wooded valley, and is the residential resort of many well-to-do men of business. I was given to understand, on good authority, that the hill-sides round about the little town are dotted with the handsome dwellings of successful traders; that in these parts, in short, millionaires are so plentiful as to be of little account. Though the population of the town is comparatively small (I seemed to compass the whole place in less than an hour's walk), it is more than usually influential in proportion to its size.

The friends who invited the evangelists had evidently gone to work with a will, and were bent on making the most of the occasion. They hired a large skating rink (one or more of these appear to be indispensable to every American town; they work much mischief, and the sooner they are given up the better), and had it seated so as to accommodate over 4000 persons. This would probably exceed the entire muster-roll of the inhabitants, old and young, but there are other towns not far distant. On the evening of Sunday, the opening day, the rink was crowded to excess, and I believe thousands more failed to get in. I was present at the meeting on Monday evening, and the scene from the platform brought vividly to my remembrance many of the monster gatherings I had witnessed in the old country. Mr. Moody preached on "Seeking the Lord" with all that impassioned fervour that makes one feel each time he never spoke so earnestly before. I have heard him deliver that discourse a good many times, but this time it seemed to me to be unusually realistic and impressive. Towards the close of the sermon he told the story of a Mr. Long, with whom he worked when a lad at Northfield, who resisted the strivings of the Spirit so often and so long that the heavenly monitor left him, and he became a gibbering idiot, meeting every inquirer with the words of the text he had scorned, and which became to him a sort of death dirge: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." One lovely moonlit evening, shortly after Convention time, Mr. Moody drove me around, and we passed the house where Mr. Long had lived in the days of that worldly prosperity that had been to him the snare of the devil, and killed his promptings to a better life. With all this fresh in my recollection, the story of his terrible end came home to me with a wonderful impressiveness, and it seemed to exercise a like effect on the crowded congregation that listened with breathless interest. Mr. Sankey sang his best, and was ably supported by a splendid choir. The Baptist Church across the street was filled for the after-meeting, which was almost as interesting and hopeful a season as I ever remember in connection with the work of these evangelists.

It was with unfeigned sorrow that I spoke a last farewell to Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey next morning, and returned to New York, preparatory to sailing for England by the City of Rome on the following day. Since reaching the American shores, I had spent many pleasant and profitable hours in their company, both in private and in public; I do not envy the man who has had that experience, and is not loath to bid them good-bye, even with the prospect of meeting them again at no very distant date. As I shook hands with Mr. Moody, I asked when we might expect to see him again in Old England. He could not exactly say, but he fondly hoped to visit Palestine some time or other, if the Lord spared him. To accomplish that he must at least pass this way. Meantime I may confidently invite every reader of these lines to pray that God's richest blessing will rest on the continued and abundant labours of these beloved brethren, as they seek to carry the message of salvation to the masses of their countrymen scattered up and down the great American continent. Their present engagements extend to the close of the present year. The dawn of another will probably find them entering on their loved Gospel work in some of the great Southern centres of population.

PALESTINE.—Mr. W. Lethaby, who has undertaken a mission to Palestine, affirms that the Mussulmans are not so fanatical as supposed; but, though very ignorant, they are disposed to listen to the Gospel. A Rabbi asked why Jesus did not show Himself to the Sanhedrim after his resurrection, to which Mr. Lethaby replied: "They have Moses and the prophets; if they will not hear them, neither would they be persuaded if one rose from the dead."—L'Evangéliste.

WITH MISS MACPHERSON IN CANADA.

[BY OUR OWN REPORTER.]

IN the course of my wanderings on the western side of the Atlantic, full as they were of ever fresh and stirring interest, nothing afforded me more genuine satisfaction than the six or seven days spent in Canada. Four of these were almost wholly taken up in visiting the homes of some of the children whom Miss Macpherson has transplanted from the hotbeds of physical and spiritual malaria in London, and other British cities, to the pure and healthful spaces of the Dominion. I have often heard our sister tell the pathetic stories of these children—their sorrow, misery, and rescue from a fate worse than death itself. Many a time it has been my privilege and delight to see the bands of well-clad, well-trained, bright, and smiling lads and lasses, who ever and anon come to the Home of Industry to say good-bye before they set sail for the land of their adoption. I have followed them in thought across the trackless deep, and tried to picture them as they were placed in peaceful Canadian homesteads. Now that to the pleasures of imagination there have been added those of sight, I feel that I can far better appreciate the scope of the work, and understand the difficulties that surround it. These are by no means light or few.

The friends who attend the meetings at the Home of Industry, month after month, see the bright side of the picture; but it has its shadows, too, and when these are unseen they are apt to be discounted or forgotten. There are discouragements, no doubt, in connection with the department of rescue and training, but the Canadian side of the work is perhaps the more trying of the two. It is generally easy enough to get homes for the children. The demand, especially for girls, is in excess of the present supply. It is after the children are placed out that their individual idiosyncracies, or, mayhap, latent tendencies to evil produced by early surroundings, begin to crop up. Many masters and mistresses make every allowance for these and bear patiently with them. Others are less considerate, and if they deem the child unsuitable, they can at any time return him, or her, as the case may be, to the Stratford Home. This does not often occur, after the boy or girl has been in a home for any considerable period. A boy is perhaps sent back for some fault, but he has not been in Stratford long before an urgent message comes to have him speedily returned: they cannot do without him, faults and altogether. There is a case on record where a lad had been twice returned, but the master finally concluded that notwithstanding he must have the boy, who was accordingly re-returned to his old place, and things moved quite smoothly. Difficulties arise on the side of the receivers as well as of the children received. Though the utmost efforts are made in all cases to see that the boys and girls are settled in respectable and worthy homes, it does occasionally occur that the conditions of the youthful life, especially in the case of girls, are discovered to be unsatisfactory. The girl is removed without scruple or delay, and brought back to the shelter of the "parent" roof, till a suitable home is found. So this blessed mission has in it plenty of shade as well as of sunshine, and it is needful that its many friends should keep this well in view, so that unceasing and prayerful sympathy may go out from them towards the work and the workers.

After an unexpectedly prolonged stay at Niagara Falls — "The sublimest thing in Nature," as it has been tersely termed—I reached Stratford, Ontario, and was heartily welcomed by Miss Macpherson, Mrs. Merry, and other friends whom I had known in Spitalfields. The Distributing Home is a large, elegant, and well-appointed building, standing in its own grounds, with several acres of land and an orchard attached, on the outskirts of the little town. It was built for a private residence, and, as your readers may remember, was some time ago secured for this work, on very advantageous terms. It is a fine house, but none too fine for the God-like work that goes on within its walls. It was to me deeply interesting to watch the daily round of the home life. The morning worship, with its earnest talk to the children in residence, on some practical Bible topic, generally by Mr. Merry; the school lessons; the despatching of a boy or girl to a home more or less distant; the visit paid by someone in search of a child, or by a young maiden that has been in service and has come back for a brief holiday—all these and other events fill up to the full each recurring day.

But, as I have said, most of my time was spent in being driven through the surrounding districts to see the children in their Canadian homes. The limits of your space at my disposal are far too small for me to tell in detail the story of these four beautiful and never-to-be-forgotten days —the first with Mr. Merry, Jun., as my sole companion, and the other three with Miss Macpherson and two of her London lady helpers (Misses Stock* and Granger) in addition.

We travelled over a wide district of country, with sometimes many miles intervening between the houses where the children lived, while at other times we found them settled in groups. Our visits were quite unannounced, and probably those we saw were as fully representative of the work as could be—from the toddling little mite of a girl adopted by a childless couple, to the youth verging on man's estate, and the maiden soon to enter the bonds of holy matrimony. We saw much to rejoice our hearts and evoke our hallelujahs, and we found also some things fitted to sadden the spirit and temper the jubilation—but not much of the latter, comparatively speaking. In one case it was a little girl, redeemed from the direst poverty, who had taken into her silly head the notion that she must shift her quarters as soon as she could earn any money, much to the disquietude of the motherly soul who was providing for her a happy and comfortable home. Here and there the child's temper was the household ghost, very hard to exorcise. One boy was said to be unkind to the cattle; and in another instance a sharp, handsome lad, had somehow imbibed sceptical views, and was like to corrupt others dwelling near by. These were matters for plain, and earnest though pleading, remonstrance, as well as for patient forbearance, in the hope that with growing years would come added wisdom. But on the whole, despite these spots on the sun, it was a time of great gladness at seeing those young immortals, most of them with a past history that is to them best buried in oblivion, enjoying so many present privileges and having before them such fair and far-reaching prospects.

In order to give point to this sketch it may be well to allude briefly to some cases picked out of the many we visited—giving in few words the past and present circumstances of each:—

Jane L—— was deserted by her parents in Bristol and left with grandparents, who could not provide for her. She used to sit all day in grandmother's bed, so that when taken to the Rescue Home she was like a statue! Now she is a most engaging little minx of four; she has not only found a very desirable country home, but has evidently become as the apple of their eye to her foster parents.

Robert B——, a semi-orphan, who frequented the low lodging-houses, where he was fast learning all kinds of evil. We found him on a farm nursing a chubby-cheeked blue-eyed child; he seemed as happy as a little prince.

Lizzie M—— was a motherless girl (with a drunken father), found with a brother running about the streets of South-east London, and fast going to ruin. We reached her Canadian home in the afternoon and found her nicely dressed up, the day's rough work being over. Her brother is on a farm not far distant, and as happy as possible.

Peter K——, who has been out twelve years, we found busy harvesting. He earns 100 dollars besides board, during the seven outside working months, and has the rest of the year free to spend as he may.

Nelly R—— was at school when we reached the little country town where she has found a happy Christian home. She soon appeared, nicely dressed, and carrying her satchel of books over her shoulder. She confidentially told Miss Macpherson that "Ma" had bought a white frock for her to wear on Sundays.

One thing that particularly struck me during these four days was the universal and unbounded hospitality of the Canadian farmers. Of course everybody wanted us to stay for refreshments, while again and again we were pressed to remain over night—five of us besides the two horses. One evening, in the fast fading twilight, we were in danger of being benighted on a rough and unknown road, and were glad to accept the proffered hospitality of an old Scotch couple, Mr. and Mrs. Risk, who had settled there nearly forty years ago. We were much interested in hearing of their early struggles when they first came into the uncleared bush and had scarcely a roof to cover their heads. They have reared a family who are now scattered about, taking an honourable part in the world's work, while the venerable parents are not only caring for some grandchildren, but helping on Miss Macpherson's good work by having in their household a boy, Ernest C——, and a young woman, Agnes C——, brought by her from the old country. The former has been with them four years, the latter has been for twelve years, and is quite a daughter in the family.

Next day we dined with Mr. Burgess, one of the magistrates of his district, who has taken a deep and active personal interest in the work of placing out the children. He has on his own farm one of the lads who went out with the first party last spring, and of whom he spoke in the highest terms. The day following we dined at the house of a farmer, near the town of Guelph, who has no less than three of the children brought out, two of them being brother and sister. These two, with others of the same family, have had a peculiarly sad history, and it is a happy circumstance to find them now so well cared for. The second night we were very kindly received and entertained by Miss Macpherson's niece and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, of Hespeler. Mrs. Henderson has in her household two girls brought out from England, whom she is carefully training for future usefulness.

To me, one of the chief charms of the tour was the companionship of Miss Macpherson, and the peculiarly happy way in which she utilised every opportunity of giving some bit of counsel, of encouragement, or of exhortation, according as the circumstances demanded. Her large experience, coupled with a zeal that never flags, enabled her to speak many a word in season. While adhering mainly to her own special branch of work, she is solicitous of advancing in every way the spiritual interests of the Canadian people. In some of the districts the population is largely German, and she has it in contemplation, I believe, to take out Dr. Baedeker next summer for a period of Gospel work among his countrymen there. She has also done something to enable young English evangelists to settle in different parts of Canada, and in coming years she hopes to do more.

In closing this brief notice of a work which cannot be too highly commended, I would bespeak earnest prayer for our sister and her devoted fellow-workers both in London and in Canada. This blessed emigration movement, while it has the highest confidence of the Government, is not without its enemies and detractors in the Dominion, and it needs the greatest wisdom not only in the selection and training of the children and the placing of them out, but in their subsequent oversight, so as to obviate all reasonable ground of complaint. The regular visitation work from the Stratford Home is very ably carried on by Mr. Fred. Avouche, who is himself a product of the movement in its earlier stages. Miss Macpherson, with a party of lady friends, is now on the Atlantic Ocean on her homeward voyage; I trust to make one of a large company that will, at the next workers' meeting, heartily welcome her back to the mother shores.

* Some most interesting notes by Miss Stock of visitation among the children are in type, and will appear in an early issue.

MR. HAMMOND AND THE CHILDREN.

THE meetings at Mildmay Conference Hall go on from day to day, both in the morning and evening. At the morning services held in the large room, where several hundreds usually assemble, there are a great many of all ages who give testimony of the work being done amongst them.

A minister praised God for having saved his little girl and boy this week. He added, his house never had so much music in it before. One evening he went up to the children's room, when they were asleep, and under his little girl's pillow he found she had placed her Bible, ready to read some passage of it in the morning.

A Sunday-school teacher gave thanks to God, for having saved one of the scholars in her class at one of those meetings.

A gentlemen praised the Lord for having saved two boys in his class, and for using him in speaking to other children.

Another gave thanks for having saved a girl of sixteen. This young girl still crying for her sins, turned to her young companions who were not saved and asked them to come to Jesus. In less than ten minutes they were all crying together—one tears of joy, the others of repentance. These girls are still living in the Spirit, and have come to every meeting.

Another praised God for two boys saved on Sunday, and now both are working for Him.

Another thanked the Lord for having saved five boys on Thursday last. On Friday they brought two of their friends, who both gave their hearts to God. Now they are all working for Him, among their young companions; and all of them are full of gladness.

A gentleman gave thanks to God for having helped him to speak to another gentleman who had been neglectful about religion. That gentleman came to one of the meetings and gave his heart to God. They walked home together, and this late convert said, "Let us have a hymn;" they sang together a song of joy and praise, and then first one and then the other prayed.

These testimonies, a few of which only are recorded, became so numerous, that a gentleman said he felt almost afraid of the weight of the witness borne to the reality of the presence of the Holy Spirit. When he analysed the feeling he thought it sprang from lurking unbelief. We were like naughty boys at school, pulling at a bell rope, and then running away, lest anyone should come at their call. We pray earnestly to God and then go away, as if we were afraid to wait for the answer. The answer comes, but it is most likely to come in God's way, and we often do not know what to make of it. But let us wait on the Lord. He will honour what is his own in all we do.

Mr. Josiah Spiers told of a Sunday-school teacher in York. She had been at church, and the minister had a few words chiefly addressed to Sunday-school teachers. She was very much moved, and on returning home, and in place of going to dinner, she went privately and prayed, pleading with God for her class of girls. She ate no food, but went to her class. All seemed quiet and solemn. She began the lesson. She observed one of the girls crying. "Why do you cry?" she asked. "Oh! teacher, I am such a sinner." She looked down the class, almost all the children were in tears. There were no lessons that afternoon, but the exercises of the class became an inquiry meeting. In a few weeks all those twelve girls were trusting in Jesus as their Saviour. Teachers who may read these few facts of the work of the Spirit of God, do you pray for yourselves, and for your young pupils?

And still the work goes on. The large hall on Sunday week, morning and evening, was again filled—fully 2500 must have been present. Many groups of boys talked with one another of their love to Jesus after the services were over.

One day last week, Rev. D. B. Hankin said he thanked God for the conversion of fourteen or sixteen boys who had met in his drawing-room the week before. They all said they had been converted at these meetings, and they prayed very sweetly.

A young man, just going out as missionary, was asked to speak. With a beaming face, he told how precious Christ was to him, and for this reason he wished to go to China to tell about his love to the thousands of little children there who had never heard his name. Since he had settled on going he had been filled with joy unspeakable. "Little children," he said, "give up your all to Jesus; He is the only one who can satisfy you. Remember all missionaries in prayer; this will be a blessing to yourselves as well as to us. Ask that we may be kept shining for Jesus."

On Tuesday, September 29, Dr. Edmond explained a statement made by him at a previous meeting that some boys and girls did not need to be converted. While there is no child who does not need to be regenerated by the Holy Spirit, He still works in the hearts of some children when they are so young that no very decided change is perceived. A brief account of his own little boy follows: "My little boy was born in 1848, and he went away to heaven when he was seven years of age. He was a very sweet and obedient child from the beginning, and ever showed great interest in religious subjects. But about the time when he was four or five years of age his mother and I were able to say, 'We think we have sufficient proof that James loves the Lord Jesus.' Dr. Edmond told how, when his mother read from 'Peep of Day' of the sufferings of Christ, James ran out of the room crying, and when he was questioned as to what he had been doing, said, 'I was asking God to make me love Jesus, who has done so much for me.' When this little boy was dying he was asked why he wished to go to heaven; his answer was, because there is no sin in heaven, and Christ is there."

On Tuesday evening Mr. Reginald Radcliffe told the children how he had come to seek for men and women to go to the heathen; how in India little girls are pledged in marriage, and how, if the boy dies, though they may never have seen each other, the little girl is called a widow and has to live the sad life of a widow. How many millions in India, he said, are waiting to hear of Jesus. Some of you do love Him, all of you have heard of Him, but many of the Indian boys have never even heard. Mr. Radcliffe then appealed to the unconverted children present to give themselves to Jesus, and told the Christians to ask, "Do you want me, Lord, to go and tell the heathen of Thee?" The Lord will make the way straight if He wants you.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, September 30, a meeting was held at the Conference Hall, specially for children of the upper classes. The room was well filled with children, invitations having been issued to various private schools in the neighbourhood. Hymns were sung as the children assembled. As they sang the chorus, "Jesus loves me," Mr. Spiers said: "Once two little children were saying good-good-bye to their father, who was starting on a long ride. The little boy cried out: 'Goodbye, father, 'I love you thirty miles long;' but the little girl called after him: 'You can't ride to the end of my love, papa!' So, children, we can't get to the end of the love of Jesus, and it's all for me, all for you. A tiny girl lay dying. As her weeping parents stood round her bed, she asked them to get her 'Peep of Day.' Taking it with her little thin fingers, she found the picture of Jesus being crucified, and holding it up, she said to her father: 'For you;' and, turning to her mother, 'For you,' and—and 'For me,' and died."

Mr. Hammond explained to the children the object of the meeting:—"Some of you may wonder why the friends here have taken so much trouble to go round to your various schools and invite you here this afternoon. It is because we want to get you to love your best Friend. Is it hard to love Jesus? Is it hard for you to love any earthly kind friend? You can't help doing so. Why don't you all love Jesus? It is because you don't stop to think how much He loves you. Instead of scolding you for not loving Jesus, I am going to tell you how much He loves you." Then followed earnest appeals, which must have touched many hearts.

"DONE UNTO ME."

HOW the little children gather Into Mildmay Hall!
How they rush into their places
At the stewards' call!
What is all this rush and hurry
Morn and evening, pray?
Don't you know that Mr. Hammond 's
Preaching twice a day?

No? Then come inside and see them
Still as mice, and good,
While the preacher breaks rich morsels
Of pure Gospel food;
Gives them to his little hearers
In true words and plain,
Knowing that the Christ's own message
Is not preached in vain.

Just a prayer, said all together,
In a reverent way;
Asking for the good Lord's blessing
On the work to-day—
Pleading for his tender mercy
Little ones to save—
Longing for full hearts to thank Him
For the life He gave.

Then a hymn—and sweetly ringing
Sounds the chorus true:
"Jesus died for poor, lost sinners;
Come, He died for you."
All the boys and girls are ready
For the preacher now;
See! he wins their full attention.
"Every knee shall bow.

"Every tongue confess Him Saviour,
Bowing at his feet;
Through the blood of the Redeemer,
God and sinners meet.
Children, do not fear, but simply
Now obey Christ's call;
Knowing that his free salvation Welcomes one and all."

"Mr. Hammond is so loving,"
Said one tiny child;
"I do love to hear him tell of Gentle Jesus mild.
He has taught me that the Saviour
Suffered for me so,
That I want to live and serve Him
Till to heaven I go."

Are not boys and girls now hearing
Blessèd, joyful news?
Woe to those who God's salvation
Steadily refuse.
Not a fairer time can offer—
Never better days,
Than just here, where God's own Spirit
Moves in wondrous ways.

Bless God for our Brother Hammond!
But let Christians pray,
Holding up his hands in mighty
Pleading, day by day.
And Christ's promise to his servants Must fulfillèd be—
"What thou doest for these children Is done unto Me."

REV. W. HAY AITKEN preached his last two sermons previous to his departure to America, in St. Cuthbert's Church, Bedford, on Sunday, Sept. 27. Rev. J. Stephens also preached his parting sermon in Christ Church (connected with St. Cuthbert's) the same evening. He and Mr. Aitken sailed on the 29th for America.

FRESH AIR FOR THE CHILDREN is the title of a neat little report of the Children's Fresh-Air Mission. Last year 1282 poor, sickly children, living in Holborn, Clerkenwell, St. Luke's, and other districts, enjoyed the advantages of this deserving mission, and were sent into the country for three weeks, during the summer. Mr. W. Hazell, the Hon. Treasurer, 6, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden, says, "We are anxious greatly to extend the work, but this can only be done by increased aid. Collecting boxes, and cards, and 'hints to workers,' giving details of the working of our mission, will gladly be forwarded to any friends willing to help." The gratitude expressed in the parents' letters of thanks is full of interest.

THE VOICES.

MANY voices e'en from nature speak a message from above,
To the "pilgrim on life's journey," of our Father's ceaseless love;
Speeches various as the rainbow's hues which beautify the sky,
And which stand the noble witness of our God "who cannot lie."

E'en the tiny songsters carol forth their note of morning praise,
And at eventide they warble, as the sun's declining rays,
In the distant west horizon, with its gold and purple hues,
Cast a glory on the ocean, and a charm o'er landscape views.

And the butterfly, though gaudy, has a message, too, to give,
As it soars within the sunlight—that its pleasures cannot live;
It is only for a season, then its beauty all is o'er,
And the perfume of the roses never will delight it more.

Spring's young buds so fresh and verdant last but for a summer's day;
Soon the green gives place to crimson, and its glory fades away;
Spring and autumn both have voices, if we only have the ear
Just to listen to the warning of the autumn leaves all sere.

Then the roses with their perfume and their prickly thorns do show
E'en how sweetness, beauty, pleasure, are with pain combined below.
And the sunrise with the sunset speaks of childhood and man's years;
Of the morn of life and gladness; of the grave and silent tears.

Let us heed the voices speaking, and designed to do us good,
Like the feathered songsters praise Him who supplies our daily food.
In the morn of our existence let our mouths his praises fill,
And when evening's sun is setting may we thus continue still.
W. H. Ross.

THE POWER OF LOVE.

HOW A FATHER WAS REDEEMED.

A Temperance worker relates the following instance in which the quiet, persistent love of a child was the redemption of a drunken father:—

"That night I was out late. I returned by the Lee cabin about eleven o'clock. As I approached I saw a strange-looking object cowering under the low eaves. A cold rain was falling. It was autumn. I drew near, and there was Millie, wet to the skin. Her father had driven her out some hours before. She had lain down to listen for the heavy snoring of his drunken slumbers, so that she might creep back to bed. Before she heard it, nature seemed exhausted, and she fell into a troubled sleep, with rain-drops pattering upon her. I tried to take her home with me; but, no! True as a martyr to his faith, she struggled from me, and returned to the now dark and silent cabin. Things went on thus for weeks and months, but at length Lee grew less violent, even in his drunken fits, to his self-denying child, and one day, when he awoke from a slumber after a debauch, and found her preparing breakfast for him, and singing a childish song, he turned toward her, and, with a tone almost tender, said:

"'Millie, what makes you stay with me?'

"'Because you are my father, and I love you.'

"'You love me!' repeated the wretched man; 'you love me!' He looked at his bloated limbs, his soiled and ragged clothes. 'Love me!' he still murmured. 'Millie, what makes you love me? I am a poor drunkard; everybody else despises me; why don't you?'

"'Dear father,' said the girl, with streaming eyes, 'my mother has taught me to love you, and every night she comes from heaven and stands by my bed, and says, "Millie, don't leave your father; he will get away from that rum fiend some of these days, and then how happy you will be."'

"And he did get away from the rum fiend. The unfaltering affection of his child, strengthened by the dying words of her mother, saved him and restored to him again his manhood."

INFANT THEATRICALS.

A CORRESPONDENT from St. Leonard's-on-Sea sends the following:—Quite a storm of indignation has been raised in this fashionable watering-place by the organisation, in our midst, of a "Children's Dramatic Company," consisting of forty or fifty children, many of them of a tender age. The manager of the troupe, the ranks of which are recruited from families in this town, is a young man who enjoys the repute of being a local amateur of some promise.

Several letters have already appeared in the local papers protesting against these performances, and condemning in severe language the iniquity of thus making use of very young children for stage purposes. The local clergymen do not yet appear to have made any move to put a stop to this demoralising employment of mere infants, but there can be little doubt of their soon openly condemning these proceedings.

It is extremely shocking to read in Saturday's local papers that a dinner has been given to these children, at which "health-drinking" was the order of the day. We are told that wine was drunk by the little ones, and that the proceedings were kept up until late! Surely a most shocking state of things, and yet we are threatened with a continuance of this destructible work.

MISS ANSTEY'S ORPHANS.

DEAR SIR,—The following letter from one of the Colar orphans may interest your readers, but requires a few words of explanation. Miss Anstey's long but necessary absence from her well-loved work has not been without some evil results, such as breaches of discipline and attempts at rebellion on the part of some of the older orphans, which have caused great anxiety to those left in charge, and much sorrow to Miss Anstey. The following attempt to comfort and cheer her is very touching. It is from a Hindu lad:—

. . . "I am so glad in the Lord, and I hope you also glad. Why, mother, you in sorrow? Not all boys and girls wicked. Some of them are good. You may be glad for them. Wicked boys and girls bringeth shame. It is not surprising, because they walk with their own father, the devil; therefore they show their bad consequences out. Yet you have got some of the best lights in the Orphanage—that is, good boys and good girls. They show their light outside, because they remember Matt. v. 16. Therefore, you be glad! Dear mother, do not woe. We put our seed in the ground; it grows; it gives fruits—not all good, some bad and some good fruit. In like manner you sow many seeds in Colar Orphanage; it grows and gives some good fruits and some bad fruits. This means, in the Orphanage, some good boys or children follow their Saviour, Jesus, and others follow their own father, the devil. Well, my dearest mother, do not sorrow. We are your best lights to show light to others, i.e., to the heathen."

Others of the children have also sent cheering words. Christian friends in England having given presents for them, Miss Anstey has promised them a Christmas-tree on her return. When describing their pleasure at the announcement, Mr. Cumine writes: "Some of them say, 'If my mother comes, that is quite enough; it will give us more joy than anything.'"

We trust her return to the large family may be marked not only by a restoration of tranquillity, but by a revival of spiritual life in their midst, and that even by their falls and failures many may have learnt useful lessons of their own weakness and folly, and be thus prepared to walk more humbly with their God.

Miss Anstey has taken passages in the Clan Grant, leaving Liverpool (D.V.) on October 10. She will be accompanied by several ladies who are going out to different mission fields, and by Miss Bird, who is going to Colar.

The native girl, Hannah Bhadree, who has borne a steady, quiet testimony for the Lord while in this country, has been seriously ill. Will your readers join in prayer for her thorough restoration to health, and that the voyage may not be very trying to her, as she is a bad sailor. Our sister, Miss Anstey, also asks our prayers that she may be strengthened and guided step by step in again going forth.

Difficulties do not lessen as the work goes on, and it may be she is even returning to a repetition of the famine scenes, for rain seems to be withheld, and many grave fears are entertained as to the crops.—I am, Sir, yours sincerely,

M. A. H.

REV. ARTHUR HALL has resigned his pastorate at Clifton Down, having accepted ministerial charge of Zion Chapel, Bristol, the only Congregational church in a district containing 50,000 inhabitants. Rev. G. Wood, whose resignation we recorded a few months since, was pastor of this church for forty-three years.

RELIGIOUS EQUALITY AT SEA.—Mr. Spurgeon, in his Sword and Trowel for October, says: "Complaints reach us that some of the Steam Shipping Companies are forgetful of the rights of religious equality on board their vessels. Surely we are not to have sectarian favouritisms on the seas as well as on the land. To a Shipping Company all religions should be upon an equality, and equally fair opportunity should be given for Episcopalian, Methodist, or Baptist services. Where no chaplain is provided, those who are anxious to do good should be treated with equal deference, so far as the good order of the ship and the comfort of the passengers will allow."

TWO INDIAN APOSTLES.

DEAR SIR,—I have read the closing appeal of the Mildmay Conference and the "Congregational Minister's" comments on it, which appeared in your columns. I do not wish to refer to either, further than to say that a few are "unreasonable enough to go everywhere preaching the word without means or (human) organisation." I would, with your permission, ask the prayers of your readers for two young men who are just entering on this blessed, though lowly path of service. They are two intelligent young native converts, who have only recently come out on the Lord's side, but they desire to go forth everywhere preaching the word, depending wholly on the Lord for guidance and support.

They were lately converted in Bangalore, through a brother who was conducting special evangelistic services there. One of them was a well-to-do young Mohamedan, an educated man, and well known in Bangalore. He has heard the word for years, and it seems to have had some attraction for him, but still he went on in the religion of his fathers, and was considered a stern defender of it. He says in testifying of his conversion: "I was a very bigoted Mohamedan, and a stern defender of the faith of Islam. While a student at school I had a desire to study Christianity. I gave it a 'student-like' examination, but for the last five or six years I have been making a searching examination of it, which resulted in my becoming an opposer of Christianity, and a defender of what I believed to be truth, so that I soon became the head of a band of Islamites, whose business it was to defend Mohamedanism by all means. During the last few months, however, I found out, to my astonishment, that Mohamedanism was false. I became very restless in spirit, and gave up all attempts to defend my religion. Thus the Mohamedans of Bangalore found out my state of mind and began to persecute and trouble me on every hand. I am glad to say, however, that I gathered strength by these trials. While some Christians were praying with and for me, a marvellous light shone into my restless spirit, and I found, by believing in Christ Jesus, immediate relief, and I knew that my sins were all washed away."

As soon as it was known that he had decided for Christ, he had to escape at once. Mohamedan's think it a calamity for any of their number to become Christians. A parent would rather that his son died than that he should forsake the religion of his fathers. Mohamedan converts are very few compared with those from heathenism. They also pity the poor heathen for being so blind as to bow down to gods of wood and stone.

This young brother and his friend (the other convert), came here in their flight, and this being an out-of-the-way place, we were able to shelter them for a short time. The Scriptures were opened up to them, and they got help while here. I had the joy of baptizing them at their own request. The next day, Sunday, they met at the Lord's table for the first time. In the afternoon Gospel-meeting they told what the Lord had done for them. In the evening we hoped to have had a meeting to commend them to the Lord, as we could not keep them over the morning. But just as we were commencing, a report came that three Mohamedans had come for the Mussulman brother, having been sent by his father, and were commissioned to kill him wherever they found him. It was thought expedient to send them away at once; and, having disguised them in old clothes, we sent them off. They were conducted in safety to some distance out, and that night they slept in a jungle.

They purpose giving themselves wholly to the Lord's work, and that they may be a standing rebuke to the general taunt that natives are converted and join societies for worldly gain. And, because they believe it to be more Scriptural, they are going forth with no promise of a salary, but in entire dependence on the Lord; believing that He who sends them will supply all their needs and guide them in his service. This they have contemplated from the first, and they were glad to be encouraged to go on in this line of service.

If they are strengthened to go on as they have purposed, I believe they will have a powerful influence for good. The Mohamedan says:—

> "I was led to see the nothingness of this world and worldly things, and have been enabled to forsake all for the work of the Lord. I have left all to preach the Gospel to poor sinners, under no denomination, but wish to be solely guided by the Lord, without any hope from any particular individual.'

They felt their need of more teaching in the Word, so we helped them on to Nussapore, where we trust they will get much help from the brethren. When the tumult has cooled down among his (the Mohamedan's) friends, they both hope to return to Southern India again, and work among those to whom they are known. The Mohamedan longs to work more especially among Mohamedans; and few are so well qualified, naturally, as he to do this, as he can speak from their own stand-point, and their language is his mother tongue. I do not know any one around here who labours wholly among that section of India's millions, and it is to be hoped that he may be fitted by the Holy Ghost to do much among them.

He will meet with many rebuffs from them, no doubt, but the Lord is his sufficiency. In writing about his voyage to Nussapore, he says:—

> "We had some Mohamedan fellow-passengers in the same compartment, with whom I had a little talk. They expressed their great sorrow and bitter hatred at seeing me."

The other young brother's case is equally interesting in many respects; but, his father being a Christian, his surroundings are very different. They are both of one mind, and wish to go together. This brother can speak the Mohamedan language too, and can therefore work among them when opportunity occurs. If they take a stand in any street or village, the congregation would be composed of both Hindoos and Mohamedans. They both know several languages, including English, so that they have access to natives of different dialects. These young men have no idea that I am writing, but I know it would encourage them to get a letter from any one who may feel interested in them, or any other token of sympathy. I should be most happy to be a medium through whom they may be corresponded with.

We have rather trying times here. The ground is parched for want of rain, and if it does not come soon there must be an entire failure of the crops. What distress that will bring! If rain should come at once, there would be only a partial yield. May the heathen's heart be softened by this providence!—I remain, yours faithfully in the Lord, W. ALFRED REDWOOD.

VILLAGE WORK.

A GOOD work has been carried on during the last few weeks in connection with the "Folkestone United Mission," in the shape of weekly wagonette excursions to the surrounding villages, where open-air Gospel meetings are held.

On Thursday, Sept. 24, several young men in connection with the Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, staying at Pembroke House, helped make up a party for a drive to Aldington, about eleven miles from Folkestone. Tracts were freely distributed along the road, and upon reaching the village the party alighted, and visited every cottage in the district, leaving tracts and text-cards, and speaking for the Master. One little girl, about ten years old, knew nothing about God or Christ; she believed her father had a Bible, but he never read it.

An open-air meeting was held in the afternoon in front of the village inn, the farm labourers looking on with extreme suspicion, but, no doubt, much good was accomplished. After the meeting, a good tea was found prepared inside the inn for the party, who, by the way, all wore the blue ribbon. The dancing room of the inn was kindly offered for future Gospel services, which offer it is decided to accept. The drive home was enlivened by singing nearly all the way, causing no little excitement in the villages passed through.

The "Folkestone United Mission" have made these waggonette excursions a special feature, and it is hoped they will be the means of inducing many Christians in London to spend their summer holidays at this delightful watering-place profitably in the Master's service. The mission also undertakes to find apartments in the houses of Christian people for those intending a visit, all information respecting which may be obtained by writing to the Superintendent, Mr. Henry Galer, 10, Coolinge-road, Folkestone.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING SERVICE IN HYDE PARK.—This meeting, held on Sunday afternoon, was attended by an orderly congregation of between one thousand and fifteen hundred persons. Addresses were given by Rev. E. W. Moore (Brunswick Chapel), and H. Nevile Sherbrooke, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Mr. Howard, Mr. Davis, and Mr. Cooke-Collis. The meeting will be continued next Sunday at 3 p.m.

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.

ON Friday last the Church Missionary Society held its annual Valedictory Dismissal of Missionaries sailing by the autumn steamers for India and other fields. Including some who have sailed during the summer months, more than fifty (reckoning the wives) will, a few weeks hence, have gone out within six months. Thirty of these took leave of the committee together on Friday.

The meeting was held in St. George's Hall, Langham-place, which was densely crowded, more than a thousand persons being present, although there had been no public advertisement. The venerable president, the Earl of Chichester (who has held that office more than half a century), occupied the chair, and in his opening remarks referred in touching terms to the death of his brother earl, Lord Shaftesbury, the day before. The instructions of the committee to the departing missionaries generally were read by Rev. Robert Lang, one of the secretaries. They laid especial stress on the need of whole-hearted consecration to God, of holiness in daily life, of love and sympathy for the heathen, and of firm adherence to evangelical truth. The individual instructions to each missionary were then read, and replied to by each of the brethren in a short speech, after which an impressive address was delivered to them by Rev. Talbot Greaves, of Clifton, and the commendatory prayer was offered by Rev. G. F. Head, of Hampstead.

The missionaries present were:—For West Africa: Rev. J. W. and Mrs. Dickenson, and Miss Ansell; for East Africa: Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Watt, Dr. S. T. Penen, and Miss Harvey; for Egypt (and eventually for Aden): Dr. F. J. Harpur; for North India: Rev. R. J. and Mrs. Bell: Rev. P. Ireland Jones (late Vice-Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge), and Mrs. Jones, Rev. C. H. Bradburn and Rev. T. F. Robathan; for the Punjab: the veteran senior missionary, Rev. R. Clark, going out once more after thirty-four years' service, and Revs. E. Corfield and A. G. Day; for the new mission at Quetta, Afghanistan: Dr. S. W. Sutton; for Bombay: Rev. E. J. Jones; for Tinnevelly, Rev. T. Walker (of St. James's, Holloway), and Rev. A. K. and Mrs. Finnimore; for Ceylon: Rev. S. Coles; for China: Rev. G. W. Coultas; for Japan: Rev. J. and Mrs. Williams, and Rev. W. J. and Mrs. Edmonds; for Saskatchewan, North-west Canada: Rev. S. Trivett. Nineteen of these are going out for the first time. Seven are University men. Four are medical missionaries.

On the evening of the same day, a second meeting, especially for young men, was held at Holborn Town Hall. General George Hutchinson, C.B., C.S.I., presided, and the missionaries were introduced to the meeting by Mr. Eugene Stock. Ten of them made short speeches, all expressing their joy at going out, and their earnest desire for the prayers of God's people. An African clergyman from Sierra Leone, Rev. D. G. Williams, also spoke; and Rev. C. C. McArthur, a Norfolk clergyman, who was formerly a Ceylon missionary, closed with an touching and solemn appeal to the young men present. The meeting was enlivened by several hymns, and was most hearty and enthusiastic throughout.

A CONVERSION.—In the Transvaal a woman for years famous among her people as a witch doctor has been converted and baptized. The very difficulty of her conversion goes far to prove its reality. "Often when trying to pray," a missionary reports, "she would rush away to the solitudes of the mountain, and there wander about like an unquiet spirit."—Word and Work.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION, CARDIFF.—The prayers which some few months since we asked for this mission have been most signally answered. It has proved the means of several poor, forlorn ones being saved; and, by the guidance of God, we have been enabled to open another mission-room in a densely populated district of this town. Will you kindly ask the prayers of God's children upon this new undertaking, and if there are any who would like to throw in their labour with us, we shall gladly welcome them. R. WILLIAMS.

THE CHOLERA IN SPAIN.

DURING the summer months many of your readers may have watched the reports of the cholera in Spain with sympathy for the sufferers, but with something like hardness towards a nation which has allowed its towns to remain in such a deplorable sanitary condition that they have become a hotbed for this terrible epidemic, and which is even now doing nothing to amend its ways.

It is almost necessary to visit the country oneself in order to understand why this is? Spain was once the first nation of Europe, and its natural resources and splendid maritime position fit it to be so still, but it is now almost the poorest. The people are ground with taxation, but the taxes produce little, and many of the municipalities are, I believe, insolvent. The cause of all this is well known. At the present time, with the utmost desire for improvements, it would be no easy matter for the Government or anyone else to effect them.

Under such circumstances Spain has a claim on the sympathy of England, and many will have been glad to hear of the establishment of a Mansion House Fund to help the sufferers. While in no way wishing to disparage this laudable undertaking, many of your readers will feel with me:—(1) That they would prefer that their gifts should pass through the hands of their Christian fellow-countrymen in Madrid: (2) That money should, wherever practicable, be given in return for work, rather than as a direct gift.

A helpful letter appeared in The Daily News of the 11th inst., written from Madrid, and signed by Mr. E. Reeves Palmer, Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and Mr. John Jameson, Secretary of the National Bible Society, of Scotland.

From this letter I quote the following:—"Now that, with the approach of cooler weather, the disease is somewhat abating, we are able to estimate more accurately its terrible effects, and in truth the prospect for the poor people, in this country, for the winter before them is simply appalling. It is not only the effect of the cholera itself, but that this is the last of a series of disasters which have combined to paralyse industry, and destroy the resources of the people. The slight attack of cholera last year, and the devastating inundations in various places, the fearful earthquakes, which began on the evening of Christmas day last, continuing with more or less severity almost till spring, followed by this terrible epidemic which it is believed has carried off at least 80,000 victims, have all combined to reduce the people in many provinces to a condition threatening starvation. In many districts the harvests have almost or altogether failed. We are well acquainted with the circumstances; our work brings us into contact with all parts of the country and enables us to know where the greatest need exists and how it can best be satisfied."

To the above I add two sentences from a letter addressed to myself from Mr. Palmer:—"Our hope and intention is to set up work-rooms and possibly centres for the distribution of food, but to be sparing in the distribution of cash excepting in the few cases where it seems absolutely necessary, otherwise rather as payment for work done. Should funds allow, the work may be extended to the provinces, but in every case relief will be afforded from the centres of evangelical work. Everything now depends upon the extent to which funds may come."

I believe the above statement of the condition of Spain is not exaggerated, and from what I know of the writers of the letter, who may possibly associate themselves with other Christian workers in Madrid, I believe money entrusted to them will be well expended. I may add that one sewing meeting in an infected district of Madrid is already in operation. The poor women meet for three hours on two afternoons in the week, receiving twopence halfpenny per hour in payment. During work the Bible and other books are read aloud. Should any of your readers incline to entrust me with money, I shall be glad to receive and forward it; or it may be sent to the office of The Christian.

Yours truly, Samuel Southall.

THE WORD IN SPAIN.

[Extract of a letter received by Mr. Greene, of Claydon, Suffolk, from Don José Alhama, Tacatin, 44, Granada, Sept. 16.]

"I RECEIVED the £10 note you enclosed; a part of it I distributed from my house when recovering from an attack of cholera, and the rest I took to the people in their own homes, thus seeking to meet their many needs. Many thanks, Mr. Greene, in my name, and in the name of humanity, for the part you have taken in this matter, and thanks to the Lord. May He repay you in blessing, also the lady who thus thought of helping us.

"The Spanish text-cards (Mrs. Grimké's) I have assorted; but, as I found that in each set there were only five copies, I could not give a complete set in each house. But, with my Bible, I read when I cannot give. The sorrowful state of this town calls more for prayer from us than the explanation of these texts, but the choice of the passages could not be better or more consoling, or give clearer instruction to a troubled heart, as by them we learn our sinful condition —then repentance, regeneration, who it is who takes away the sin of the world, the gifts of God, and in whom we must believe to be saved; the loving call, too, of Jesus to sinners, with the blessed offer to them of rest from the great weight of sin; and, finally, our Lord and Saviour's command to search the Scriptures.

"The lady who sent these texts has done us an immense good in directing my attention to them, and I employ myself most methodically in the important work among the families who have been and are the objects of my visits. Also the help which has been sent me through you has been received by them with gratitude and praise. I do not write to Miss —— myself, as I do not know her language. Please translate this for her. She sent us, besides, the £10 and the texts, the homœopathic medicines which arrived yesterday at Granada, but which I have not yet seen. I should much like a homœopathic medicine chest, with a little book in Spanish of directions as to how to use the medicines.

"In The Christian of August 18, you will have seen that I was attacked with cholera; but thanks be to God, He did not allow me to succumb under the fearful malady. But I am delicate and suffer much in my head, and a part of the day am laid aside. The doctor says it arises from the cholera, the effects of which are felt by some for a long time afterwards."

Our readers will remember that Don Alhama was imprisoned for his faith, with Manuel Matamoros, some twenty-five years ago.

Spanish illuminated text-cards may be obtained also at the Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling.

CHRISTIAN WORK AT NORTHAMPTON.

SIR,—The ladies from Mildmay Park, who have been quietly working in this town for the past three years, have at length succeeded in renting an empty shoe factory in one of the worst parts of the town, and have fitted one or two rooms up for night schools, mission work, &c. For the past fortnight Mr. George Soltau has been conducting mission services in these rooms, and I rejoice to say that every night many of the worst characters (infidels, drunkards, &c.) have been listening to the evangelist's earnest appeals, and the power of the Spirit has been manifested in breaking down hard hearts and convincing of sin. Mr. Soltau has also been giving a series of Bible readings in the afternoon, which were full of freshness and Scriptural teaching, and have been well attended by Christians of all denominations.

Will your readers pray for a great outpouring of the Spirit on the work of these ladies during the coming winter? and perhaps some of God's children may feel inclined to strengthen the hands of these standard-bearers in a difficult corner.

Yours faithfully,
G. E. Liebenrood, Major, late 58th Regiment.

YOUNG MEN IN THE CITY.

THE Committee of the Y.M.C.A., whose headquarters are at 186, Aldersgate-street, appear to be quite alive to the requirements of their constituents, as may be readily seen from the calendar of work and studies which their worthy secretary, Mr. Robert Burn, has prepared for the session 1885-6. The opening meeting took place on the evening of Monday week, with Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P. in the chair. After devotional exercises, the prizes won in the competitive examinations at the close of last session's classes were presented. They took the form of books, cups, Gladstone bags, &c., to the value of over £30; their value was doubtless enhanced by the genial shake of the hand which Mr. Morley gave to each prize-winner. The young ladies who took prizes in the musical studies received a special ovation.

Hon. G. A. Lloyd, of Sydney, in a bright, conversational speech, was singularly happy in bringing the old world and the new side by side. They were now erecting premises in Sydney, he said, at a cost of £40,000. He had come back to the old country, through America, and his heart was made glad by the work the Associations were doing in the towns and cities he visited. He was going back soon, and he would tell on his return that, though all the grand old men he had known had disappeared, another generation had taken their place and was doing their work as well, — yes, better. The right hon. gentleman certainly had no reason to complain of the enthusiasm his speech created, and Mr. Burn lost no time in moving that the congratulations of the London Association be conveyed by him to their Sydney brethren on the completion of new premises.

The message delivered by Mr. George Williams was inspired by the three words, light, strength, and sweetness. He assured the audience that much as they thought they knew about happiness, they needed to be past sixty and well on to seventy before they knew it in its sweetest and truest sense.

After a few words from Mr. Hodder, Mr. Morley said that the need for new premises was beginning to press itself upon their attention, and he would be very glad to co-operate to get the matter in proper form. It was the word "Christian" which was the charm for him in this Association. That was the tie that linked him to it. To fix the eye on the end of the journey of life, to put solid truth in the forefront, was the only aim worthy of immortals. Standing at the bedside of Lord Shaftesbury, as he did lately, when he did not expect to see him again, what struck him was the sure solid hope with which he looked to the future. "I know," said he, "that my Redeemer liveth." The more I study our social condition, said Mr. Morley, the more do I see the necessity for Christianity. It seems to me the masses are diverging towards a mischievous direction, and Christian men, young men, should qualify themselves for the conflict, that they may be valiant soldiers when the great need for them comes. He regretted that pleasure-seeking was a growing feature among youth. Without substantial reading young men could not hopefully enter the arena of public life. As a closing word, Mr. Morley insisted on purity of life. He had become aware that the homes of thousands in London were such that they were morally and physically a disgrace to our country, and men and women who knew it dared not rest until this condition of things was changed. Young men especially could not overlook the question. Many a young man is saved by kind Christian fellowship at the very moment when, it may be, he stands at his greatest peril.

SQUALID LIVERPOOL.—Under this heading we recorded a few weeks since some earnest work done by Rev. H. J. Wood in a very low part of the city. His fellow-helper, Mr. James Nunn, writes:—Our meetings are increasing in interest and numbers; the worst woman in one street has signed the pledge, and others have found the Saviour. One sent for me to her house, and with tears of joy told me all about it. What we greatly need now is a few more hearts, softened and constrained by the love of Christ, to come and help us.

A SUMMER HOLIDAY.

THE villages and hamlets of England number about eleven thousand. Very many of them, I fear, are still without the light of the glorious Gospel. "Go out into the highways and hedges" has been ringing in my ears during the past five years, and I feel constrained to spend my summer holidays in itinerant evangelistic work. I have just returned from a ramble in

THE NEW FOREST.

Eighty-five miles from Waterloo terminus is the New Forest of William the Conqueror, forming the largest tract of unenclosed land, and one of the finest examples of woodland scenery, in England, measuring from east to west fifteen miles, and from north-west to south-east about twenty miles, embracing some 91,000 acres, where truly—

> "Every prospect pleases, and only man is vile."

A journey of ten miles from the nearest station—Totton—brings me into the interior of the Forest, and the centre of a field of labour for the next six weeks, namely—

THE VILLAGE OF FRITHAM.

Here I found a nice little iron room where I was invited to conduct services during my stay. They have two strangely opposite establishments in Fritham, a gunpowder factory and a well-attended Sunday-school. I was forcibly struck with the exceeding good behaviour of the children, and, judging from my visits to a few cottages, am satisfied that many souls have been brought to the Lord in this place during the past five years. I was hospitably entertained by Mr. Griffith, manager of the gunpowder factory, and his colporteur, Mr. Bellamy, who gave me many a lift in his donkey-cart.

THE VILLAGE OF MINSTEAD

has an evil reputation for priestly bigotry and intolerance. They are determined to have "no Dissent" there. Again and again I was told it is "Come to church or go to hell." Not a cottager will allow the use of a room for a cottage meeting, or give "a cup of water to a disciple in the name of a disciple." It was a startling announcement, "Open-air preaching on the village green every evening for a week." A very fine mansion is being erected here for Sir William Vernon Harcourt, M.P., and my first listener was the clerk of the works; next came a bricklayer, who turned out to be a Christian and an open-air preacher. One by one the people came from their cottages, and at our last service I should think we had almost the entire population; and, thank God, the meetings will be continued by a band of young men from a neighbouring village. My next visit was within a radius of three miles to the hamlets of

BROOK AND BRAMSHAW.

Here, however, we could not get the people out or collect a congregation, although I had now the assistance of a fellow-labourer, Joseph Phillips, of London. Could we but get the "saints" together of "one accord in one place," it would be comparatively easy to gather together the "sinners," so we gladly accepted the invitation of the Lyndhurst postman, "Come over and help us."

LYNDHURST, THE CAPITAL.

It is a well-built village, pleasantly situated in the centre of the Forest, with a population of nearly 1700. The church is modern, and stands, like all the Forest churches, on a mound. The village also possesses a Baptist Chapel, built in 1848 at a cost of £400, which, with school belonging to it, is endowed with £70 a year, and five acres of land especially for the minister. Not only did Rev. Mr. Payne, invite us to preach in his chapel, but he, with his noble-hearted wife, and Mr. Small, the postman, with his wife and daughter, came out grandly, night after night, and helped us at the open-air services in the centre of the village. We had a good time, as it happened to be during the annual Volunteer encampment, and the held annually, on August 9, for sale of horses and for pleasure. This year the day fell on a Sunday, so the sales were postponed till Monday. On the Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, I went to the middle of the fair field, and, surrounded by sixteen gipsy caravans, mounted a seat under a spreading oak.

A hymn soon brought a congregation of gipsies and foresters around. I had been to visit a sick gipsy the day before, and a relative came forward to fasten my Gospel banner to the tree. I can truly say I never had a more orderly or attentive audience. At 6 o'clock some of our chapel friends came out and we went to the top of a hill, about ten minutes' walk, to a place called

EMERY DOWN.

The gipsies followed, the villagers came out in force, and it was a grand scene, not soon to be forgotten, as the shades of evening gathered and the shadows lengthened of the giant oaks, many of them 500 years old. Many a story was told me of desperate characters, poachers, and others, who never enter church or chapel. An old Clerkenweller came forward and would have us go in-doors to dinner and tea. In the depths of the Forest we discovered

AN EXTRAORDINARY CHARACTER.

He was a sort of wild man of the woods known as "Brusher Mills," a snake catcher and charmer. A poacher conducted us to this man's home, a wigwam, formerly a charcoal burner's mud hut. We had five interviews with Brusher Mills, and found him to be a man of intelligence, and learned in entomology. During the past four years he has captured 1800 snakes, adders, and other venomous reptiles. His numerous and capacious pockets were full of live snakes. As we lay on his bed of dried fern leaves we handled some of the reptiles, and put the Gospel before him. He heard us gladly, and through grace we expect to meet "Brusher Mills" in glory. I have secured a splendid cabinet portrait of him, which I shall be pleased to show to any friends, and also to give further information to sympathising friends, about open doors for evangelists and teachers in the New Forest.

After a few days' rest at Burnham and Weston-super-Mare, I am now in London, preparing for our winter campaign in the Sadler's Wells Theatre, which we hope to re-open shortly.

STUDENTS AT EXETER HALL.

ON Sunday, the 20th ult., a deputation of eight students from the University of Edinburgh, under the direction of Mr. R. A. Hill, began a ten days' mission to young men only, at Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A.

Notwithstanding this being the busy season with many commercial houses, large numbers of young men have been brought together night after night, of whom many have been induced to come to the meetings from off the Strand by the personal invitations of the workers.

Three or four addresses have been given each night, unmarked by external excitement, but with a quiet and burning love, each has borne a convincing testimony to the Gospel as the power of God unto salvation.

Their words were "in demonstration of the Spirit," and "the thoughts of many hearts" have been revealed; while many young men, we rejoice to record, have fled for refuge to Him who alone can save.

There have been droppings for some time past, and the shower is already falling; shall we not, then, praise the Lord for his great goodness in thus answering prayer, while we prove our Father further for the more which is to follow. The students have conducted the mid-day prayer-meetings, held from one to two o'clock p.m. Space does not here permit us to give any of the many interesting details connected with the mission.

It may not be known to many readers of The Christian that Gospel services for young men are held every night at Exeter Hall, conducted by young men.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

A LONG and very successful series of Deputation Meetings on the South Coast, North Devon, and South Wales, has just been concluded, and Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd have, by God's blessing, strengthened the hands of their large band of workers in the "Letter Mission," and enlisted much fresh interest in this important work. Visitation of the "Professional Apartments" will, in many cases, be undertaken; the proprietors of these houses will receive the appropriate "Friendly Letter" of the "V.M.S. Series," Bibles will be placed forthwith in the bed-rooms, and texts and elevating pictures hung on the walls. Special contributions toward the New Institute, now nearly completed, included liberal gifts of £50 from Mr. Holt Skinner, and the same amount from Messrs. Cory. The proposed opening will be in the second week of November, so that all monetary gifts for the complete purchase of the building will be doubly acceptable if sent at once. Further, there is an opportunity of dedicating to the Lord, jewellery, ornaments, and all kinds of useful or fancy work, which will (D.V.) be sold in private houses, towards the extension of the mission.

Just now the Committee are appealing for the General Fund, as convalescent, holiday, and relief expenses for members have overtaxed this during the summer months. The spiritual features of this rescue and preventive work continue to be most encouraging, and great blessing is anticipated in the larger quarters during the forthcoming winter months of rehearsal and performance. Communications should still be made to Mr. Courthope Todd, Director, 21, King-street, Covent-garden.

FAMINE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

DEAR SIR,—Are your readers aware that famine is now stalking through extensive regions of South Africa, chiefly in Kafirland, Fingoland, and Tembuland? It is the result of a serious drought extending over the unusually long period of nine years, the present year being by far the worst. When in Fingoland in June last, Captain Blyth, the able and much-respected chief magistrate, assured me that not more than six inches of rain had fallen in that part of the Colony since the preceding October. Many of the streams, as I can testify, were completely dried up, and the aspect of the country was in the last degree deplorable. Sheep and cattle were dying in large numbers. The mealie crop, the staple food of the natives, was to a large extent a failure. Adults and children alike were on the verge of starvation. The resources of the natives being thus so seriously crippled, the traders and small immigrant farmers were also suffering severely.

Since the time of my visit to these regions, things have become much worse. In numerous instances the natives have to be satisfied with one meal a day; many cannot get even that. The Government does not seem disposed to help, such is the strength of the race feeling. Many of the colonists, owing to the long-continued and severe depression in trade, are unable to do much for them; while others who might lend a helping hand, from dislike of the natives withhold the needed supplies. The resources of the missionaries are being taxed to the utmost. In these circumstances, I appeal to the Christian people of this country in behalf of the famishing thousands in South Africa, and shall indulge the hope of a speedy and hearty response. Whatever subscriptions friends may be disposed to send to my care, will be transmitted for distribution without delay to trustworthy parties in the Colony.—Yours faithfully,

Robert Young.

AMONG THE HOP-PICKERS.

HAMPSHIRE.

THE actual "yield" of hops this year falls considerably short of a good average. Whatever failure, however, there may be in the hops, there certainly is none in the pickers, either as to numbers, or as to their general appreciation of the provision made for their comfort and welfare. A striking illustration of this was furnished one evening, when a gipsy suggested a vote of thanks to "the kind gentleman who has got us these 'ere nice meetin's, and these 'ere tents to 'ev our teas in!" Nor did this proposal lack support, for another quickly rose to add his testimony, and thus this unexpected vote of thanks was proposed, seconded, and carried with universal acclamation.

Mr. Samuel Chinn, the originator and director of the hop-pickers' mission in the Alton district, has, for many years, studied to promote the well-being of these wandering tribes. Although like the Ishmaelites, the gipsy's hand is proverbially against every man, and they think that every man's hand is against them, so far as the Alton district is concerned the unselfish interest which has been extended to them for nearly a quarter of a century, has, in some measure, broken down the barriers of prejudice between them and ordinary mortals.

Following the promptings of God's Spirit on the one hand, and weighing the probabilities of support on the other, Mr. Chinn has ventured to add another tent to the number erected last year, so that the hoppers located in the several villages of Bentley, Holybourne, Binsted, Wyck, Worldham, and Selborne, each have one provided for them. To these the gipsies repair, when the day's work is done, to find tea provided for them, after which a service is held, comprising Gospel preaching, Gospel Temperance, Gospel song, and often a magic lantern. It is gratifying, however, to note that they are never more still, and never does a more solemn influence pervade the gatherings, than when the preachers are telling the simple story of the cross, and urging the immediate acceptance of God's gift.

One poor fellow, who attended the meetings last year, was awakened and saved. Soon after leaving he became ill, and was removed to the Islington Infirmary, where he died. Visited at his own request by Mr. Farley, who had been instrumental in his conversion, he passed away with the last verse of Psalm xxiii. upon his lips. "Goodness and mercy here," he said, "and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord for ever there."

As to the good carried away when the hopping is over, eternity alone will reveal it. The following case was related to one of the missionaries: "Five years ago, when here, Miss Bell (one of the lady helpers) gave me a Bible, and marked several places. When I got away I began to read, and thought what a wonderful book it was. So I kept on reading for six months or more, until it made me very uneasy. At length I went to some special meetings held by Mr. Haslam, and I then and there found the Saviour. Soon after this my husband was prayed for, and he got saved too."

As indicating a restraining influence brought to bear on some who are not fully saved, the following case was told us by one of the workers: "Two years ago a man came to this tent for the first time. He came regularly, and I am told he has been a different man ever since, though not really saved. To-day he came again, and was pricked to the heart. After the service he was found weeping like a child, and said that the preacher's words seemed to come right home to him." The careful reader will also observe a wise discrimination on the part of the missionary, who did not mistake the "difference" for regeneration. We may here observe that Mr. Chinn is blest with valuable and experienced co-workers. These include city missionaries, colporteurs, and evangelists, and two Congregational ministers. Most of his helpers, seventeen in number, have engaged in the tent work for several seasons, and appear to be particularly adapted for such service, and equally happy in it.

is, of course, a sine quâ non, or else their influence in the hop-gardens would be nil. The gipsies thus see their good example as well as hear their good words, and the effect is marvellous. At one tent sixty pledges have already been taken, and out of these Temperance converts may be seen, night after night, half a dozen or more on the platform, condemning the use of alcohol, and urging their comrades to give it up. Nor are their exhortations in vain, for even those who decline to abstain altogether certainly avoid excess for the time being. Meeting with a policeman stationed among the hoppers I enquired if he had much to do. "Scarcely anything, sir," he replied; "there's no drunkenness or fighting to speak of in my district." This will largely account for the improved condition of things as testified by one of the inhabitants of Alton, who said, "I used to be afraid to go near the gardens in hopping time, but there's no need to be afraid now; there has been a wonderful change during the last ten years."

It must not, however, be supposed that this mission has been maintained without difficulty. Among other obstacles to be overcome was the native prejudice of the surrounding inhabitants, many surmising that if provision were made for attracting the gipsies in large numbers, the result would be perpetual trouble. So strong was this conviction that one gentleman declared he would rather give £50 than have a tent put up in his neighbourhood. However, after seven years' work in this very district, public feeling is so changed that the annual expenses are now met by residents in the immediate locality. The additional tent, already referred to, was procured on this wise: A gentleman, hearing of the good work, sent a contribution of £5 toward the hire of another tent. "On the strength of this," said Mr. Chinn, "I at once arranged to have it, trusting God to send the remainder of the money. If ever a work was begun and continued in entire dependence on the Lord it is this."

Meanwhile the local interest increases. So convinced now are the farmers of the value of the mission that they are beginning to aid it in every form. There is a decided improvement in the sanitary arrangements, in some districts barracks being provided, the comfort of which far exceeds that of the hut and the internal arrangements being more conducive to decency and good behaviour. A lawyer said, "You are taking all my work away;" but he gave a donation notwithstanding. In like manner, even brewers acknowledge the value of the mission, and help it by their subscriptions, even though it teaches men to avoid the beer-shop. In pursuance of this some of the hop-growers have consented to alter the usual custom of providing beer and cake at the close of the season, substituting packets of tea and cake. The good and far-reaching effect of this change cannot be easily calculated.

Were arguments for the existence and sustenance of such missions as these needed, they could be multiplied ad infinitum. Were it only for the temporal advantages which they furnish, we might well wish them success. But bearing in mind the appalling ignorance in which these poor creatures are brought up—ignorance concerning the very existence of God, then these missions are seen to be as much an absolute necessity for gipsies as churches are for other folk. On the other hand, it is, perhaps, equally painful to find here and there, among this poverty-stricken race, some who have enjoyed the advantages of education, position, culture, and refinement. One of these formerly held the position of Master in one of our foremost Colleges. Another had been the proprietor of a large hotel.

"Music hath charms," &c. The young ladies and gentlemen who volunteer their services in providing musical evenings must certainly feel repaid by the evident appreciation of their efforts. We were delighted to hear selections from The Christian Choir, interspersed with Songs and Solos, rendered in a manner that gave intense pleasure to the rustic audiences, and all pressed home to the heart and conscience by well-directed utterances. Neither would it be too much to say that these admirable remarks, in which Christ and his Gospel were kept well to the front, were listened to with as much interest by the hoppers as was the music.

In taking leave for the present of our worthy friend, we can but express our hope that his life may long be spared to continue this good work, and that the desire of his heart for its extension may be granted. Four additional tents were asked for in view of the present season. One only was forthcoming. Perhaps ere another year the remaining three will be furnished by generous donors. Among the regular contributors is the present Attorney-General, who resides in the neighbourhood, and takes an interest in the mission. Over £300 are required to defray the expenses of the present season, of which sum we learn that, as yet, scarcely anything has been received.

I. BRIDGE.

The work of preaching the Gospel to the tens of thousands of men, women, and children, who go from London and other populous places into Kent, Sussex, Surrey, and Hants for hop-picking has become quite an institution. A few years ago only a few men and women were to be found engaged in it; now dozens are so employed: some, private ladies and gentlemen resident in the hop districts; others, under the auspices of such men as Mr. J. J. Kendon, Goudhurst, Mr. G. Gillingham, Sevenoaks, and Mr. Chinn, Alton, Hants. These indefatigable workers spare no pains if by any means they may save some.

During the last fourteen days I have visited a number of the gardens, and shared the privilege of preaching the Gospel to the multitudes. The variety of classes represented in these annual outings is most interesting. The method of service is, as a rule, to visit the gardens during the day, and talk to the pickers singly or in small groups. Meetings are held in the dinner-hour at the encampments, and in the villages in the evening. Low and degraded as some of the pickers are, there is a general respectful attention to the kind words spoken to them. I met with a number who could testify to what the Gospel had done for them.

Yonder is a man alternately running and walking to keep up with the horse and trap, which is conveying some of the preachers to the evening meeting; he is seen at the service, and returns the way he came. "Where have you been?" says Mr. B. "To the meeting, sir; and I do thank God for this Hop-pickers' Mission; I was saved last year, and I love the meetings."

Another, known for his wickedness for years, brought a letter with him this year for Mr. Kendon. It was from a local preacher in the village where he lived. Here it is:—

> "DEAR SIR,—Mr. C—— wishes me to write a letter to you. He wants you to know he hears the same Gospel at home as in the hop-field. We can look on him as a brother in Christ; and he is very anxious you should be encouraged in your work for the Lord. "R. S."

This poor fellow was once a terror to the neighbourhood; now he is a bright ornament of grace, and bold for his Master. On all sides during my visits I heard much thankfulness expressed for the benefits the Hop-pickers' Mission give to many who, when at home, hear little of the Gospel; for they get swallowed up in the wickedness of London, and forget God.

But there are improvements needed, and which could easily be supplied by willing hearts. First of all, the men whose names I have mentioned want more support; then they could do more work, and do it more effectually. These could organise the whole of the hop districts if they had means, for many brethren would be glad to help them. Then more workers are needed. Tens of thousands are not touched as yet, and one man can scarcely work alone, and hold meetings too.

A good many local Christians are waking up, but the Churches are inactive. They might reap good fruit if their places were opened for lively and earnest preaching and singing. In one village a publican lends his wagon regularly, and the villagers provide lamps; but the ministers are not seen.

But who are the workers? I found a pastor from Yorkshire, another from Herefordshire, City Missionaries from London, students from Harley House, and a host of others. The growing effect of the work is also most marked. Those places where the Gospel has been preached the longest are the most orderly and quiet, and new places visited only two years ago are not the same now, so the villagers say.

Pray that he may be restored, and able to carry out his engagement at Maindee.

DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

ANOTHER Convention has come and gone, and the opinion of many who have attended this refreshing series of meetings is that it is the best Convention which has as yet been held. Certainly the attendance at all the meetings, especially those in the evening, has been most encouraging, and the addresses of the various brethren who undertook to speak on selected topics have been of the most earnest, and in many cases, soul-stirring character.

At the opening meeting on Monday evening, when Mr. Fowler took the chair, it was seen that one who always took a pleasure in presiding on such occasions—Lord James Butler—was not in his usual place. It was explained that his absence was due to physical indisposition. Mr. Fowler stated that about 300 ministers had signified their intention to be present, and it is believed that about that number attended. A portion of Malachi iii. was read, and Rev. W. Proctor led in prayer.

The first address of the evening was given by Rev. Dr. Wright, upon the somewhat worn topic of "Christian Union." He handled it briskly, yet reverently, and a few sentences will serve to indicate the spirit and scope of his remarks. "We have lately read," he said, "of two regiments engaged in the Austrian service firing on the parade ground into one another's ranks. The circumstance was strange, but could easily be explained. The regiments belonged to different nationalities, accustomed to regard one another with scorn and hatred. Alas! that a similar scene should so often be exhibited on Christian parade grounds. The world is too often permitted to see in synods and congresses and general assemblies, conferences and conventions, the sad spectacle of the tribes of Christian Israel contending with each other, no man sparing his brother; one snatching with the right hand and remaining hungry, and eating on the left and not satisfied; everyone eating the flesh of his own arm and destroying his own strength. Manasseh fighting against Ephraim, and Ephraim against Manasseh, and both together contending against Judah." Rev. R. McCheyne Edgar followed with an address upon "Christian Patriotism," taking the Apostle Paul as his model of the true patriot.

TUESDAY.

Mr. David Drummond, J.P., who presided this morning in opening the Conference, gave a few interesting reminiscences of the gatherings of past years. Rev. F. Ellis (Leominster) delivered the first address on "His Workmanship," in the course of which he showed that in whatever way the soul was led to the Saviour, the work was Divine. It may come, he said, as the light from the east, gradually, till it spreads all over the plain, or, like the light as dazzling as that which made Saul fall to the earth. It may come as to Lydia whose heart the Lord opened so that she could receive the words which Paul spoke to her—in any case it is his workmanship.

Rev. W. Starr (Bolton), who spoke of "Fireproof Buildings," referred, in the words of Wesley, to the importance of building on the rock: "I would rather have a mere shanty of deal boards, if it was safe on a rock, than I would have the most pretentious building, if it only rested on a quicksand."

Half an hour was spent in prayer for Ireland, and this plan was followed each day of the Convention. Rev. J. S. Fletcher on making this announcement said: Our prayer, every day, must be that Ireland may be won for Christ. We do not ask for the cessation of present troubles merely, that depression may be removed and peace and contentment reign once more. All these are included in the one great request, that Ireland may be won for Christ. We should not despair, for the things which are impossible with man are possible with God. I would ask that the prayers which will be begun at our morning meetings here shall be continued in our families and congregations, that the ignorance, error, violence, and superstition, now prevailing may roll away and give place to the Sun of Righteousness. Rev. Dr. Marrable, Rev. J. Mullens, and other friends, led in prayer.

The closing address of the morning was given by Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser, on "The depths and high places." In the course of his remarks he spoke sternly and eloquently upon the thing which passes under the name of "Modern Thought." It seems to me, he said, that your modern thought is a going down from the high places to the low. Perhaps in Ireland you have not so much trouble in reference to this as we have on the other side. I do not know how it is, but modern thought is going down, and by rapid steps, into moods of weariness, into a despondency from which there is no recovery, that it is descending to a conclusion of despair.

In the afternoon the Archbishop of Dublin presided over a meeting at which reports of the Lord's work were presented. In the opening of an admirable address he said, we meet here today as fellow Christians. We belong to various denominations and different branches of the Catholic Church of Christ. We do not desire to ignore or to minimise the important differences which, alas! separate us at present; but on this occasion we meet as fellow-servants of the one common Master, our dear Lord Jesus Christ. And we desire that for the present, at least, we shall forget our differences, to concentrate our minds on those eternal verities as to which we are all agreed. I know of no way in which we can better draw together the bonds of Christian love and fellowship than by coming together, as we do this afternoon, for the purpose of telling one another tidings of the good work which we are doing in our respective fields of labour on behalf of our true Master, for the regeneration of the fallen world, which He redeemed, for the advancement of his kingdom, and the setting forth of his glory. All will admit that this certainly is a good object to have in view. Among the brethren who followed with earnest addresses were Pastor C. Spurgeon (Greenwich), Rev. Mr. Starr (Liverpool), and Rev. Mr. Johnson, an African.

Rev. E. Stuart, at the close of the meeting, gave a stirring evangelistic address on the question of social purity. He expressed the hope that they would live to see the time when the same high standard of purity should be demanded of men as was demanded of woman.

The evening meeting was a very large one, and it became necessary to hold an overflow meeting in the Presbyterian Church. Rev. E. A. Stuart led off with a deeply devotional address on "Talking with Jesus," and was followed by Mr. Starr, who spoke earnestly upon the sin of idling in the market-place when there was so much work to be done for Christ.

[Notes of the subsequent proceedings will appear in our next.]

PRACTICAL RIGHTEOUSNESS.—The following passages give some of the instances in which "righteousness" means "alms-giving":—Ps. cxii. 4--9; Ps. xxxvii. 21, 25, 26; 2 Cor. vii. 9; Matt. vi. 1—4; Deut. xxiv. 13; Job xxix. 14; Isa. lviii. 8; Job xxxv. 7—9; Hosea x. 12; Dan. iv. 27. The "righteous"=he that giveth to the poor. Prov. xxi. 26; Isa. lvii. 1, 2; Job xxxvi. 6, 7. "With righteousness shall He judge the poor." Isa. xi. 4; Ps. lxxii. 2, 4; Ps. ciii. 6.

A VILLAGE LIBRARY.—The Leisure Hour, for October, says:—"We have seen lately the report of an interesting event in a country place. Connected with a chapel where Rev. W. Urwick, M.A., laboured for nearly a quarter of a century, was a 'Mutual Improvement Society,' in which the pastor took warm interest. One of the youths, Mr. Thos. Greenwood, F.R G.S., now prosperous in London as a newspaper editor and proprietor, presented a library to his old schoolroom at Hatherlow, near Stockport, and Mr. Urwick was invited to inaugurate the event. It was a graceful thought and suitable gift, and it is worth recording as an example to be followed by those who look back with pleasure to the congregation or the parish associated with their early training. Many are the rich merchants in England, or in the Colonies, who could thus do good to the youths of their native place."

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

THESE devoted brethren, well known throughout the land as Mr. Spurgeon's College Evangelists, are prosecuting their London mission with their accustomed ardour. Beginning with a three weeks' campaign in Dr. Barnardo's new and splendid hall, a nightly congregation of three thousand hearers furnished incontestable evidence of the attractive power of the Gospel of Christ. The succeeding mission, held at the Shoreditch Tabernacle (Rev. William Cuff's), was equally remarkable for the crowds that were gathered, and the interest that was maintained during the four weeks of its continuance, the spacious building being filled every evening by persons who were eager to be shown the way of peace.

As the result thus far, we are informed that hundreds have been led to the Saviour, sometimes as many as forty in one evening. Among these, on one occasion, were a husband, wife, and daughter, all saved. A lady was also brought to decision, who came to one of the meetings on the last evening before leaving England for the Continent, and was constrained there and then to give herself to God. Our brethren are also rejoiced at finding fruits of their former London mission, held three years ago. The word has also reached the hearts of infidels, a number of whom confess to its power.

Among the additional features of the good work may be noted the seven o'clock meeting on Sunday mornings at the Shoreditch Tabernacle, at which 1500 persons were generally present; also the Wednesday afternoon meetings for women, on which occasions the tabernacle was filled. Equally encouraging have been the services for men only, while the "Service of Song" on Saturdays has proved a most enjoyable finish to the week's engagements, and a fitting prelude to the morrow's worship. At one place, during the communion service on Lord's Day evening, Mr. Fullerton, addressing the spectators in the gallery, exclaimed, "How many of you are ready to declare yourselves on the Lord's side?" and immediately about seventy persons arose. This incident in the service was felt by those present to be exceeding striking, and produced a deep impression.

At Bethnal Green Baptist Chapel, Mrs. Fullerton has conducted some very helpful women's meetings on Sunday afternoons. In connection with each of the missions some Christian ladies established a crèche for the babies, and took charge of them while the mothers attended the meetings. Rev. A. G. Brown has also taken part in some of the services.

Other missions are arranged for at Abney Park Congregational Chapel, and elsewhere, to which we hope to refer later on. At the present time the missionaries are holding crowded meetings each evening at Devonshire Square Chapel, Stoke Newington (Rev. W. Ellis's), with every sign of much and permanent blessing. Mr. Fullerton has published a sermon entitled "The King's Chamber." Those who would know the secret of the author's preaching power should procure this allegory, which is most attractive, instructive, and beautiful. (Price 6d. Mack, 28, Paternoster-row).

OBITUARY.

MRS. W. HOLMES.

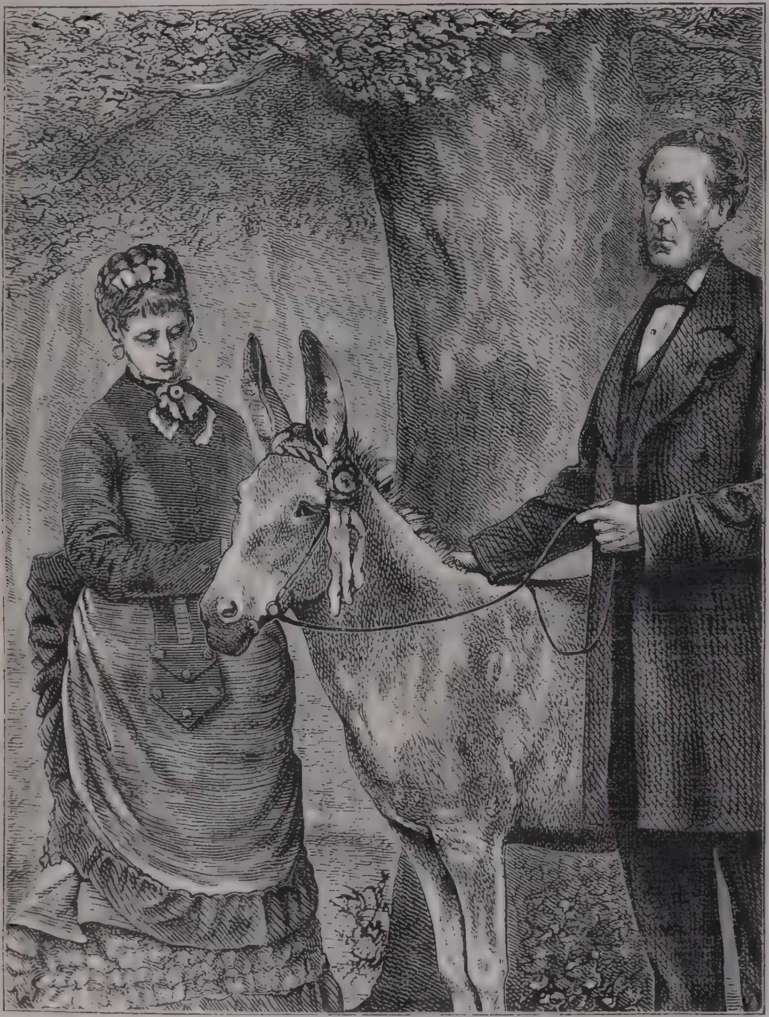
BY the death of Mrs. Holmes, the wife of Mr. W. Holmes, of Alexandra-road, West Hampstead, a large number of Christian workers have lost a sympathetic companion, and the poor a true friend. The family have been so closely identified with the Evangelistic Mission that the name of the deceased will always be associated with the many works at Kilburn Hall. The funeral took place at Hampstead Cemetery, on Sept. 17, in the presence of a large gathering of friends.

REV. T. JONES, PONTYPOOL.

We regret to record the death of Rev. Thomas Llewelyn Jones, for many years the venerated minister of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, Pontypool. For two or three years past the reverend gentleman had been in delicate health, and for about twelve months prior to his decease had been quite unable to discharge his pastoral duties. A chest affection with which he was first afflicted finally developed into consumption, and, after a lingering illness, borne with fortitude and resignation, he expired on Monday, Sept. 21.

The Late
EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

THE worst fears of an anxious public have been realised, and the lamp of Lord Shaftesbury's mortal life, which for weeks had been burning low, went out in the afternoon of Thursday last, October 1. Not only his immediate relatives and friends, but myriads of people who have never seen or known him in the flesh, are feeling to-day a keen sense of personal bereavement at his decease. A whole world mourns for one of the most godly, devoted, unselfish, and catholic-hearted men of the nineteenth century. Born to inherit a great title, with the lofty social position and the far-reaching influence that accompany it, Lord Shaftesbury has shown to mankind how these advantages may be turned to noble account, in promoting the happiness and well-being of those less privileged in the circumstances of their birth and their worldly possessions. If all his compeers in rank were a tenth part as faithful to the trust committed to them, the order of England's nobility would be safe from assault, and the sum total of human happiness would be infinitely greater to-day than it is. His consecrated and singularly fruitful life is a standing reproach to this grovelling, and self-seeking age, and will, we trust, furnish a stimulus to true nobility and Christlikeness of aim and endeavour, among all classes of society, during many generations yet to come.



"COSTER" AT ST. GILES'S PARK.

As we quote, from other sources, some account of the outstanding incidents of Lord Shaftesbury's life, there is no need that we should ourselves enter into these particulars. We are very glad to know that an authentic and complete narrative of so benignant a career will soon be in the hands of the reading public. We trust it will be issued at a popular price, such as will render it accessible to the masses of our rising youth, so that they may be spurred on by his high example to seek for distinction in the walks of pure living and philanthropic acting that marked Lord Shaftesbury's long and illustrious career. We grieve to think that never again shall we behold his stately figure and classic countenance, or hear his earnest soul-stirring words; but, through the story of his blameless and beneficent life, as well as by the memories of the past, and the rich results he has achieved, he, being dead, shall yet speak. Many of the social evils against which he so manfully fought have either been rooted out or largely modified; but human selfishness and human sin are still rampant among us in myriad forms. The world needs many men and women who, like the late Earl, will throw themselves into the breach, and spare neither time nor strength in doing battle with these Goliaths of the body social and politic. If the same weapons of truth, and sympathy and lovingkindness are faithfully wielded, God will give the same success, and lay up in store the same reward as that now enjoyed by our noble friend who rests from his many and abundant labours. To the eye of sense it seems as if no one were left worthy to wear the dropped mantle, but God is able to raise up fit servants to himself in this era of the world's great need.

FROM "THE TIMES."

In Lord Shaftesbury there has passed away the most eminent social reformer of the present century. It is not too much to say that he had acquired world-wide fame as a philanthropist, and that his name is inextricably interwoven with many of the most humane movements of two generations. Pre-eminently the friend of the poor, the degraded, and the outcast, his generous sympathies and his ceaseless efforts on behalf of the classes in whom he took so deep an interest have given him a high place in the illustrious roll of benevolent Englishmen. Whatever errors of judgment he may have committed during his long career, these are forgotten in the universal sentiment of regret which the announcement of his death will awaken. It is interesting, and perhaps not a little singular, to note that one of the most steadfast and powerful friends which the humbler classes have ever had, as well as one of the most trusted, did not belong to their own order of the commonalty, but to the privileged order of the aristocracy.

Anthony Ashley Cooper, K.G., D.C.L., seventh earl and a baronet, was born on the 28th of April, 1801. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a first-class in classics in 1822, graduated M.A. in 1832, and was created D.C.L. in 1841. As Lord Ashley, he was first returned to Parliament as member for Woodstock in 1826. All through his political career he assumed an attitude of independence, and although he had a brief experience of official life, he had no desire for office, the details of which were somewhat irksome to him.

FACTORY REFORM.

One of the greatest humanitarian movements with which the name of Lord Shaftesbury will be permanently associated is that which led to the beneficent legislation for the factory operatives. It was begun by Mr. M. T. Sadler and Mr. Richard Oastler in 1830, but when the former lost his seat in 1883, Lord Ashley became the Parliamentary champion of the cause. The evidence which he brought together in the latter year concerning the treatment of children in factories sent a thrill of horror through the length and breadth of England. Slavery in the West Indies had nothing worse to show in comparison with it. In the manufacturing districts wages were at a starvation rate, and the children were literally worked to death—murdered by inches. Mrs. Browning, in her pathetic poem, "The Cry of the Children," did not exaggerate one whit the terrible condition of things which prevailed. There were everywhere a dreadful reality of oppression and a fearful sense of injustice, of intolerable misery and of intolerable wrongs, more formidable than any causes which ver led a people to insurrection. But although he main credit for the ameliorating measures which ensued rightly belonged to Lord Shaftes- ury, he himself, in the preface to a volume of is speeches published in 1868, paid a generous ribute to the efforts of those who preceded him n the good work.

Lord Ashley went down to the factory districts o investigate for himself the condition of the peratives. Describing his visit many years fterwards he said, "In Bradford especially the ruits of long and cruel toil were most remark- ble. The cripples and distorted forms might e numbered by hundreds, perhaps by thousands. . friend of mine collected a vast number to- ether for me; the sight was most piteous, the eformities incredible. They seemed to me, uch were their crooked shapes, like a mass of rooked alphabets." While the factories were earfully unhealthy for all, accidents thinned the anks of the workers. The sympathetic nature f Lord Ashley was stirred to its depths, and ccordingly, in the Session of 1833, he brought orward his Bill for shortening and regulating he employment of children in the factories, and or protecting them against maltreatment. But ery little was done.

We get glimpses of Lord Ashley's attitude owards other questions at this time. Baron unsen speaks of his lordship's work among the hieves, and with the ragged schools. On one ccasion, together with Jackson, the City issionary, he met 270 thieves at their own ish, to consult with them as to the means hey could employ to lead better lives. He ained the hearts of the poor and the unfortunate n an almost unexampled manner. Nor should is efforts in connection with the abolition of avery be forgotten.

TOILERS IN MINES.

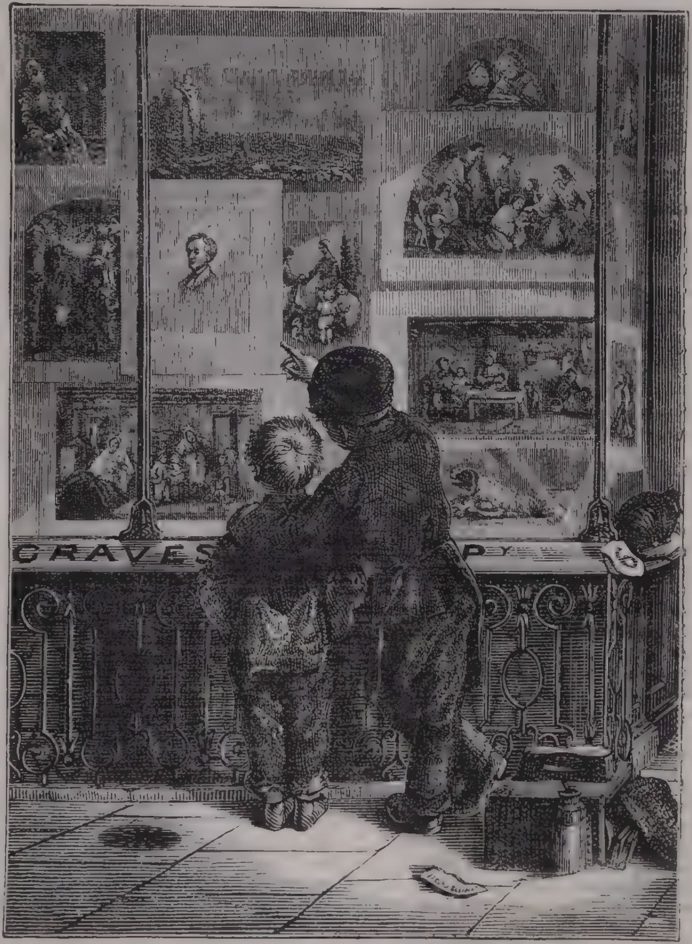
Through the exertions of Lord Ashley a Com- ission was appointed in 1840 to inquire into he employment of women and children in mines nd collieries. This was the second branch of his rdship's great remedial work. The report of he Commissioners was one of the saddest and ost melancholy documents ever submitted to arliament. It was shown that children were nsigned by their parents, almost from the cradle, perpetual labour, at an employment entailing n them premature adolescence, disease, and isery, and amid scenes which insured a moral egradation even worse than the physical suffer- g which accompanied it. With regard to the omen, it was further established that they were ompelled to work like beasts of burden in oisome caves where the sun never entered, rrounded by an atmosphere of vice and pollu- on which could hardly be depicted with decency, nd under circumstances of coarse and loathsome xposure to which savage life scarcely afforded a arallel. In June, 1842, Lord Ashley moved r leave to introduce a Bill founded on the Com- issioners' report, and restraining the frightful ils complained of. It seems incredible in a hristian country that such cruelties as he escribed could ever have been inflicted or orne. Women and children were harnessed ith chains, like animals, in trucks, and pur- ed their labour under the most galling and ainful conditions. Eighteen hours a day of the ost distressing occupation physically, and the ost disastrous morally, was of frequent occur- nce. "In the West Riding of Yorkshire," said ord Ashley, "it is not uncommon for infants of en five years old to be sent to the pit. About alifax and the neighbourhood children are metimes brought to the pits at the age of six ears, and are taken out of their beds at four clock. Bradford and Leeds the same; in ancashire, from five to six. Near Oldham ildren are worked as low as four years old; d in the small collieries towards the hills me are so young they are brought to work in eir bedgowns." Similar tales came from cotland and Wales, and it is not surprising at in these hotbeds of horror and suffering all rms of disease and vice were rampant. The ouse of Commons was amazed and indignant the harrowing details laid before it. By way legislative provisions, Lord Ashley proposed first, the total exclusion of female labour from all mines and collieries in the country; secondly, the exclusion of all boys under thirteen years of age; thirdly, the exclusion of all males under twenty-one years of age as engineers, youthful engineers being a fertile cause of accidents; and fourthly, the abolition of apprenticeship. With some slight amendments only, this truly benevolent and salutary measure passed into law.

THE TEN HOURS' BILL.

The Ten Hours' Bill controversy had now become a burning question, this and the Anti-Corn Law Agitation being the most pressing social movements of the time. Sir James Graham brought in a Ministerial Bill placing further restrictions on labour in factories. Lord Ashley's proposal of ten hours was rejected by 297 to 159. As he could not get all he wished, Lord Ashley wisely took all he could get. The measure went to the Upper House, where it soon passed and became law. It contained many important provisions which had a strongly beneficial effect upon factory workers. Not long afterwards, Lord Ashley drew up an amending Bill, still in favour of the ten hours' limit. It became law, but its operation was greatly impeded by legal intricacies and every form of ingenious difficulty. In 1848 Lord Ashley resumed charge of the measure, and "in 1850," as he himself afterwards wrote, "emerging from many struggles, it was reduced to good working order. One provision alone was wanting, the provision for confining the labour of children of early years within the hours between six and six. This was effected in 1853 by Lord Palmerston, then Secretary of State for the Home Department; and since that day the Act has required neither impulse nor amendment." The Factory Acts have, nevertheless, since been extended and consolidated. Lord Ashley lived to see the day when those who had bitterly opposed his crusade personally thanked him for his efforts.

RAGGED SCHOOLS.

Another noble movement with which Lord Shaftesbury's name is inseparably connected was the establishment of ragged schools. He was, indeed, the life and soul of this enterprise. Alive to the necessity for laying hold of the waifs and strays of our great cities before they were manufactured into hardened criminals, Lord Ashley founded his organisation for the benefit of all outcast classes. The slums of London forty years ago were as dangerous as they were disgraceful. Certain districts the police only dared venture to explore in companies and strengthened with arms. As was to be expected, juvenile crime increased at a rapid rate, and the cry arose for either more schools or more prisons. It seemed difficult to tell where to begin upon this mass of degradation and vice, and when the first advertisement in connection with the Field-lane Ragged School—the pioneer enterprise—appeared in The Times, there were, doubtless, many prepared to smile over what looked like a Quixotic undertaking. But Lord Ashley was as persevering as he was energetic, and again he set himself personally to examine into the condition of the classes he sought to benefit. The results of his investigations appeared in an article which he contributed to The Quarterly Review in 1846. He dealt fully with the question of the danger threatened to the State by the criminal classes, which were increasing at a fearful rate.



"THAT'S OUR LORD SHAFTESBURY."

In 1848 Lord Ashley pleaded the cause of ragged children in Parliament, and from that time forward, on the platform and in the Press, as President of the Ragged School Union, he laboured arduously and unceasingly for the movement. In a very short time he, and those who were associated with him in the work, had got hold of 10,000 children, snatched from the vortex of London. But the task was a very uphill one, and it was only the indomitable spirit of Lord Shaftesbury which prevented the movement from collapsing. Speaking so lately as 1883, on the subject of the Ragged School Union, his lordship said, "For thirty-nine years I have been President of this grand institution, and I have not missed one anniversary." After dwelling on the necessity for the work, he added, "Did we not, during the balmy days of the ragged schools, pick up from the streets some 300,000 boys and girls, all of whom, if they had not been taken up, would have been found before long among the dangerous classes?" This army of children became good and industrious citizens, entering into trade and domestic service in England and the colonies. The Ragged School Union acknowledged their indebtedness to their President by presenting him with his portrait on his eightieth brithday in 1881.

OTHER PHILANTHROPIC MOVEMENTS

were greatly indebted to him. There is, for example, the Shoeblack Brigade, which had its origin at the time of the great Exhibition of 1851. We find that in 1882 as many as 1619 new members entered the brigade in London, while 1584 left the ranks, 600 of them having been placed out in suitable situations. The Reformatory and Refuge Union was another benevolent organisation in which the deceased took a deep interest. The Union has now 589 Homes, with accommodation for nearly 50,000 inmates. It was owing to the intervention of Lord Shaftesbury that Lord Palmerston introduced his Bill for the Care and Reformation of Juvenile Offenders. Sanitary reform and the health of the people were also the objects of his solicitude. Lodging-house reform was another matter in which he rendered essential service, and among the measures passed by the Legislature at his instigation was a very necessary one for the registration and inspection of common lodging-houses.

By the death of his father in 1851 Lord Ashley was called to the Upper House. In his new sphere, however, Lord Shaftesbury relaxed neither his legislative nor his philanthropic efforts.

A severe affliction befell him in 1872 by the death of his wife. This lady, who was mourned by all classes, was the eldest daughter of Lady Palmerston, by her first husband, Lord Cowper.

When the lunacy laws of the country were in a disgraceful condition, Lord Shaftesbury took the initiative in amending these laws, and for upwards of fifty years he was Chairman of the Lunacy Commission. Great reforms were effected in the treatment of the insane; indeed, it is no exaggeration to say that a revolution has been witnessed during the past half-century in the management of public and private asylums.

HONOUR WELL BESTOWED.

In June, 1884, the freedom of the City of London was presented to the Earl in the Library of the Guildhall. The City Chamberlain, in enumerating the claims of the newest freeman, referred to his labours in connection with the Climbing Boys' Act, the Factory and the Hours' Acts, the Mines and Colliery Regulation Acts, the establishment of ragged-schools, training-ships, refuges for boys and girls, and other philanthropic institutions. Allusion was also made to his lordship's share in striking the fetters from the slaves in the colonies and elsewhere; to his successful efforts for ameliorating the condition of lunatics; to his encouragement of City mission work in the courts and slums of the vast metropolis, and of the circulation of the Holy Scriptures in the various languages of the globe; and, lastly, to his active and useful sympathy on behalf of wronged and tortured dumb animals. Never was the freedom of the City more worthily bestowed, and space would fail us to enumerate the undertakings of a charitable or remedial nature in which the late Earl engaged. The British and Foreign Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, the London City Mission, the Sunday-school Union, the Field-lane Refuges and Ragged Schools, the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, and a hundred other excellent organisations, were all indebted to him for active aid, sympathy, and advice. He seemed to be a connecting link between the highest and lowest classes in the State. While he enjoyed the esteem and friendship of his Sovereign, he was also the friend of men in the humblest stations, down even to the costermonger and the chimney-sweep. Wherever he appeared he invariably evoked enthusiasm and affection.

FROM "THE RECORD."

In a special supplement, consisting of forty-eight columns, The Record of last week furnishes a very full outline sketch of the public career of the deceased Earl. We quote the following from its concluding page:—

The last years of Lord Shaftesbury have been years of honour. In the earlier part of his public career he was often assailed with bitter hostility, and during the larger portion it was the fashion to sneer at the so-called narrowness of his religious views. But he had long outlived alike the odium and the ridicule which his uncompromising attitude excited, and for some years both political parties and all classes in the community have rivalled one another in showing respect and regard to the veteran philanthropist.

We have travelled, albeit hastily and imperfectly, for the field is a very extensive one, over Lord Shaftesbury's public life, as a Philanthropist, as a Legislator, as a Statesman, as a Protestant, and as a Church Reformer. In all these characters he had one and the same object —the good of his fellow-men. He saw, as scarcely anyone else saw two generations ago, that a vast change was coming over England. He saw that the reins of Government were gradually being shifted into new hands. He saw the Democracy while it was still a long way off. He saw also how unfitted the people were by their misery, their ignorance, and their irreligion to use properly the power which was surely coming to them. For their own, and for his country's sake, Lord Shaftesbury set himself to undo the heavy burden, to remove oppression, and to make the Gospel message known. He wanted to see England a happier and a better place for the millions of her toiling sons and daughters who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Assuredly he has succeeded. We have plenty of vice and plenty of misery to contend with; but, nevertheless, who will deny that there is more light and less shade than eighty years ago? To Lord Shaftesbury, far more than to any other one man, is due the measure of prosperity and contentment which the working classes possess. To him, more than to any other one man, we owe it that even in revolution we have peace. Lord Shaftesbury's philanthropy has been unique, first, because while other men have laboured for some one great reform, such as the liberation of the slave, his benevolence has been universal; and, secondly, because in addition to its abstract benefits his work has been directed to a great and patriotic end.

But Lord Shaftesbury's life has another side, less easy to write about, but at this time pleasantest of all to contemplate. In that hidden way, unseen by the world, and only dimly discerned even by a man's nearest and dearest, where each one is his real self, without any pretence, Lord Shaftesbury has walked with God. He was a good man, not in any mere conventional sense, not only in the sense which his pre-eminent philanthropy suggests, but in the higher, better sense in which we are taught that—"the just shall live by faith." United to the Saviour by a real, actual, conscious relationship, he lived in Him.

The motto of the Ashleys is "Love—Serve." In those two words the whole history of Lord Shaftesbury is contained. He loved God and served his neighbour.

LAST DAYS.

The decline of his long life has been gradual. For several years past attacks of illness have now and again laid him by, sometimes for many weeks together. But his vigorous constitution enabled him to recover to a great extent. Old age showed itself in loss of hearing, and in a sensible diminution of physical strength, yet the quiet orderly life both at St. Giles's and London went on much the same. He still read the lessons in the village church he had restored years ago, still presided at family worship before breakfast, and was still ready to show the beauties of his beautiful home to a guest. Last spring for weeks together he devoted morning after morning to furnishing details of his life to an intending biographer. All his old fire would return as he recalled his early struggles and triumphs, and the voice and gesture of his youth seemed to revive. But the strain was too great, and twice while so employed he fell back suddenly in his chair in a dead faint. When in town he has been a constant attendant for many years at Portman Chapel, both during the ministry of Canon Reeve and of his successor, Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke. But for several months past he has been at Folkestone, whither he went hoping to get rid of a troublesome complaint which had produced great weakness, and threatened to become chronic. Recovery was hoped for; but it was not to be. He seemed to be getting better, when one of the sudden east winds of which we have had so many this autumn gave him a chill. Inflammation of the lungs set in, and he became dangerously ill. A friend who saw him a week or two ago, writes: "Lord Shaftesbury said, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He has been my friend for long years.' He was full of calmness and peace in contemplating his very near removal. It was refreshing to witness such calmness and peace in the last days of one who had devoted his life more than any man I have known to the good of the people." During the past fortnight Lord Shaftesbury has suffered almost constantly from pain and restlessness, accompanied by ever-increasing weakness. The end came at 1.45 o'clock on Thursday afternoon, October 1, 1885, and he fell asleep, to the last fulfilling his own aspiration, "I trust that I shall go down to the grave, and rise again, with the line written upon my heart, 'Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.'"

The two engravings given on preceding pages are taken by permission from an excellent biographical sketch of Lord Shaftesbury's life and work, written by Mr. Holden Pike, and published by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. Both are speaking tributes to the deep solicitude felt by his Lordship for the welfare of the humbler classes. It was a memorable day in Golden-lane when the Earl was formally admitted into the Worshipful Company of Costermongers, and presented with a donkey as his insignia of membership. This animal, as represented in the cut, evidently had a good time at St. Giles's House while it lived. In the second picture the artist represents two City waifs looking at Lord Shaftesbury's portrait in a shop-window, the elder triumphantly explaining to his junior, "That's our Earl."

The numerous references made to the life of the late Earl in London pulpits last Sunday are an index of the universal esteem in which he was held. It would have been in accordance with the feelings of the public generally if his remains had been placed with due ceremony in the national mausoleum, Westminster Abbey, but as his Lordship desired his body to be laid in the grave at St. Giles House, Dorset, his quiet country seat, it is no doubt right that the wish should be respected. A public memorial service, however, is to be held in the Abbey to-day (Thursday) at noon, and the interment takes place on the following day.

FLORIDA.—Mr. Joseph Hannington, Alresford Lodge, Shanklin, Isle of Wight, writes:—I purpose to come up to London and stay at the Cannon-street Hotel, for a week, commencing Saturday, October 11, when I should be ready to see any who might like to call, between the hours of ten and six, and consult me with respect to settlement and orange growing in Florida.

SAMOA.—They have been having a memorable chapel opening in Matautu, Samoa. A handsome new chapel has been built entirely by the natives without any foreign aid whatever. The roof is its most remarkable feature, both as to strength and workmanship. Not the least interesting fact about it is that the whole of the timber used in the building was obtained from a forest previously tabooed as the dwelling-place of an ancient Samoan deity. A superstitious awe, it appears, still attaches to the forest, and it was only after the pastors had shown them the absurdity of this prejudice that the people in a body were induced to violate the ancient sanctuary.

A NOBLE LIFE.

THE LATE LORD SHAFTESBURY.

HAD I but heard thy welcome to the sky—
That greeting anthem from the choir on high,
As thy freed spirit winged its eager flight
To upward realms of everlasting light—
My soul, methinks, had gained a quickened pace,
Some added impulse in the heav'nward race;
Had lost its craving for the things of earth,
And prized more earnestly the second birth.

True Christian Peer! how many love thy name,
Whose lots were cast where fortune never came,
Whose infant years were passed 'mid want and woe,
'Mid scenes of vice a child should never know.
To snatch them from the slums, the haunts of sin—
For God, and Christ, their priceless souls to win;
To have them reared by virtue's fostering hand,
A source of pride, not danger, to the land,
Was but a portion of the good work done—
If not completed, yet by thee begun.

Such deeds are blest to God's departing saint,
As life ebbs out—the pulse becomes more faint:
Nor may the Tempter, with unholy power,
Vex the last moments of his dying hour.
Trusting in that which can for all atone—
The blood of Jesus, and in that alone—
His ransomed spirit, angel-borne above,
Now proves the measure of a Saviour's love,
In the bright mansions of its heavenly home—
Not thence to sojourn, and no more to roam.

POLMONT HOLINESS CONVENTION,

SEPTEMBER 23, 24, 25.

WHY is it that here and there, in so many places, hearts are being stirred to gather ogether to face the Lord? Surely it is that the ridegroom is nearing, the Master of the house returning, and the members of the household re impelled to come together that they may eet Him as a united band, and may join hands efore going out with freshened vigour to gather thers in.

Many have been making the holiday and esting time an opportunity for thus coming earer to each other, and when the large-hearted ospitality of the owners of Park Hall, Polmont, vited some of the Lord's messengers to give a ll to "dwellers in the villages," as well as in e cities, several responded.

Wednesday, Sept. 23, was the opening day. reparations had been widely and freely made, at all who came might feel they had been pected. The Lord will surely richly reward e loving forethought and labour of his servants. is not easy to provide for unknown hundreds r away from a town, but it was done with ving heart and ready hand.

As is always the case in these Conferences for The Deepening of Spiritual Life," the first y was devoted to searching and standing before od with bared heart, that He might reveal any therto unknown hindrances, and, by having em removed, deepen the channel for the bless- g we had met for. "Let us cleanse ourselves" as the key-note of the first day throughout. r. H. F. Bowker presided. Rev. Dr. Elder umming, of Glasgow, and Rev. E. H. Hopkins, ere the main speakers, but several others took rt. Dr. Elder Cumming's first word was from osea vii. 8—10, a solemn, searching message th the definite object of "touching the con- ences of Christians." He spoke of Ephraim, d's "pleasant child," here addressed in words ich would apply to so many amongst us. A cake not turned," only half-sanctified, not all-round Christian, but with some side or e department of their being turned away from d; something from which He was shut out. d what was the result? (1) Weakness— levoured strength," v. 9; (2) Decay—"grey rs here and there;" and (3) Ignorance of it 'he knoweth not." What was the cause? was worldliness: "He hath mixed himself ng the people." But what was the remedy? lling to be turned; a confession that the st was true, and that God must deal with it.

Rev. E. Hopkins followed on the words, "He is our Peace." That peace was the Lord Himself. He mentioned the two points of the covenant in Heb. x., remitting and inscribing. He will not remember the sins, and He will write his laws on the renewed heart, and we must not stop short at the first part. Mr. Bowker ended with a few words from Numb. xiv. 40, showing how disobedience was defeat. In the evening the Conference Barn was well filled, and people came from long distances. It was a stirring word of warning that they heard, a word which would shake and convict. Dr. Cumming took Hosea xiv. 8: "What have I to do any more with idols?" and he convicted many of hitherto unknown idols—Christian idols, something between Christ and us, though not necessarily a sinful thing in itself. And he showed two yielded idols, delivered up to him the week before, which had been held for twenty-five and thirty years, but were now renounced by the might of the strong incoming tide of God's unspeakable love.

Mr. William Sloan, of Glasgow, followed on "Shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of Spirits, and live?" "In subjection and live," for to be subject to Him was the only true life; and you only truly "live" when in subjection to Him. Subjection is the key to the true life. It is a very up and down life if it is not in subjection to Christ; but when you are completely yielded to Him, and the reins of life are given over to Him, then there follows the perfect peace and the entire rest of heart. You only have power in proportion as you are in subjection; then you can speak like the Centurion, who gave as the reason why he could command others, that he was himself "under authority."

The next day all that the Lord is ready to put into the searched and emptied heart was dwelt upon in the glowing words of those who knew it to be true, and who had found that God's draining means God's filling.

Mr. Robert Wilson spoke first of the love which would flow in, and which ought to be allowed free exit towards others. Dr. Cumming took up the "all things" of 2 Peter i. 3, and went over perfect peace, freedom from cares, freedom from bondage of man's opinions; joy, usefulness, keeping, which we should find when the heart was prepared towards Him. Mr. Bowker alluded to 2 Kings iii., where the ditches were made, and then the silent filling followed, without sound of wind or sight of rain. So now, if the digging has been true and honest, we may claim the filling, though no afflatus of spiritual energy comes; we may count upon it as surely, though perhaps as silently, as Israel's ditches filled. You need not, dare not, wait for feelings; but expect and accept in rested faith, that God does fill after the trenches are made.

In the evening, Mr. Robert Stewart, of Glasgow, spoke with a promise of power and a glow of heart which made one glad to think of the reserve of power which the Lord has among the young men of his service. He took up Luke i. 74, and its pledge of deliverance. It shows that God's mind was right against bondage: and how the deliverance must come before the service could be in holiness and righteousness; the holiness, that which we must possess (wholeness) within, before the righteousness could be shown without. As to the deliverance, it was from three great enemies, the world, the flesh, and the devil. Each are met by the life of Christ within. Christ enters and indwells, and then He is a match for all. For the world, "I have overcome the world," and we cease to care for the world when He possesses us. The flesh (see Gal. v. 17). There is a stronger than the flesh; the Spirit Himself is against the flesh, and when He is yielded to, it is bound to follow, that "ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh." The devil, believe me, the devil thinks twice before he meets the risen Christ, for he remembers the wilderness too well. He is a terrible foe; do not think light of him. Those who doubt the personality of the devil cannot know the risen Lord. We cannot overcome or be like Christ unless He is our Life; then it is no longer imitation, but manifestation, He living out his life in us, so that our lives are a continuation of the life He lived on earth.

This point of Christ our Life was also pressed by others, Mr. Hopkins speaking of the point where the self-life ended and the Christ-life began; self let go, and Christ yielded to. Then he spoke on how every smallest detail of life might become a means of his life being manifested, and the very rubs and frets and hindrances be all "means of grace."

Mr. Govan, of Glasgow, took up Proverbs xxiii. 23, "Buy the truth, and sell it not." Christ is the Truth, and when you have Him your "opinions" vanish and "convictions" replace them. The truth is "Him that is true." What will you give for the truth? What are you willing to lay down? "Buy the truth,"—but what have we to give? We have nothing in ourselves; all our holiness is from God alone. We must give ourselves, that is the price of truth, and if we give ourselves to the truth, the truth will give Himself to us. You will get the truth by handing yourself over to Christ, and leaving yourself there. And "sell it not!" you cannot sell the truth without losing yourself. Judas thought he was selling only one life when he sold Christ, but he was selling two, his own and Christ's.

Mr. Livingstone Learmouth then said a few words which stirred all, for he turned the longing to see the Lord now into an enquiry, whether we were ready to meet Him if He should appear now. And the stir of glad assent showed that His name and presence were too personally dear to many to fear to meet them.

The testimony meeting revealed where and how the Lord had worked, and what He had been bringing home.

Before we separated, Mr. Walter Sloan, also of Glasgow, spoke on Isaiah xlv. 23, and told how the condition of knowing Christ as righteousness and strength was a bowed knee (v. 22), symbol of absolute submission, readiness to go all the way to Calvary with Him, and absolute separation from all that hinders if God tells you it is hurtful to your surrender. And as to knowing Him as our strength for service, we shall if we submit. Our position towards Him is to be what his was to his Father: "I can of mine own self do nothing."

In a word, the summing-up of the teaching of this happy country Convention is, that it was "self-abasing and Christ-exalting." May He be kept exalted, then self will be kept abased.

The two afternoon meetings were conducted by Mrs. Rowan and Miss Nugent, assisted also by Mrs. Livingstone Learmouth and Miss Macrath, with much simplicity and much power. Some heart-searching words were uttered, and they greatly helped forward the definite work for which the Convention was gathered.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Oct. 11, Luke xix. 28—40; Oct. 12, xix. 41—48; Oct. 13, xx. 1—18; Oct. 14, xx. 19—36; Oct. 15, xx. 37—47; Oct. 16, xxi. 1—13; Oct. 17, xxi. 14—24.

BLACKGANG, I.W.—In consequence of heavy family expenses since the decease of Mr. Reade, about £150 is needed for the mission work—this year especially. It is only right for Christian friends to know this, and we trust they may be led to send help.

OLDHAM.—Many of the Lord's dear children are in deep need through the ten weeks' strike in this place. Should any be moved to help, on their behalf, we would be very thankful. You would kindly receive and forward. (Gal. vi. 10.)

Yours till He come, JOHN STREET.
28, Albert-street, Oldham, Sept. 25.

CORREGE.—Pasteur Cremer has been doing a good work by touring through this Department and distributing Gospels, &c. He and M. Bazno were also enabled to hold meetings in several small towns and villages, owing to the kindness extended by the local prefects and mayors. He believes there is a good opening for an evangelist to devote himself to this work. Pasteur Cremer's address is Brive, Corrège, France.

STETTIN.—Pastor Tregeli thanks those friends who have kindly sent him books and papers, and says:—"We hope by God's help to build a Sailors' Home. Knowing as you do the many temptations to which sailors are exposed, especially in foreign lands, it may interest you to learn that there will be a large room set apart for English sailors, and I also expect that an English service will be held regularly in chapel connected with the Home."

Letters to the Editor.

THE SAME JESUS.

Sir,—It may be well to remember, at this time, that it was the same Jesus whose eleven miracles are recorded in Matt. viii., ix., whose eight woes are recorded in the 23rd chapter of the same Gospel. Seven of these woes are addressed distinctly to the Scribes and Pharisees, each time they are called by Him hypocrites; once they are addressed as "blind guides." In the 26th chapter of the same Gospel we find the chief priests and scribes and the elders of the people in the palace of the high priest, consulting to take Jesus by subtilty, and kill Him. Are not the disciples of Jesus in the present day those who are active workers among the sick and suffering, the same individuals or fraternities who lift up their voice in condemnation of the works of darkness, and who, like their Lord, will bring upon themselves the hatred of the ungodly in power? (Matt. v. 10.) A Constant Reader.

[The above was suggested by the quotation from The Methodist Times, p. 9.]

LACK OF REALITY.

Dear Sir,—I have seen a great many men and women, boys and girls, won to Jesus, at least, so far as one could judge from their changed life. They seemed to be bright Christians for a long time, said they were saved, and could prove it, and the old Christians sat and wondered at the light and liberty these young Christians had. But somehow they got cold and picked faults and went back again to the world, and are far worse than they were at first. We have visited them, prayed, and have done everything it was possible, but to no purpose. Would any of your readers say if backsliding is general in revival work, and what are the signs of a real work of grace? I am persuaded there is far too little Gospel preached through the Word, and too much importance attached to testimony, as the Holy Ghost only works through the Word. Many of our members are downcast and thinking about going into their old work again, seeing there is so little reality. W.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Sir,—I cannot join in the lamentation of those who look upon the result of Sunday-school teaching as a comparative failure. Having been actively engaged in the work for over thirty years, I have seen enough to bless God and to encourage me to labour still more fervently, if possible, than before.

But your article of this week points out the chief difficulty in the way of greater success, which we hope yet to see, viz., the opposing influence of home and companionship for six days out of seven; and your readers who are teachers will I am sure be grateful for any hint which may help them to bridge over this great gulf. The Sunday class is in many cases a little oasis in a desert of sin and indifference, and if we can but get the scholars to have thoughts of the teaching during the week it will surely help to spread the blessings of the water of life to the parched and deadly waste. The Bible is considered only a Sunday book, but to open God's blessed Word in the home every day of the week can only be productive of beneficial results, as is proved by abundant testimony.

These objects are attained in the International Bible Reading Association, which provides a selection of daily Bible readings, having relation to the "International" lesson for the following Sunday, thus leading to thought and preparation for the teaching. For a subscription of one penny annually, members are furnished with a list of readings and a circular letter of explanation and exhortation every quarter, and will be every month in 1886.

An inquiry addressed to the Hon. Sec., I.B.R.S., Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, London, E.C., will secure further information. The Association has a roll of 80,000 members in all quarters of the world. C. Waters.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to make a few remarks in reference to Sunday-school teaching mentioned in a recent letter in The Christian. Is it not frequently the case that doctrine is omitted or partially neglected in junior classes, perhaps under the impression that little ones cannot be made to understand it, with the result, as I believe, of a vagueness about the truth that makes conversion to God less probable. A class of little boys were carefully instructed about sin, atonement, justification, sanctification, and eternal life, by the help of the "Wordless Book" (coloured pages). This resulted —with God's blessing on the Word and prayer—in five of these boys deciding for Christ, and their conversion seems to be genuine.—Yours truly,

A CHRISTIAN DAILY PAPER.

Sir,—The suggestion of Mr. Chancellor expresses the long-cherished desire of many thousands of Englishmen. It is perfectly practicable, although the difficulties in the way are great. The first thing is to recognise the enormous importance of a first-class daily paper which shall fearlessly take the very highest ground, and estimate and appreciate the affairs of the world from the standpoint of a Christian man.

A survey of the present condition of the journalistic press is nothing less than melancholy. In the provinces, as well as the metropolis, there is a timid deference to the opinions and prejudices of those who treat personal, earnest religion with superciliousness and indifference; showing that, despite all heroic talk about the mission of the Daily Press, its managers are governed too largely by financial considerations to make them deserving of the name and fame of leaders of the people in the way they should go. Journals, the proprietors and editors of which are members of Christian churches, will devote column after column to horse-racing and theatrical intrigues, although they are well aware that gambling and dissipation are rottenness in the nation's bones. They cannot afford to resist the public opinion of the majority. They row a little, but drift a great deal more, on the tide of the thoughts and ways of men. They know their business and what pays. They are no worse than other men who, in their various callings, look after the main chance; but neither are they better. They put themselves up on too high a moral pedestal.

Mr. Chancellor is quite right in offering the conduct of the Press in the matter of The Pall Mall Gazette revelations as a test. On their own showing, their intense bitterness against that paper and its courageous editor was dictated by lofty moral purpose, and yet, forsooth, these very papers find not the slightest reason for avoiding the publication of voluminous reports of the State prosecution of Mr. Stead, and of criminalities of all kinds where no high purpose of rescue of the young, and punishment of hoary misdoers, effectually antidote the mischief. Their languid and incredulous mood of mild disapprobation of deeds of cruel shame contrasts strangely with their blazing enthusiasm against the man who offended their supersensitiveness by revealing these horrors.

But, when we turn from the need of such a journal to the difficulty of its establishment, we approach a complex subject. I do not doubt that the subscription can be raised and the shareholders secured; but the basis will have to be very carefully, laid and the first board of directors chosen with singular care. Let us never forget that no one scheme of religious thought must be allowed to "exploit" the new journal for its own news. If the Establishment man wishes to make it support the Bishops in the House of Lords, or the Disestablishment man utilises it to turn them out; if the Evangelical has to use it in the abatement of sacerdotal pretensions, or the Ritualist lays hands on it to bring the people back through the gate of the English Church to the fold of Rome; if, in short, it is used to exalt the 'isms, one by one; then the secular journals will rub hands in glee over a failure. We want a journal that shall fearlessly and openly recognise, and absolutely bow to Divine authority in worldly affairs; that shall in all temporal things keep touch with the Gospel; not preaching or exhorting and making itself a substitute for the pulpit, but frankly giving the first place to Divine thought in our secular history. Theatrical entertainments and horse-racing will not go without mention, but will shrink to their proper insignificance. The humanising, civilising power of missionary work at home and abroad will be represented not by shy paragraphs in small type, but will change places in "display" with the "opera," and "recent novels," and interesting cases in the Divorce Court, all of which will, in the new journal, not be shut out, but be reduced to their native proportions.

The land question, the housing of the poor, the appropriation of ecclesiastical and other public funds, public education, social purity, multitudes of questions, would be dealt with in a very practical and startling fashion, if the prophet Isaiah—a great political reformer—were editor of such a paper. But where is the supernal genius of an editor (and where are the heroic, self-supporting directors to support him), who on such a journal shall be "neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free," neither Establishmentarian nor Nonconformist, Evangelical, High or Broad, Methodist or Presbyterian, but occupy the commanding position of a plain, unflinching, loyal New Testament man, not plagued by patristic theology, nor troubled by much scientific theology (a precious thing in its proper place), but an astute, honest, courageous layman, saturated with the four Gospels, and judging all worldly strifes, contentions, diplomacy, competitions, sorrows and misdeeds, from the elevation of the Sermon on the Mount. No doubt there is such a rara avis to be found, but "behold, he keepeth the sheep" in the obscurity of his native fields. We don't recognise him among the tall sons of journalistic Jesse, who march in sight at present, unless he be the man who is at present the subject of prosecution.—Yours truly, Edward Butler.

[We have received communications from "A Wesleyan Minister," and others, for which we regret that we have not space.]

MRS. BUTLER'S LETTER.

Dear Sir,—Since writing my last, I have been informed that two English girls have returned from houses of ill-fame in Belgium since Mr. Munro succeeded Mr. Howard Vincent as Director of the Criminal Investigation Department at Scotland-yard, and that these two do not include Eliza Armstrong. I hasten to make this correction.—Yours, &c.,

Josephine E. Butler.

SALISBURY AND NORTHAMPTON.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow me, as a constant reader of The Christian, to correct a statement in to-day's issue, which I fear may cause pain to others beside myself. In the article headed "Salisbury Conference" it is stated of the company of Secularists addressed by Rev. John Wilkinson at Northampton, that such was their temper "that had a minister entered they would have left the room." So far from this being the case, other ministers beside myself were in the room, both during the tea which was given, and after, during the meeting. Beside this, I spoke to many present who live in this parish, and some of whom attend my church. I am sure that Mr. Wilkinson, who has been a guest at my house, and the excellent deaconesses, with whom I am united in Christian work would be the last to wish such an erroneous impression as that conveyed in the sentence to go forth unnoticed. As to the results and blessing of the meeting we can only speak with thankfulness and gratitude.—I am, yours sincerely, F. H. Wood.

ENGLISH GIRLS IN PARIS.

To the splendid gift of the Baroness Alphonse de Rothschild, for the erection of a wing to Miss Leigh's Orphanage, a second donation has also been added, bringing up the entire gift to £2000. The year has been, says Miss Leigh, one of sorrow and joy, trusted friends having been removed; but, on the other hand, many unexpected blessings have been received. The injury to the Mission House by the spring gales, joined with other necessary repairs, involved an outlay of about £1500. More than three hundred admissions have, however, been registered during the year, notwithstanding the inconvenience caused by the alterations. The majority of these young women have obtained situations, while others have been helped back to England.

The Y.W.C.A. Branch of the Institution, which has been removed from 88 to 26, Faubourg St. Honoré, has been a blessing to many. Miss Leigh holds that the one protection for lonely English girls in Paris is the personal knowledge of a living Saviour. Bible-classes, meetings for prayer, and Christian converse are, therefore, regularly maintained, as a means of leading them into experimental communion with Christ. In the Orphanage the dear children are being taught to love the Saviour, and more than one has acknowledged having given herself to Him.

Suitable articles, including old china, pictures, needlework, &c., for the approaching bazaar, or any other help, will do much to lighten the burden of this devoted sister in her endeavours to protect the English and American young women in Paris. The London office is 9, Serjeant's Inn, Fleet-street, E.C., where the report may be obtained from Mr. H. W. Hart.

BELGIUM.—At the International Conference against the abuse of alcoholic drinks, held at Antwerp, most of the foreign Temperance Societies were represented; French, English and German doctors gave the results of conscientious labour on this grave subject, and were unanimous in proving that the evil is frightful, and that alcohol is a poison which is killing more than cholera or war. A great reaction has been produced. Medical science, legislation, philanthropy and religion are all at work to fight against this scourge. Total abstinence by common consent is the only remedy for drunkenness.—Chrétien Belge.

Notices of Books, &c.

The Truth About the Stage. By Corin. 1s. Vyman & Sons. Evidently written by one behind he scenes. The result of a glance over its pages is a increased conviction that the stage, from a moral oint of view, is not worth mending. Avoid it together.

Lines and Links in the New Testament. By aleb C. Brown. 1s. Part I. Partridge & Co. n arrangement of Scripture texts on various pics. The author wisely allows the Word to eak for itself. The distinctive feature of each of e four Gospels is also dilated on, and the "lines d links" discoverable in the thoughts of the riters ingeniously shown.

The Rock, The Stone, and the Keys. 4d.—o Priests of God upon Earth. 4d.—The ord's Supper. 4d. By J. G. Gregory, Brighton. riend, 77, Western-road, Brighton.

If it were in our power, we would secure as large circulation for these cheap and prettily got-up ooks as Dr. Ryle's tracts have obtained. They e equally timely, and as likely to be useful. They e learned, vigorous, and singularly Scriptural. Vould that they could be sown broad-cast through e land!

Face and Foot Deformities. By Frederick hurchill, C.M. 8vo. 10s. 6d. Messrs. Churchill, ew Burlington-street, W. This book is illustrated ith some well-executed chromos, and though in-nded for a professional circulation, there are any interesting subjects discussed which might rove instructive to any readers who are afflicted ith distorted features. Mr. Churchill gives a mplete account of congenital marks in the face, pecially port wine stain, which has hitherto re-sted all attempts to eradicate it successfully, but hich may be destroyed little by little by a stip-ing process. Separate sections are devoted to is disease of the face, harelip, clubfoot, &c. No oubt deformities, as the author reminds us in his reface, seriously interfere with success in life. hank God there are no such barriers to the king-om of heaven. The perfection of symmetry and e perfect harmony of all God's creation will then ow how terribly sin has marred God's design and ippled humanity both in soul and body.

Present Day Tracts:—Ferdinand Christian aur. By Rev. A. B. Bruce. 4d.—The Christ the Gospels. By Henri Meyer. 4d.—Man, hysiologically Considered. By Alexander acalister. 4d. Religious Tract Society.

If it has been thought not superfluous to resus-tate the dead theory of the founder of the ibingen school in order to show more completely untenableness, the task could scarcely have been mmitted to more competent hands than those of e author of the "Training of the Twelve." Dr. ruce, with ample fairness, has expounded the eory, and shown at the same time the absurdities involves. The second of the above books is, yond measure, excellent. It is an unspeakably ecious unfolding of the earthly life and ministry the Lord Jesus. The view of our Lord's character condensed, but remarkably complete, reverent, d penetrative. Dr. Meyer has laid all English-eaking people under obligation. As to the ird of the "Present Day Tracts," the difficulty a reviewer is to persuade his readers that ch a large amount of invaluable matter on the atomy and functions of the human body can pressed into one of these cheap treatises. Nor the work of the Cambridge Professor of Anatomy ientific only. It adds an overwhelming argu-ent on behalf of the wisdom and beneficence of an's Creator.

'Our High Priest in Heaven" is the title of a new rk by Rev. T. T. Perowne, which will be published ortly by Mr. Elliot Stock.

Recollections of a Paris Evangelist. 2d. Partridge. is is the twenty-seventh issue of the deeply-interesting nual story of evangelistic work in France told by M. gnal. We heartily commend it.

We understand that the late Earl of Shaftesbury was gaged during the last year of his life in supervising a story of his lordship's career, which is being prepared for e press by Mr. Edwin Hodder, and will be published by essrs. Cassell & Co.

Humanity Cards. A series of cards advocating kindness animals. They are very prettily produced, with illustra-ns of various animals at the top, and may be had in a riety of languages from Mrs. Barrow, 11, Ampton-road, mingham, 1s. 1d. for 20, 4s. 9d. per 100.

The Sentinel. 1d. Dyer Bros. This small but earnest nthly, which has done such notable service to the cause public morals, is full of weighty articles and reports. We uld like to draw special attention to the second article, ich strongly emphasises the need of taking questions of ral reform out of the over-heated region of party politics, d of combining in their advancement the best men of all parties.

A DEBT RECOVERED.

A WIDOW tells us the following touching story: "I think I must tell you a little incident in my experience, which you may, perhaps, like to tell, to strengthen the faith of others.

"When much pressed in circumstances a few months back, and wondering from whence help would come, while I was on my knees before the Lord, I thought of some of the old patients of my dear husband who had never paid their debts, and I there and then asked the Lord to remind them of them, and, if they were able to pay, to press it on their consciences to do so. I specially asked for one gentleman, who owed more than the rest. I did not know in which quarter of the globe he was to be found, as the last letter I sent him was returned to me, and I afterwards heard he had gone abroad. About a fortnight from that time I received a letter from that same gentleman from Chicago, saying he owed me £13, and if I would send my present address, he would send me the money. I at once remembered my prayer, and of course sent the address, and in due course the money arrived. The debt had been standing more than five years. Truly, we have to do with the faithful God!"

BISHOP RYLE continues, in the face of High Church protests, to fraternise with Presbyterianism. He preached lately to a large audience in the Established Church at Pitlochry.

A STIRRING MEETING AT MILDMAY.

REV. J. G. PATON, missionary to the New Hebrides, with whose work and portrait our readers are familiar, gave farewell addresses last week at the Y.M.C.A. noon prayer-meetings at Aldersgate-street and Exeter Hall, and also at Mildmay Conference Hall.

This venerable and patriarchal-looking man is not so old as he seems, being only sixty-two; but the wondrous perils through which he has passed, and the terrible sufferings he has endured, have prematurely blanched his abundant hair and beard to a silken whiteness.

He came at the bidding of his committee (he has been connected for the past twenty years with a society in Victoria) to England and Scotland, to collect £6000 for a new mission vessel. He was told that times were bad, and he must ask the wealthy men, who thought, if you don't ask you don't want. But he had never asked an individual. He had told his wants to God, and to his people, and he had got £7000. But, besides the money, the Lord had given him three devoted young men as missionaries, and he was going to stay a month longer than he had intended, in order to get £400 more, to meet the additional expense of these new helpers.

The address at Mildmay was the story of a series of stirring adventures among the heathen, wonderful deliverances in answer to prayer, and no less wonderful manifestations of God's providence in sending the money now required.

When he went to the South Seas twenty-eight years ago, the people destroyed their babies and strangled their wives, and murdered the native preachers when converts had been made. They had held loaded muskets to his head and breast, and only the power of God in answer to prayer had saved him. If he had not had Jesus for his Lord, he must have become insane, for reason reeled amidst the horrors he passed through.

One of his experiences in regard to money was that during this visit a Christian woman in a small business brought him what he thought was a £1 note; he put it in his pocket, and she said, "Mind you don't lose it; it has cost me a great deal of labour." He looked at it, and found it was for £100. He remonstrated, but she persisted; and later on brought a second £100, saying she would give it to the Lord now, who had done so much for her, rather than leave it for her relatives to quarrel over after she was dead.

Prayer was made for three ladies (deaconesses), who were to sail the following day from Mildmay for Jaffa, and for ten shortly leaving for other places. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who presided, urged, in burning words, that prayer should be made individually, and by twos and threes, and by great gatherings, for missionary power, and referred to the day of Conference and Prayer for the Evangelisation of the World, which is to be held at Manchester on Dec. 8.

Mr. Lakshman Rao, a young Brahmin, converted six years ago, through Miss Anstey, at Colar, urged the claims of the heathen millions of India, China, Africa, and the whole world.

Evidently, amidst all the seething wickedness, God is stirring the hearts of his children, as never before, to fulfil his word; "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

CHIPPENHAM.—Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, held a very successful series of meetings here during the past three weeks of September. The tent held 400, but on Sunday evenings more than double that number have been attentive listeners. We have reason to believe souls have been saved, and I have met many Christians who have testified as to how they have been refreshed and strengthened by the services, and there has been a marked decrease in the numbers of those lounging around the public-houses. On Sunday afternoons and week evenings we have had good average attendances, and this in spite of the rough weather we have experienced on some occasions. G. Elliott Brinkworth.

NOTES OF EVANGELISTIC WORK.

CLAPTON PARK THEATRE.—Mr. Edwards, the coloured preacher, has conducted services in this building, attended by large congregations, followed by a concert by a choir of 200 voices.

OLDHAM, LANCASHIRE.—Mr. John Wilson and his wife have concluded a very successful nine weeks' mission services in a large wooden tent. Over three hundred have professed to find Christ, and many others have signed the Temperance pledge.

BRAEMAR.—Mr. Stevenson Blackwood has held four Sabbath evening services in the Free Church, Braemar, concluding on September 27. These services were characterised by very great power, and have been attended by manifest tokens of Divine blessing. T. L.

PLYMOUTH.—I have been five weeks on tour in the Western District, visiting the various regiments, and holding meetings with the men in barracks—everywhere kindly received, sometimes cordially welcomed, by commanding officers. There is proof of God's blessing upon the work everywhere. Samuel Sims.

BURGH-BY-SANDS.—We have had Richard Weaver for a week. The largest hall was engaged, accommodating nearly 4000 persons, and it has been nearly full every night. On the last night (Sept. 27) it was crammed. I am very sorry to see that his strength is somewhat impared; when I parted with him he was about to return to his home for rest.

P. J. Dixon.

STOCKTON-ON-TEES.—The Y.M.C.A. have published a brief statement of the proceedings of the past year, which shows that "the religious work has been kept steadily to the front, as the first and most important object of the institution." The classes for intellectual improvement have also been well attended and sustained, and the result is deemed by the committee to be alike satisfactory to teachers and students.

BRADFORD.—Mr. Henry Thorne has for ten days been holding Gospel services and Bible readings in the Lecture Hall of the Y.M.C.A. The power of God has been felt at all the meetings; many have been born again, and Christians have been greatly strengthened. Mr. Thorne gave an address on the "Perils of a Young Woman" in the Mechanics' Institute, on September 26, before a very large audience. J. B.

ALEX. DONALDSON, writing from the Salle de Conférence, Annemasse, says:—"I have begun work here with my esteemed friend, Mr. William Pos, who hopes soon to be in Khabylia. Will your readers join in earnest supplication for Savoy, which is lying under the region and shadow of death. Christians travelling in this quarter will find us. It is only an hour's ride from Geneva by tram-car, which passes the door."

MORECAMBE.—Mission services have been held at Emmanuel Free Church from September 13, by Rev. G. H. Jones, who gave very stirring and heart-searching addresses, which were listened to with deep attention. On September 27 the last of the services was held, and the large congregation was greatly moved. Mr. Jones has been for some months laid aside from over work, but we are glad to find he is again able to come forth in the Master's cause. C. R. A.

PORTRUSH.—Mr. Eyres, of London, has just concluded a most successful week of meetings among the children here. There was an after-meeting each evening, which was well attended, and, we trust, much blessed. A short meeting was held each morning from eight to half-past eight for prayer and praise. Mr. Eyres' addresses are earnest, his illustrations are attractive and impressive, and he has great faith in the work in which he is engaged.

GLASGOW.—An eight weeks' mission was opened at St. George's Cross Tent, on the 3rd of August, and up to the date of writing the workers have had abundant reason to keep praising the Lord for what He has wrought "under the canvas." Mr. F. E. Marsh, of the London Evangelisation Society, was the preacher during the first three weeks, and the messages which the Lord sent night after night through his servant were much blessed to the large audiences that came together to hear. Every night since the opening the tent has been well filled, and on Sundays there have been crowds both outside and inside. A goodly number have professed conversion—the majority being men—Mr. Marsh's robust preaching seeming to be specially attractive to the male sex.—Reaper.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Mr. John Dodds has just concluded a seven-days' evangelistic service at Morley-street Mission. The numbers have steadily increased, and some have been led to a knowledge of the truth. The meetings are to be continued, and we trust that the work which the Lord has commenced will be carried forward to a successful issue.

CITY TEMPLE.—On the last Sunday of Dr. Parker's holiday the pulpit of the City Temple was occupied by Dr. Rentoul, Barrister-at-law. This is the second time that a barrister has preached in the City Temple, Mr. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., having done so last year; none of Dr. Parker's supplies have been more popular with the audiences than the two barristers.

THE LORD MAYOR preached on Sunday morning, Sept. 27, in the Welsh Chapel in the City-road, and pleaded for contributions in reduction of the debt on the chapel. In the evening he preached at Union Chapel, Islington, in aid of the funds of the mission hall in Station-road, Holloway. The devotional service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Allon. Last Sunday morning he preached in the City Temple, and presided at the Pavilion Theatre service in the evening.

CHISWICK.—We have been favoured with a visit from Mr. Henry Varley, who came to speak at the mid-day service held outside the works of Messrs. Thornycroft & Co. where 1200 men are employed. This effort is in connection with the Mission Hall in this neighbourhood. Mr. Henry Varley has promised to come again on some future occasion and address them in their dinner hour. Others willing to follow his example should communicate with me. Speakers will be welcomed any Tuesday or Thursday. R. T. Smith.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Temperance Hospital.—The new wing of this hospital is to be opened on October 9, by the Bishop of London.

Surrey Chapel.—The Gospel Temperance Mission, conducted by Mr. W. Tharme, of Liverpool, was most successful. A number were converted, and several pledges were taken.

The School-Board Election.—The Blue Ribbon Chronicle urges London Temperance ratepayers to try to put Temperance men on the School Board. The election is fixed for November 2.

A liberal brewer once built a church at his sole expense, but the stone-engraver cut the stone which was to immortalise the brewer's name with "Built by ———, at his soul's expense."

Glasgow.—A conference of the representatives of 160 Scottish Liberal Associations was held on Sept. 15. Several amendments were moved to the Local Option resolution in the programme, but it was carried unaltered.

Chester.—Last week, at this town, a man died who a week previously had received a legacy of £60. In four days, £40 was spent in drink. From the time he received the money till his death he was never sober. Some publican must have broken the law!

Julius Cæsar wrote: "The Suevi on no account permit wine to be imported to them, because they consider that men degenerate in their powers of enduring fatigue, and are rendered effeminate by that commodity." Advanced civilisation has not made men wiser!

The Coming Election.—The Aliance News thinks candidates for Parliament should be pledged to something more definite than "support for legislation to refer the question to local authorities." It says we want for England Imperial legislation, such as Scotland, Ireland, and Wales have.

Antwerp.—The Committee of the International Temperance Conference recently held here will continue in office for two years, and form an International Federation to diffuse information on the objects of the Conference. In two years another similar Conference is to be held, the country to be selected by next September.

Birmingham.—At an important meeting of ministers and other gentlemen here, the action of the magistrates at the licensing sessions was strongly condemned. They have renewed seventy-three licences, though the holdiers during the year had been convicted of serious offences, and had shown no disposition to reduce the number of temptations to drink. A committee was appointed to enforce the law, and to appeal against these decisions. They prove the urgent need of a direct popular veto.

Manchester.—Mr. Coad has been conducting a thirteen days' Temperance Mission at Manchester with very great success, upwards of 700 pledges having been taken during the first week. Many souls have been saved, including some very noted characters, any one of whom would amply repay for all the trouble and expense of the mission.

To Electors.—In The Methodist Times of las week appears an address to Methodist electors by Rev. Charles Garrett. The leading points ar the Licensing Laws; The Real Cause of Trad Depression; Who makes the Paupers? The Devil' Chief Agency; The Duty of Electors; A Suprem Question; and The Duty of the Church. It is vigorous and eloquent appeal, and ought to be widel distributed.

St. Albans.—A ten days' mission in connectio with the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Societ has been held in this city with blessed results. tent capable of holding 1600 persons was filled t overflowing night after night. Eminent speakers well-known friends of Gospel Temperance, ver powerfully set forth intemperance as the grea stumbling block to the reception of the Gospel, an with such effect did they plead that large number signed the pledge.

South Africa.—My father wrote from Graaf Reinet, in South Africa, saying, "Out of our popula tion of 5000, only about 20 of us are abstainers and I do not think we shall ever make any head way without some energetic workers. Can yo not send us a Lawson or Murphy? There is plent of work for them." Mr. and Mrs. Mountain di visit the place some time ago, and met with a goo deal of opposition, but I believe that this time o depression and trouble has been preparing the wa for the Gospel, and the people are more ready t receive it now. Thinking and hoping some of you readers may respond to the call, I venture to sen this.—Yours faithfully, E. S.

THE WALDENSIAN MISSION TO ITAL

SPOKESMAN of mighty Cromwell's iron will,
That made the coward hearts at Rome to thr
Milton, whose cry in rolling organ tones
Swept through our England in the days of old,
"Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, wh Lie scattered in the Alpine valleys cold!" [bo
Thy prayer hath reached the ear of listening Go
The soldier's tramp is heard upon the sod
As from the Vaudois vales, shut in by snow,
O'er the wild pathways where their fathers fell,
Ambassadors for Christ do boldly go,
The wondrous story of the cross to tell:
To reap in all the free Italian fields
The harvest that the blood of martyrs yields.

RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

Syrian Colonization Fund,

41, Parliament Street (Entrance in Cannon Row),
London, S.W.

In view of the greatly increasing distress among the Jews, and of the earnest appeals addressed to us, we desire to carry out the work of providing employment for Jews in the Land of Promise.

Intolerable oppression is driving Jews out of Roumania, Russia, and other countries. They seek in the Holy Land the shelter denied them elsewhere.

In Jerusalem there are nearly 20,000 Jews, of whom not one-tenth can obtain work. There are several thousands in Galilee and elsewhere in Palestine in great need.

We ask for means to enable us to give employment at Jerusalem—where some are already employed on land near the city—till increase of Funds shall give us the means to enable them to form themselves into Colonies on their own responsibility.

Also to help the Jewish families in Galilee who have asked our aid in forming a settlement there under favourable conditions.

In order to secure the crops, and avoid having to wait till harvest of the year after next, we ask for speedy help.

On behalf of the Committee, SHAFTESBURY, President.

EAST LONDON MISSION.

SPECIAL APPEAL FOR HOME OF RESCUE,

390, COMMERCIAL ROAD, E.

(In connection with Mission Work in Ratcliff, Shadwell, and St. George's-in-the-East).

CHRISTIAN AND BENEVOLENT FRIENDS,—

We earnestly plead for aid on behalf of the Poor Fallen Girls of East London. During the last six years I have done my best to rescue a few, and these are now doing well; some being in situations, others married, and others sent to hospitals and various refuges. Having recently engaged with Mrs. COTTRILL, a most efficient worker among the Fallen, and so many of these girls coming to the Meetings at our Mission Hall, near Ratcliff, and begging us to help them to lead a better life, we have taken a suitable house (offered to Let) this summer, where the young women can be taught Laundry Work and Dressmaking, also to make Fancy Articles to be sold for their support until situations are obtained. Sir BALDWIN LEIGHTON, M.P., who has carefully watched Mrs. COTTRILL's labours among the poor girls, has given a donation of £25 to start the furnishing and rent of this Rescue Home, promising a yearly subscription of £10 to carry on this branch of our work. We now ask other Friends to follow his example with a few donations, so that the furnishing of this Home with Laundry, &c., may be completed. At present, want of Funds compels us to refuse many applicants every week seeking our help, and willing to be taken in from a life of sin, and trained for honest employment. We confidently trust God will incline the hearts of our Readers to assist this needful undertaking. We are, Your humble Servants in Christ's Service,

MRS. E. COTTRILL, Lady Superintendent.
MR. G. HOPKINS, Hon. Superintendent.

Contributions will be received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings; or by Mr. G. HOPKINS, at the Rescue Home, 390, Commercial-road; and at Mission Hall, 263, Cable-street, St. George's, E.; or by the LADY SUPERINTENDENT.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

hese notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to erfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to come members of the Union should communicate with v. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, ndon, E.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8.—REV. XV.

This chapter is introductory to the third series of ptenary visions—that of "the Vials." As the umpets are so many warning blasts or calls to pentance, so the imagery of the Vials points to the al penal inflictions which follow the disregard of ese warnings.

v. 2.—"Them that had gotten the victory over the ast," &c.—Literally, "Those that come off victo- ous from (their conflict with) the beast." The ords "and from his mark" are omitted in the dest MSS., and in all critical editions.

v. 3.—"The song of Moses the servant of God, d the song of the Lamb."—"A song similar to at song of triumph which Moses and the children Israel sang when delivered from the Red Sea, d from the Egyptians."—Alford. "The song which Moses celebrated the deliverance from gypt is now renewed, and receives its perfected se when God's people are finally delivered by the mb."—Sp. Com.

v. 3.—"King of saints."—There is no authority r this reading. It should be either "King of es" (i.e., eternal King) or "King of nations." he latter is preferred by the best critics, and the stinct reference to Jer. x. 7 seems to confirm it.

v. 4.—"All nations shall come and worship before hee."—"Not until the coming of Christ in judg- ent does the conversion of the world take place." De Burgh.

v. 7.—"Seven golden vials."—"The 'vial' was a allow bowl or cup, usually without a stand or ot, in which they drew out of the (larger) blet."—Alford. R.V. renders it "bowl."

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9.—REV. XVI.

v. 2.—"A noisome and grievous sore."—"The reek word for 'sore' is that by which the LXX. nder 'boil' in Exod. ix. 8—12. The imagery, there- re, of this vial seems taken from the sixth gyptian plague. Historical interpreters regard is first vial as fulfilled in 'that tremendous out- eak of social and moral evil, of democratic fury, heism, and vice, which was speedily seen to aracterise the French Revolution.'"—Elliott. he second vial is supposed to have been historically lfilled in the naval wars which followed, as to hich Elliott quotes Dr. Keith as saying, "The hole history of the world does not present such a riod of naval war, destruction, and bloodshed." he third vial, in "the French Revolutionary wars ong the rivers Rhine, Danube, and Po." To those ho feel a difficulty in applying the language of is chapter to such events, there remains the view hich Thomas Scott (the Commentator) takes: "It ems probable that the pouring out of the vials has ot yet begun."

v. 12.—"And the sixth angel poured out his vial on the great river Euphrates," &c.—The almost act agreement between the Trumpets and the Vials to the scene and sphere of the judgments is orthy of attentive notice. In both the scene of) is "earth," (2) "sea," (3) "rivers and fountains waters," (4) "sun," (5) "River Euphrates,"— Kings of the east," better in R.V. "the kings at come from the sun-rising." "That the de- royer of Babylon was to come from the East is con- antly foretold (Isa. xiii., xiv., xli. 2, 25, xlvi. 11), d hence the imagery of this verse, whereby the struction of the mystical Babylon is fore- adowed."—Sp. Com. So the "drying up of the ater" would refer to the well-known means by hich Cyrus took Babylon.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10.—REV. XVII.

v. 5.—"Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother the harlots, and of the abominations of the earth." "'Mystery:' standing in apposition to 'name,' d denoting the enigmatical sense in which the tle that follows is to be taken, as if a pre- minary nota bene, it may be compared with the ord 'spiritually' (xi. 8)."—Sp. Com. This tells gainst the view, supported by some respected ames, that a future literal city is intended. A teral Babylon would not be a mystical Babylon.

v. 6.—"And when I saw her, I wondered with a eat wonder" (R.V.).—"If this woman is the same he before saw, who fled into the wilderness from e face of the dragon, 'The faithful city become an rlot' (Isa. i. 21), he might well wonder."—Alford. Not because heathen Rome persecuted the saints, it because a Christian Church calling herself the Mother of Christendom (i.e., the Church of Rome) should be 'drunken with the blood of the saints.'" —Bishop Wordsworth.

v. 8.—"Was, and is not; and is about to come up," &c. (R.V.).—"The words 'is not' are generally allowed to signify the reception of the deadly wound by one of the heads (xiii. 3)."—Sp. Com. It is, therefore, on the beast in its last phase, or headship, that the woman sits: this is implied in the words "and go into perdition," repeated v. 11.

v. 8.—"They that dwell on the earth shall wonder," &c.—This is parallel to xiii. 3, and apparently alludes to the same event.

v. 9.—"The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth; and they are seven kings" (R.V.).—The allusion to the well-known seven-hilled city leaves no doubt that Rome is meant. But this is but one application of the symbol; the other is to "seven kings." "Kings represent not individual rulers, but kingdoms (see Dan. ii. 38, vii. 17, 23)."—Sp. Com. Or here, apparently, seven successive forms of government: so historical interpreters.

v. 12.—"Receive power as kings one hour with the beast."—Vitringa and Elliott render this "at one hour with," i.e., "at the same time with."

v. 16.—"And the ten horns thou sawest, and the beast, these shall hate the harlot," &c.—A convincing proof that we must not identify the Beast with the Papacy (which is rather the second Beast in ch. xiii.), but with the secular power, which has been fulfilling this prophecy ever since the French Revolution.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11.—REV. XVIII.

The last chapter left no doubt that Rome was to be the headquarters of the mystical Babylon. This chapter, in reviewing the fall of this great power, expands our conception of its extent, and seems to identify it with "Christendom." The imagery of ch. xvii. ("the woman") points to a Church unfaithful to her Husband. The imagery of this chapter shows her worldliness, and unfaithfulness to her character as the professed bride of Christ.

v. 2.—"Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great" (R.V.). —The imagery used in this chapter "combines the overthrow of Babylon—the city which desolated Israel by its power, and the ruin of Tyre—which led Israel astray by its idolatry and lasciviousness (Ezek xxvi., xxvii.)."—Sp. Com.

v. 4.—"I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people," &c.—It has been urged with considerable force that this refers to the time of the rapture of the Church, for the words which follow, "reward her even as she rewarded you," could not be addressed to Christians on earth, to whom vengeance is not now permitted. But when his people are taken to be with Christ, they return with Him, and then such language becomes appropriate.

v. 13.—"And slaves, and souls of men."—"A spiritual commerce is here described; a spiritual slave trade. Such is the commerce of Rome."—Bishop Wordsworth.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 12.—REV. XIX.

From ver. 11 of this chapter to xxi. 9 are to be found a series of seven visions of surpassing grandeur, describing the coming and kingdom and eternal glory of the Lord Jesus Christ and of his Church. They are marked by each one beginning with the words "And I saw" (omit the second occurrence of these words in xx. 4, as not in the Greek). They may be seen clearly marked in the paragraphs of R.V.

v. 1.—"Hallelujah; salvation, and glory, and power belong unto our God," &c.—"At each crisis of the Apocalypse we find a similar hymn of praise, iv. 8, v. 9, vii. 10, xi. 15, xv. 3, xvi. 5."—Sp. Com.

v. 8.—"The fine linen is the righteousness of saints."—The word righteousness is in the plural, and means literally, "justifications." "The plural is probably distributive, implying not many to each one, as if they were merely good deeds, but one to each of the saints, enveloping him as in a pure white robe of righteousness."—Alford.

v. 11.—"And behold a white horse; and he that sat thereon."—"There is here a reference to ch. vi. 2, where exactly the same words occur. Under the first seal the rider on the white horse went forth to his work of conquest; here he comes forth to strike the last blow, and to execute the last acts of judgment."—Sp. Com.

v. 12.—"Upon his head were many diadems."— "Not now the 'crown,' the victor's wreath (as in vi. 2), but the kingly 'diadem,' the emblem of his own proper regal authority;—nay, more, 'many diadems,' denoting the concentration of all kingly authority in his person."—Sp. Com.

v. 13.—"A vesture dipped in blood."—A reference to Isa. lxiii. 2.

v. 15.—"Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword."— Comp. "the breath of his lips" (Isa. xi. 4), and "the spirit of his mouth" (2 Thess. ii. 8) with which He slays "the wicked."

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13.—REV. XX.

v. 2.—"Bound him a thousand years."—"The importance of this period of duration is indicated by its being repeated six times in iv. 6, 7."—S. C.

v. 4.—"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them."—It is not said here who sat on the thrones, but Dan. vii. 22, 1 Cor. vi. 2, Rev. iii. 21, and other texts, leave no room for doubt that here we have "judgment given to the saints of the Most High." The martyrs are mentioned afterwards as a special class—"Them that had been beheaded." The Greek is, "Them that had been smitten with an axe." The "axe" was the well-known symbol of Roman magisterial authority.

v. 5.—"The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."—"Those who lived next to the Apostles, and the whole Church for 300 years, understood (these words) in the plain literal sense."—Alford.

v. 11.—"I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it."—"Clearly the person referred to in Matt. xxv. 31, John v. 22, Rom. xiv. 10, namely, 'the Son of Man,' 'Christ.'"—Sp. Com.

v. 12.—"And I saw the dead . . . . standing before the throne" (R.V.).—This reading is much better supported than "before God" (A.V.).

v. 15.—"Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—"In this verse the doom of unbelievers is described; and the 'judgment of condemnation is ended,' in order to introduce for the comfort and encouragement of believers the picture of eternal happiness which now occupies the rest of the book."—Sp. Com.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 14.—REV. XXI.

v. 1.—"A new heaven and a new earth."—"It is disputed whether an absolutely 'new' creation is intended here, or a 'renascence'—a reproduction as from a seed (1 Cor. xv. 42, 43)—of a new earth from the old. In support of the latter opinion St. Paul's words (1 Cor. vii. 31) are quoted, where he says that not 'this world' but 'the fashion of this world passeth away.' See also 2 Pet. iii. 5—12."— Sp. Com. "And there was no more sea."—St. Augustine, Hengstenberg, and Wordsworth take this to mean "the sea of the nations, the wicked, restless world, xvii. 15, Isa. lvii. 20," and "Sp. Com." considers that this "best suits the symbolism of this Book." There seems, however, to be no better reason for rejecting the literal meaning than that we cannot understand why it should so be.

v. 7.—"He that overcometh shall inherit these things" (R.V.). A much better supported reading than that of A.V.

v. 9.—"I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife."—"A typical vision, corresponding to the vision of Babylon, chap. xvii."—Sp. Com. The true Church, and its heavenly character, are here contrasted with the false Church exhibited there, and its worldly character.

v. 10.—That great city."—R.V. omits the word "great" as unsupported, and renders it "the holy city."

v. 24.—"The nations (of them which are saved)." —Omit the latter words, as unsupported by evidence (so R.V.).

v. 27.—"But they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."—The same title confers access to the city, as that which gave deliverance from condemnation at the judgment (xx. 15).

A NEW HALL for railway men will be opened in the Lillie-road, West Brompton, to-day, Thursday, October 8. It is specially built for the District Railway men, and will hold 500 persons. The opening services are at 4 and 7.30 p.m.

LEWES Y.M.C.A.—A week of evangelistic services has been conducted by Mr. W. Spencer Walton. Earnest Gospel addresses were given each evening, partly in the large room adjoining Cliffe parish church (Rev. W. L. Grane, rector), and partly in the Presbyterian Church. The meetings were numerously attended by all classes. The power of God's truth appears to have been deeply felt, and not a few professed to have found peace. Each afternoon well-attended Bible-readings were given in the Presbyterian lecture-hall, the expositions being much appreciated. Mr. Walton, who seems to possess much God-given power, has endeared himself to many during his short stay here.

Jos. G. Hopkins.

A CENTENARIAN CHRISTIAN.

DEAR SIR,—It will interest your readers to know that in connection with the Grosvenor-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester, there is a venerable sister in Israel who yesterday (Sunday), attained the patriarchal age of 100 years. Mrs. Drake, of 5, Clowes-court (2), off Jackson-street, Temple-street, London-road, Manchester, was born at Elsick Hall, Shropshire, on Tuesday, September 27, 1785, and in the year 1807 married a soldier of the 12th Light Dragoons. Mrs. Drake acted in the capacity of nurse on the field of Waterloo and passed with her husband through the whole of the Peninsular campaign. Though her husband passed through the most important engagements with Wellington, he was never wounded. He was discharged at the Manchester barracks about fifty years ago, and our sister has been a widow forty-six years on December 21 next.

Mrs. Drake says that in one of the engagements when short of provisions and water for several days she was sustained by the Divine promise, "Thy bread shall be given thee and thy water shall be sure." Our dear sister has been a member of Society for a period of sixty years. A few weeks ago she related to me the story of her conversion, which took place in a barn, under the preaching of one of our local preachers. She can read small type without the aid of spectacles, and is in full possession of all her other faculties. Her memory is most retentive, and only a few days ago she recited to me two beautiful poems, entitled: "I always go to Jesus" and "The Woodman." Though in very humble circumstances, she says she is the daughter of a King, and He supplies all her wants out of his rich storehouse. The last time I saw her she repeated that beautiful verse of the Psalmist, Psalm xxxvii. 25, then afterwards gave utterance to the well-known lines:

> "There is my house and portion fair,
> My treasure and my heart are there,
> And my abiding home."

Wishing her good night, she said:—"It may be good-bye as far as earth is concerned, but will you meet me at the Fountain?"—Yours truly,

WM. WILLCOCK.

JESUS THE LAMB OF GOD:

Showing how He Died on the Cross for Children; and how Little Ones have Learned to Love and Trust Him. By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

Telling how Jesus Gathers the Lambs to his Fold. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.;
Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal addresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most effective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. The book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted under his ministry."—Christian Leader.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

Anecdotes and Appeals; with very Numerous Instances of the Early Regeneration of the Young. Sixth Thousand.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Limp cloth, 2s.;
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Many testimonials have been received, speaking of the blessing this book has been to its readers in this and other countries where it has been, or is now being, translated.

"It has been circulated among missionaries in various lands. Many have been taught by it to lead children to the Saviour. Repeatedly we have had occasion to praise God for his seal of acceptance to this book.

"Many a precious work of grace among the children, often extending also to the adults, has been directly traceable to the influence of the truths and facts gathered in these pages."—Preface to English Edition.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath Schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."—Christian Leader.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. (Founded at Pentonville.)—Recent revelations have shown that in this great city thousands of young women are annually enticed or surprised into the path of ruin by means of the vilest artifices. To save such victims this Institution was founded 78 years ago. Its endowment is spent, and funds are much needed. Donations will be thankfully received by Barclay, Bevan & Co., Bankers, 54, Lombard-street; the office of The Christian; and at the above Institution.

W. E. Page, Secretary.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for help in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee. Old coats and trousers are much needed.

J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women.

Funds are urgently needed.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

FIFTEENTH SERIES

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mr. J. HARDY, ILKESTON.

This patient applied to me in May of this year. Fourteen months before he was attacked with shiverings and cold on the chest. Mattery expectoration, streaked with blood, followed upon this, and cough ever since.

Pains across the chest, and in both sides and across the shoulders, were as this time exceedingly severe; palpitation of the heart and strong flushes of heat prevailed. The patient was very thin, the secretions unnatural, appetite very poor.

When first writing me the patient says:—"I have read with great interest the cases reported in the weekly magazines for long before I knew that I was Cousumptive myself."

The Primitive Methodist minister of Ilkeston recommended this patient to me as a worthy Christian man, deserving that consideration in charge which I am always ready to make (on such evidence) in cases of need.

The patient recovered, and writes: "With sincere thanks I inform you I feel a better man in health than I have for a number of years. Make what use you think proper of this.—Yours gratefully J. Hardy, 8, High Holbourn, Gras Lane, Ilkeston, Derby."

In another letter, dated September 14, he says: "I am enjoying better health than for seven years. It is a long time now (two months) since I left off the medicine."

Ladies and gentlemen buy them because they are good-looking enough for the drawing-room and boudoir; and poor people buy them because, in addition to this, they are so wonderfully cheap. Although we offer a reduction if several pairs are taken, yet if you doubt their genuineness, do not send for more than one pair first. ROBERT AND MARY MOFFAT.

T seems but yesterday, though two years have since passed away, that we were lamenting e decease of the missionary patriarch, whose ame will be for ever linked with the history of hristian missions in South Africa. Robert offat died at a ripe old age, after a life of evotion to the service of God and man, such as is given to few men to live. The goodly olume before us is a noble filial tribute to the orth of two heroic lives—lives that were splen- d illustrations of the words of Dr. Culross, uoted on the next page. Many readers will be ankful to the biographer for the fulness of tail with which he narrates the life of his other. Indeed the two lives were one in an nusual degree—one in purpose and one in exe- tion. As a friend well remarks in sending to e compiler some reminiscences of Dr. Moffat: It was evident that in Mrs. Moffat he had been ngularly blessed with a noble and devoted wife, ho was indeed a missionary second only to mself." The public are already familiar ith the main facts of Dr. Moffat's illus- ious career; first, as a successful missionary, r over fifty years in South Africa, and for the last thirteen years of his life as a sort of bishop, confirming the faith and kindling the zeal of the churches. Here the story is fully and ably told, and it is one that surely cannot be read without genuine pleasure and profit. The particulars of the life of Mary Moffat are not, we imagine, so well known, and it may induce many to read for themselves the complete record furnished by her son, if we afford, in this brief notice, some glimpses into its rich stores of self-sacrifice.

In one of her own letters, written many years afterwards, we find the best account that the book contains of the beginnings of missionary ambition in the youthful breast of Mary Smith, which was her maiden name. Writing from South Africa to her aged father, she alludes to a missionary meeting she attended in Chester, the first of the kind held in that part of the country. "It was," she says, "a season I shall never forget; it was a Bethel to my soul."

> Dr. Waugh preached from the text, "In the multitude of my thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my soul." What an odd subject, thought I, for a missionary sermon; but he soon convinced me that a better could not have been found in the whole Bible. The image of the venerable man is still in my mind's eye. He was full of pathos, and as solemn as eternity; he seemed to me on the borders of the heavenly world, while describing the comforts and consolations, the blooming hopes of immortality possessed by every real Christian. But the effect produced was by the contrast he then drew—and such a contrast! How he set before us the condition of the heathen world, which knew not God, sunk in the filth of vice and gross superstition, without hope and without God in the world. My mind was powerfully affected. I was very young, and had not the slightest prospect of joining the missionary band, but felt that the cause was worth a thousand lives.

Mary Smith's father had a nursery garden at Dunkinfield, near Manchester, and hither came the youthful Robert Moffat shortly after his conversion, and with a strong flame of missionary zeal already kindled in his heart. Being kindred spirits they became deeply attached to each other; but her desire to accompany the young and ardent missionary to South Africa as his help meet and fellow-labourer did not at first meet with the approval of her parents, devoted Christians though they were. By-and-by she was able to remove their scruples, and could write to Moffat's parents that "after two years and a half of the most painful anxiety I have, through the tender mercy of God, obtained permission of my dear parents to join your dear son in his arduous work." In a letter written to her own mother about the same date she says, "I cannot describe to you the secret pleasure it gave me to see you and my father give me up in such a Christian like manner. I always feared that if you did give me up it would be by a sort of compulsion; but when I viewed you with calmness declare that you saw it your duty, and could no longer withhold from the work of the Lord whom He had a right to demand, I could not but exclaim, 'Is not this the finger of God?' . . . And, oh mother, will it not gladden your heart, if the Lord permit me to enter upon his work, that you have at least one child who was so highly honoured as to be an instrument in his hand, however humble, of doing something towards the conversion of the heathen?" Noble words that were destined to receive an ampler fulfilment probably than she ever dreamt of in her most sanguine hours. Miss Smith proved her fitness for the foreign field by labouring very earnestly and successfully for the conversion of some in her own family circle.

In due time, Miss Smith bade a long farewell to her parents and friends, and embarked at Cowes, in the Isle of Wight, on the ship British Colony, which, after a three months' voyage, landed her at Cape Town. Here she was fortunately met by Mr. Moffat, and wrote home to her parents that she found him all that her heart could desire, "except his being almost worn out with anxiety, and his very look makes my heart ache. . . . We have received each other from the Lord, and are happy." Writing to a brother a few days after her marriage, she seeks to remove an impression in the minds of her parents that henceforth she would be, in a sense, dead to them:—

> They can hear of me, and I trust that they will hear that I am of some little use in the world. . . . I wish ever to be reasonable in my expectations, and cheerfully to take up the cross. I find missionaries are greatly despised here, but I think I can say—
> "All hail reproach, and welcome shame!
> If Thou remember me."
> Before I bade adieu to home with all its delights, I calculated upon a life of hardship, toil, shame, and reproach, and now my soul can bid it welcome for the sake of Christ.

Another extract from a letter, written after reaching Lattakoo, or Kuruman, as it was subsequently called, three months after leaving Cape Town, reveals the simple faith and ardent expectation of this young servant of Christ:—

> God has brought me to the place which, of all others in the world, was first fixed upon my heart as a place and a people amongst whom I should love to dwell and lend a helping hand to the work, nearly six years ago when hearing Mr. Campbell in Manchester. It was then I first dared, with tears in my eyes and an overflowing heart, to breathe the petition: Oh, that I might spend my days in Lattakoo! This doubtless was noticed by a heart-searching God, and so here am I. I cannot tell you what I felt on approaching the spot, when I took a retrospect of all that had passed to bring me here. . . . I am happy, remarkably happy, though the present place of my habitation is a single vestry room, with a mud wall and a mud floor. It is true, our sorrows and cares we must have, but is it not our happiness to suffer in this cause? It is one of the trials of missionaries to bear such long silences from their friends. Poor Mrs. H—— has not had a letter for five years!

Possibly the friends of foreign missionaries are not so remiss in these days of cheap and speedy transit, but Mrs. Moffat's words on this point convey a hint which even now may not be unneeded.

A life-work entered upon in such a spirit of consecrated devotion was sure to be rich in its results. So it proved in the case of Robert and Mary Moffat. The latter soon had plenty to try her faith and her endurance. Missionary pioneering among heathen people, such as that which this young couple undertook, always calls for the exercise of much patience and persevering effort. "We have much need of your sympathy and prayers," writes Mrs. Moffat to her parents after three years' residence among the Bechuanas. "Could we but see the smallest fruit, we could rejoice amidst the privations and toil which we bear; but, as it is, our hands often hang down. . . . . In almost every other part of the world to which the Gospel is sent, some of the people receive it gladly, but here the blessing is withheld. Five years have rolled on since the missionaries came and not one soul is converted, nor does anyone seem to lend an ear. All treat with ridicule and contempt the truths which are delivered." After many vicissitudes and much suffering from tribal strifes and deadly conflicts, daylight broke at last, and fruit began to appear. Says the biographer:—

> The darkness was long and gloomy beyond compare, but there was no wavering of faith. There were times, indeed, when the brethren were cast down, but there was one member of the mission, weak in body, but strong in faith, who never faltered. She would fall back on the promises of the unchangeable God, and say: We may not live to see it, but the awakening will come as sure as the sun will rise to-morrow. On one occasion a friend in Sheffield wrote asking if there was anything of use that could be sent. The answer of Mary Moffat was: 'Send us a Communion service, we shall want it some day.' At that time there was no glimmer of the dawn. . . . At length, a marvellous awakening began. . . . In a few months the whole aspect of the station was changed. The meeting-house was crowded before the service had begun. Heathen songs and dancing had ceased, and everywhere were to be heard instead the songs of Zion, and the outpouring of impassioned prayers. The missionaries were beset even in their own homes by those who were seeking fuller instruction in things which had become to them all at once of paramount importance. The moral condition of the community rapidly improved. . . . Few can enter into the feelings which must have animated the hearts of the missionary band when they first sat down with a little company of six at the table of the Lord. On the day preceding this memorable occasion in the history of the Bechuana Mission, a box arrived, which had been long on the road from England. It contained the Communion vessels for which Mary Moffat had asked nearly three years before

When the nucleus of a Christian community had thus been formed, Moffat began to think of translating portions of the Scriptures into the Sechuana tongue. Henceforth, through a long series of years, his life was one of incessant toil in exploring, evangelising, translating the Scriptures, and getting them printed in the vernacular; while the cares and responsibilities of a growing family absorbed much of the time of the missionary and his heroic wife. Rather than take her husband away from his loved occupation, she would make long journeys to the Cape to arrange for the education of her children; or she would take charge of the mission station while he visited some distant tribe with the message of the Gospel. Later on in the history, after a visit had been paid to the old country, we find the name and work of David Livingstone closely interwoven with that of Robert Moffat. The younger worker married Moffat's eldest daughter, Mary, and, as all the world knows, became a still more famous man, in the eyes of the world at large, than his illustrious father-in-law.

As we have already said, this book is a noble and worthy record of two heroic and saintly lives, combined with an interesting narrative of contemporary events bearing on missions at home and abroad. We hope it will be widely read wherever the English language is known, and, indeed, for the matter of that, wherever there are human hearts that need to be stirred to a more adequate conception of the needs of the heathen world, and the glory of being ambassadors for Christ to those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

We reproduce the portraits given of Robert and Mary Moffat in their declining years. The book also contains portraits of each at the age of twenty, besides explanatory maps and other interesting illustrations, and a copious index.

MISSIONARY HEROISM.

By Rev. Dr. CULROSS.

From Sermon at the Baptist Union Meeting.

THE heroism shown in connection with the missionary enterprise is in itself an immense contribution to the spiritual forces that are at work in the world for good. We are already compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses. It humbles one, and restrains his speech, to remember how little of the heroic there is in his own life; but, at the same time, if there is anything in him to catch fire, it enkindles holy ambition. Those who know no better taunt us with serving for money. "Doth Job fear God for nought?". The devil said: "Skin for skin; all that a man hath will he give for his life." One has only to glance over the great missionary story from the first till now to find the disproof. Many in the Missionary band I do not hesitate to call "martyrs," ranking them with those who have gone to the scaffold or the stake for the truth, and who by their death have helped to pay the purchase-money of our religious light and freedom. They would not have been found in the sphere of danger but for the name of Jesus Christ; they would have found creditable opportunity to slink away if they had not loved his service better than life. Do you think this quietly heroic example is nothing to this age?

It is no breach of charity to say that there are too many of us who like a comfortable religion—who are for no Hills of Difficulty or Valleys of Humiliation in the way to the Celestial City, and who to the armour of heroes, with its "glorious dints," prefer the soft clothing of them that are in kings' houses. Does not the heroism of the mission field rebuke our selfishness and love of ease? Does it not inspire a sense of shame in our hearts? Does it not arouse all that is truest and noblest in our Christian manhood? Does it not make our heart beat high to think of it?

Beyond its direct value in the foreign field, this missionary heroism is fitted to tell powerfully at home. It rouses from sloth and slumber like a trumpet-blast. The story of it is a new chapter added to the Book of Acts, writing out in clearer characters than ever, "Ye are not your own;" "Yield yourselves unto God;" "Gird up the loins of your mind;" "Endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ;" "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." We feel as we read the great story that it is a sweeter thing to do good than to enjoy selfish ease and pleasure; a more satisfying thing to win souls than to build up a fortune; a nobler thing to suffer for Christ than to acquire world's renown.

Some of our missionary brethren have been smitten down just as they were beginning their career; and their life, to look back upon, is seemingly incomplete, broken off, defeated in its purposes. Have they fallen in vain? Shall we rear them a broken column for monument? Does their death, so prematurely, mean so much "waste"! Do you not feel that history is for you the richer, and Divine influences the larger, by one golden deed, finer in quality than that of David's three mighty men who broke through the host of the Philistines and drew water out of the well of Bethlehem that was by the gate? The whole missionary enterprise throughout the centuries, so far from being "waste," is a contribution in the many-linked chain that draws earth up to God.

THE MORALITY CRUSADE.

MR. STEAD IN THE NORTH.

THE best-abused man in the country at the present time is utilising the brief space efore his trial comes on, by seeking to rouse ablic opinion in the North of England, where is popularly believed that most reforms iginate. "What Lancashire says to-day, ngland will be saying to-morrow," is a proud oast which may have more or less of truth it. At any rate, all lovers of social and ational purity must wish God-speed to Mr. ead, and his comrades of the Vigilance Comittee, in this new crusade. It was as editor of e Darlington Northern Echo that Mr. Stead on his first journalistic spurs, and in that wn he gave his first address. The following tracts from it ought to awaken a long and ud echo in every Christian heart :—

"There is great need for action everywhere. ou have in Darlington a Society for the Prention of Cruelty to Animals, and now we want ou to have a branch, auxiliary, or local comittee of a society for preventing the worst uelty of all—to women and children. You ho have been foremost in every good work for e last half century ; you who have battled for eedom when slavery was regarded as inevitable prostitution is now ; you who in this hall and other halls never failed to raise a loud and aperative voice in favour of all that tends to amanity and virtue—I appeal to you to-night r a cause as sacred as any of those that ever opealed to you in Darlington ; I ask you, men ad women, to-day, still to unite to do what you an for the fallen and suffering, inspired by a arning hatred and indignation against those ho inflict those wrongs. I heard a very eloient clergyman the other day address a meeting men only, and all that he said was, 'I appeal you by the pity of it, my brothers.' I adired that, but it was only half the thing. I opeal to you not only by the pity of it, but I opeal to you by the hate of it, and the horror it, and the shame of it, that burns into your earts—that has burnt into mine in many a long gil and many a tearful night. You do not now—thank God not one of us, not the most xperienced ever can know—all the horror of the agic anguish that results from the ruin of one irl. Oh, it makes me feel sometimes as if I ould turn round and strike those persons who e pressing, full of sympathy and kindness, ound me and saying, 'How you are sufferg !' What am I suffering? Oh, if I spent ery subsequent day of my life in penal servide, I would suffer less than one of those poor irls whom you men—many of you—have oomed to a life of shame. It is an idle thing r you. A woman is a plaything : she is gone -you see her perhaps no more for ever. But ne lives on and on and on, to realise in despair id agony what it is to be an outcast from her x and a pariah in this Christian England. She alises that ; and I ask you men and women ere—you whose daughters may walk the streets London for all you know, and if not them, erhaps their daughters' daughters—are you to and by with folded arms and cold indifference hilst those who are struggling to save, if it ere only some, ask for your help and your ympathy? But many of you will stand by ith folded arms, shrug your shoulders, and ass by on the other side , and then you will call ourselves men, and, worse still, you will call ourselves—some of you—Christians.

"If we all—each one of us here, man and oman—would but try to live up to one per ent. of what we say we believe, what a different orld this would be. One per cent. only ! Oh ! e go canting round—the whole of us—and we lk as if we were very saints. We use words nat imply at least that we are brother men, and e act like devils. When I say we act like evils I do not mean the seducer, I do not mean e man who regularly haunts those places of l-fame of which I have had so sad an exrience ; but I mean those men who act most diabolically, those with high professions in their mouth of sympathy with the fallen and the oppressed, those who call themselves by the name of One who was a man who consorted with harlots and publicans, if by any means He might win and save them with a brother's love —I say those men are the most diabolical of all, and those women, who turn a cold shoulder and say the subject is so unutterably repulsive we can have nothing to do with it. I would stand my chance at the judgment seat with one of the worst of these children of sin, rather than I would with the mail-coated Pharisee who walks through the streets too good to care for those for whom Christ died. . . . .

"I would like to have every man's heart here and every woman's heart harrowed, riven, and torn with the anguish which has preyed upon me ; then you would not be twiddling your thumbs, as many of you are doing now, and talking about this, that, and the other methods, and I know not what. Oh ! I wish you would condemn me utterly, and let me be buried out of sight, so far as that goes, if only you would take up the cause which is close to your hearths. We want a higher tone among our men, and we also want a higher tone among our women. If women but regarded a seducer as every one regards a murderer, do you think that there would be so many seductions? And if we, who call these women our sisters, would but realise what that means, and ask ourselves, if we met our own sister on the streets, what would we do to save her? Your sister ! That word is the key to the whole question. Only realise that — get it burnt on our brain, that they are all somebody's sisters, they are my sisters, they are your sisters—and every man who goes with them, and all who lightly tone down the offence, are helping to heap the great millstone of shame and sin which crushes them down into a hell in this world, whatever comes to them in the next. Can we not inaugurate a higher and a nobler way of looking at things? Can we not learn to reverence all women in the way the knights of old used to reverence their one lady? Can we not feel that in every woman's shame and ruin there is an outrage upon the memory of our mothers? I implore you—you who are fathers and mothers—to remember the awful truth there is in this: how there can no woman fall or no man sin without it reacting, sooner or later, if not upon your children, then upon your children's children. We may take care of our children in every way that a mother's or father's love can dictate, but their children's children, even if they themselves escape, may be found on the streets ; and the temptation to be there, and the risk to be there, are increased by every light word lightly spoken concerning this vice, and lessened by every noble outburst of passion and indignation against the men who use women as mere instruments of their lust."

The Chairman of the meeting, in reply to a vote of thanks, remarked that when Mr. Stead stood in the Old Bailey a fortnight hence, the thoughts and prayers of many of his Darlington friends would be with him.

In an address at Sunderland, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said :—The most gratifying results had followed the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill already. He had received a letter from Newport (Monmouthshire) telling him that the Superintendent of Police there had said that since the passing of Mr. Stead's Act a most remarkable change had taken place in the town. In this short time even the number of bad women had been reduced nine-tenths ; houses of ill-fame had been closed, many of the poor girls had applied for help, and they had been sent, not merely out of the town, but home to their parents and friends. The Superintendent was delighted with the result. Mr. Stead had put into their hands a mighty weapon with which to smite the evil-doers, and it was their duty to make good use of it. At the elections their duty was clearly to send men to Parliament whose hearts were pure and who had a passionate faith in God and their fellow-man. He wished some democratic constituency would compel Mr. Stead himself to go to the next Parliament. They would never stop till the daughters of the poor of England were sheltered by the majesty of the law and by healthy public opinion from the vilest of mankind.

A well-attended meeting for women was held on Friday last, at Bedminster, when Mrs. Wookey spoke on "The Perils of Young Girls away from Home." She kept the audience in rapt attention by her earnest words and thrilling appeal to the mothers, on whom rested the grave responsibility of warning their daughters of the danger by which they were surrounded, both at home and in service.

The Council of the Working Men's National League for the Repeal of the C. D. Acts urge the 50,000 members of the League, and all other friends of justice and morality, to resolutely refuse to vote for any candidate who will not promise to support the total and unconditional repeal of the C. D. Acts, as one of the first measures of the New Parliament. The Council further begs its members and supporters to bear in mind the inconsistency of expecting moral justice and legal protection for the daughters of toilers, from legislators whose private lives are licentious and corrupt.

Mr. J. B. Wookey addressed two most enthusiastic meetings on Sunday last in the large Temperance Hall, Bolton, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association.

A DISCIPLE OF FELIX NEFF.

ALEXANDRE AUDEOND is a native of the Hautes Alpes ; he was converted at the age of fourteen in a very remarkable manner, and ever since then, that is, for sixty-four years, he has truly walked with God. Up to a few years ago he was employed as a colporteur by the Geneva Society, when he had to abandon it on account of his great age. His success in the conversion of souls has been most remarkable, and even now the fire of the Holy Spirit burns within him perhaps more ardently than ever. I have never met a Christian more consecrated to God ; his visits amongst the afflicted and dying are as incessant as they are eagerly sought after. "C'est un saint homme" is the testimony of Catholics and Protestants alike.

He has one daughter on whom he is dependent, who is a school teacher and a widow. She has lately been unable to find a place because she will not take any school where she could not speak to the children of the Saviour. May the Lord reward her faithfulness! I am preparing a record of his life.—Sincerely yours, (Dr.) Hastings Burroughs.

AN APPEAL TO RICHER WIDOWS.

IT was my privilege, whilst travelling in Canada, to turn aside and visit an aged saint, whose husband had been gathered home since my last visit. How precious was the lesson taught me when witnessing the deep loneliness caused by the empty chair! Now the fingers, almost useless for the ordinary woman's occupations, are dedicated to arrange and tie up little parcels of fresh books and tracts, sending them hither and thither athwart the great American Continent. Every day brings post-cards of acknowledgment ; from a prison one day, a minister in a far backwoods settlement another. Someone, perhaps in like deep sorrow, has received a message of cheer ; a Sunday-school has been gathered by the attraction of books and leaflets. From all the cry was, "Do send us more."

Who will delight, in the old land, to send this widow, on her hill-top, surrounded by winter snows, never leaving her little wooden cottage, embowered in its tall cedars, a new book, a packet of cards, some choice booklets, or pictorial publications? They will soon be in actual circulation by the book post from Halifax to California. The address of this devoted widow is Mrs. John Atkins, Fonthill, Welland County, Ontario, Canada.

DR. PENTECOST ON ELECTION.

THE SUBSTANCE OF TWO BIBLE READINGS DELIVERED AT ECCLESTON HALL.

"Many are called, but few chosen."—Matt. xx. 16.

THE terms "elect" and "chosen" are the English equivalents of the same Greek word, eklektos. This word, when used as an adjective or noun, designates: First, all persons who have come under the saving power of the grace of God; second, a certain class among the saved who are preeminent for their spiritual life, or other qualities which distinguish them in the service of God. In a word, the "chosen," as in this passage, denominates the "choice ones" among the elect, as in distinction from those who are simply the "called;" those who, like Paul, count not themselves to have attained or already to have been made perfect, but who "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." It is this latter signification of the word to which I wish especially to call attention, though before doing so I shall give a brief exposition of the signification of the term "election," as commonly understood in relation to the people of God.

The doctrine of election, as popularly and theologically understood, has practically dropped out of the pulpit as the subject of discourse, and has almost entirely passed out of current theological literature. And yet, within the century just passing, it was the leading doctrine in theological dispute. It was the doctrine which divided most completely the English-speaking Christians. It separated such eminent friends as the Wesleys and Whitefield. It was the rankling cause of bitter and hard words between such saints as Toplady and Wesley. Toplady could sing as never an angel sung—and Charles Wesley, like a seraph—

"Jesus, lover of my soul," but they could have no outward fellowship, because one believed that God had from all eternity chosen a certain fixed number of souls unto eternal life, and had made provision for their salvation alone in Christ, leaving all the rest of mankind to eternal damnation, both without remedy and without excuse; whilst the others believed that God loved the whole race of man alike, and gave his only begotten Son, our Lord, to die for all, calling them at the same time by his word and Spirit to salvation, which was freely offered to all.

I need scarcely say that our own conviction is that Christ died alike for all men according to a purpose of grace manifested in him toward all mankind, and that the Gospel sends forth a bonâ fide and universal offer of salvation to all men, based on his all-sufficient sacrifice. That there are deeps in the doctrine of election which I cannot fathom; that there are heights beyond my utmost reach, it is scarcely necessary for me to say; but that we are therefore bound to accept the dogma of some of the older theologians who have put into the doctrine of election—or rather invented another doctrine which they call by this name, in order to make it fit into a system of theological logic—we do not admit. We accord to these honoured men of the past, and any of their disciples who remain with us at the present time, a sincere recognition of their grandeur of character and the heroic service for the truth which they have rendered, and which some attribute mainly, if not entirely, to their doctrine of election; we nevertheless sincerely believe them to have been wrong in their interpretation of the truth which underlies the Bible doctrine of election, as the truth is in Jesus.

Let me here remark, that a cordial belief in the great doctrines of grace does not at all depend upon the acceptance of the doctrine of particular election and a limited atonement in Christ. There may be and no doubt are other sides of this sublime truth than the particular ones which we shall discuss in this reading. I am thoroughly convinced, however, that there are no sides of it which are inconsistent with the larger general view and more limited special one which it is my present purpose to bring before my hearers. Moreover, I am sure that the two views which we shall take of the matter are the important and practical ones, and that in them the true key to the entire doctrine may be found.

A REVIVAL OF DOMESTIC RELIGION.

By Mr. C. H. SPURGEON.

WE deeply want a revival of domestic religion. We have been saddened at the terrible accounts of the impurity of this city; but, doubtless, one cause of this state of things is the neglect of household religion among Christians, and the entire absence of common decency in many of the lodgings of the poor. The Christian family was the bulwark of godliness in the days of the Puritans; but in these evil times hundreds of families of so-called Christians have no family worship, no restraint upon growing sons, and no wholesome instruction or discipline. See how the families of many professors are as dressy, as gay, as godless as the children of the non-religious! How can we hope to see the kingdom of our Lord advance when his own disciples do not teach his Gospel to their own sons and daughters? Have we not need to repeat the lament of Jeremiah? "Even the sea monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness." How different this from the father of the faithful, of whom the Lord said, "I know Abraham, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord"! The surest way to promote godliness abroad is to labour for it at home. The shortest method for the overthrow of priestcraft is for every man to be the priest in his own house, and to warn his sons against deceitful men. May our dear children be so well taught from infancy that they may not only escape the common vices of the age, but grow up to become patterns of holiness!

This is a great difficulty to our poorer friends in this loathsome city, which is becoming as polluted as heathendom. A good sister, who lives close to this house of prayer, came up from a country town with her little boy, and she was horrified before long to hear him use profane language, being evidently unaware of its meaning. He had picked it up in the street close to his mother's door. Where are the children of working folks to run if they are not able to walk the streets? All around us vice has become so daring that a blind man may almost be envied; but even he has ears, and will, therefore, be vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. Good people say to me, "What are we to do?" I wish those who live in the breezy country village would stop there, and not come into our close streets, and lanes, and courts, which reek with blasphemy and dirty talk. Why do working-men so often think it necessary, in their ordinary conversation, to use such abominable expressions, which have no useful meaning and are simply disgusting? If ever Christian people should be pure, and should watc over their children with a holy jealousy, now is the time, and this is a worthy subject fo daily prayer.

I would sooner have the doctrines of grac revived, individual piety deepened, an family religion increased, than I would watc a frantic crowd parading the street wit noisy music and harsh clamour. I see n special virtue in drums and tambourines Make what noise you will to attract the careless, if you afterwards give them sound instruction in the truth, and make them t know the meaning of the Word of the Lord but if it be mere stir, and song, and swagger what is the good of it? If Gospel truth i not taught, your work will be a building o wood, hay, and stubble, soon to be consumed Quick building is seldom permanent. Gold silver, and precious stones, are scarce material, not easily found; but then the endure the fire. What is the use of a religion which comes up in a night, an perishes as soon? Ah me, what empt bragging we have heard! The thing wa done, but then it was never worth doing soon things were as if it never had bee done; and, moreover, this sham way o doing it made it all the harder toil for th real worker.

Oh, Christian men and women, be thoroug in what you do, and know, and teach! Hol truth as with an iron grip; let your familie be trained in the fear of God, and be yourselves "holiness unto the Lord;" so sha you stand like rocks amid the surging wave of error and ungodliness which rage aroun you.—Sword and Trowel.

A WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING.

A LADY sends the following to The Methodis Times:—In a watering-place much frequente by Christian workers, and where the little "badg of blue" continues to be generally worn, th following incident occurred a few weeks ago:—

The girl answered her questions without suspicio until the "lady" invited her to join a moonlig boating party in the bay that evening. The gi declined the invitation. Then the visitor presse her to accept a situation in Boulogne, assuring he that the duties would be very light, and a expenses paid. This tempting hook was baite with soft flattery as to her pleasant appearance and her face being sufficient recommendation, &c Fortunately, or we should rather say, "providentially" this opened the girl's eyes, and sh promptly refused the offer of a new situation o any terms, and moved away. The tempter als rose, and persistently walked by the girl along th parade, still pressing her friendship on her youn companion. Presently the girl told the "lady," that she now understood who she was, and wha she meant, and she would call a policeman an give her in charge if she did not leave her at onc On this the baffled "wolf in sheep's clothing walked off to some less wary or more silly shee Is there not a need for active vigilance committe everywhere? And is there not a need for warnin the young of their danger everywhere? Workin men and women, look out for these prowlin wolves in sheep's clothing.

HONESTY IN FACE OF A GUILTY PAST.

"CURSE ye Meroz, saith the angel of the Lord, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Why this terrible condemnation? What had Meroz done? She had done nothing; there was her sin. In a crisis of extremest peril to her country she had done nothing. Of public spirit, the virtue of citizens, she was entirely deficient. In times of peace her lack of this spirit, her ease-loving, selfish do-nothing-ism, was not much felt. But now, when the awful stress of affairs summoned every true man to the battle, indifference to the public weal, shown by steady perseverance in the common avocations of life, was selfishness so base and cowardly as to call forth both the execration of men and the dire curse of God.

Ours, too, is the day of conflict—conflict so real and momentous that every true man is summoned to the fight. In the providence of God, the veil that hid the horrors of hell, which, all unsuspected by the most of us, have long existed in the midst of our modern civilisation, has been suddenly rent. So fearful was that revelation, though it is commonly reported that not the half has been told, that thousands of strong men have sobbed like children as they looked shudderingly upon these unutterable abominations.

Further, we learn that all this hideous devilry of sin is only the ripened fruit of a fearful overgrowth of evil that ramifies throughout society. The nursery sees the beginning of this evil in many cases. In schools, specially boarding-schools, our boys and girls, untaught and unwarned by their natural guardians, learn dark and corrupting secrets, and frequently contract habits that are tenacious as drunkenness and far more dangerous.

In society, false moral ideas obtain to a fearful extent. Immorality in women is regarded with a cruel and pharisaical harshness; while, when men are the sinners—especially men of polish, wealth, and position—almost every weak and mean excuse is accepted. The law of purity, as commonly interpreted, in reference to women, is harsh and unjust; while towards men, the natural guardians of the weaker sex, it is most debasingly indulgent. Once more, we learn that in warehouses and workshops, counting-houses and factories, in fact, wherever men do congregate, low-thoughted speech, and filthy witticisms are more the rule than the exception. Millions of our young men and women are thus almost compelled to breathe an immoral atmosphere. Little wonder, then, if sin flourishes and hell is let loose upon us.

The simple knowledge that these things are so, lays a tremendous responsibility upon each one of us to do our part, cost what it may. Stern facts demand that guardians of the young shall prayerfully and earnestly face the delicate task of warning their children, and so instructing them that the whisperers of guilty secrets shall be forestalled. We need that our boys and girls shall be taught and encouraged to cultivate an indignant virtue, which shall purify our schools by its courage and vehemence. So, too, in manufactories, warehouses, &c., as well as in society, the outspoken courage of moral indignation is needed. All sinners are cowards, but particularly filthy sinners. At present, the young man who won't laugh at obscene wit is the object of scorn. But let only a few knights of purity speak out in brave and manly fashion the hot anger that is within them, and soon the tables will be turned. The shame will then rest on those whose words are shameful.

Such is the work to be done. Each of us must do our part, under pain of severe condemnation. But, and here is the rub with multitudes, are we free to speak out boldly and indignantly against impurity? Can we do so honestly, in face of a past that has been stained more or less with this very sin?

The law of God is spiritual, and searches the thoughts and intents of the heart. "Whoso looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." In face of such a law few can look with complacency upon their past. In thought if not in word, in word if not in deed, the soul has been corrupted, and the life-record stained with the evil thing. How can such men speak out boldly for righteousness? How, in honesty, can they, whose own past condemns them, take rank to-day as knights of purity?

The searching nature of the word honesty increases the difficulty of the problem, as well as its solemnity. Honesty looks three ways, to self, to man, to God. It requires that we face our own past, and deal with it as truly as we deal with the sins of others around us. Also, that we do all this as in God's sight, and with due regard to his great claims upon us. Were it not for revelation, we should be ready to say: "My former sin has shut my mouth. Honesty forbids me to denounce that sin in others. 'He that is without sin amongst you, let him cast the first stone.'"

(I.) The great test case of the Old Testament—that of King David. The progress of the experience here described is most suggestive. David is photographed in three distinct, yet progressive, experiences. Beginning with the dishonest indignation of impenitence, he passes on into the silence of one whose conscience is awakened, but not pacified. From thence he attains, through confession and forgiveness, to the blessed liberty of heart and tongue which marks the true preacher of righteousness. But let us consider these points more carefully.

(1) First observe, David indignant but dishonest. Most of us are prone to believe the lie that time cleanses guilt; that a man may seal up the blotted pages of the past with his own hand, and live as though they were never more to be opened, either by himself or by others. We are apt to act as though the turning over of a new leaf, the living of a different life in the present, dissociated us from our former life with its demerit and shame, as though the sins of those days were absolved merely by the lapse of time and the improvement that has taken place in us. It has often been observed that few are so ready to denounce other men's sins, and so unsparing in their denunciations, as those who commit this mistake.

Is there not great danger to many in the midst of the grand moral upheaval which we are now witnessing, lest they should forget their own sins, still unrepented of, and still unconfessed, and should grow virtuous in their own eyes, but dishonest and pharisaical in the eyes of God, as they declaim against the impurities of their fellows?

This was just what David did. His great sin was now growing old. No judgment had followed it. Things were as usual in palace and in kingdom. He would never do it again. What was done could not now be undone. It was an ugly memory. Then bury it as much as possible—turn over a new leaf, and let the future cover the past.

But Nathan comes, and unfolds to his ready ear the pitiful story of the poor man's oppression by his rich neighbour. "And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing shall surely die!" His judgment was true; yet he was not the man to give it. He was dishonest in giving it, seeing that hitherto he had refrained from applying the same law of righteousness to his own conduct.

(2) Now we see David silent in contrition. Nathan's "Thou art the man," tears the veil of false excusings from his sin, and leaves him face to face with it in all its horror. Now at last he is honest with himself. In the presence of that awful sin, his own sin, he has no heart to speak of other men's transgressions. "My sin is ever before me," he cries; "when I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long."

David honest but silent, is a tremendous advance on David dishonestly indignant. But this state of seclusion with his shame is not to last. It prepares him for something far higher still—for the only moral condition that is truly healthy. This brings us to the third picture in which we see David,

(3) Honest with himself and his guilty past, and yet an outspoken preacher of righteousness. We hear him saying (Psl. li. 12 and 13), "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto Thee." The man with a history so terrible, and so recent—a history, too, whose guilt he realises as few men have ever done—offers to become at once a bold preacher of righteousness, if only God will cleanse and pardon him. He does this, too, at the very time when he is filled with an extraordinary sense of the absolute sincerity of heart required by God. "Behold," he exclaims, "Thou desirest truth in the inward parts."

We here stand in the presence of a most wonderful fact—one of blessed significance to guilty men. We see the man who, only a few hours ago, stood so abashed in the presence of his sin that he felt he could never more hold up his head among men, now volunteering, if only he is fully restored, to go forth as God's minister to others. He who so lately was silent, because honest and conscience-stricken, is set free by the twin angels of Confession and Pardon to speak freely and in utter sincerity the stern truth of God. So real had God's pardon become to David, so real the purging of his conscience, and so healing and liberating the combined righteousness and mercy of God, that he was no longer afraid to condemn, nor was he dishonest in condemning, the sins which in the past he had made his own.

From all which we learn that, if only our guilty past be sincerely repented of, confessed, and forgiven, we may—yea, we must—go forth to denounce sin, no matter how much we are ourselves humbled by our preaching.

The same lesson is taught us by

(II.) The great test case of the New Testament — the case of Peter. When Pentecost came, with its sudden rushing sound, its mysterious flames and voices, and its surging multitudes, some one of the Apostles was needed to explain the event, to preach Christ Jesus, and to convict men of their sin towards Him. Had we been asked which of the Twelve was best qualified for this task, we should have agreed with one consent that, whoever spoke on that subject, Peter could not. He at least must be silent, seeing it is but seven weeks ago since he, for the time being, took rank with the Saviour's foes, openly and foully denying any friendship with Christ. Yet, look! Peter of all others is the man who speaks in that supreme hour. What a marvel is that sermon coming from such a man! It is all about the dignity of Jesus, that he is the Messiah, David's Son and Lord, that God has raised Him to the right hand of power and majesty, and that these mighty wonders are the gifts of that same glorified Messiah. Surely, the more he spoke of the glory of Jesus, the more he brought into relief his great sin in denying Christ. But he is bolder still; he charges them to their face with the murder of God's Holy One: "Him being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain. . . Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." These were, indeed, bold words for any man to speak, but the great marvel is that Peter should have spoken them, and should have spoken with such freedom, such searching spiritual power, that thousands "were pricked in their heart, and said, Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

A few weeks after this we see Peter again, and are surprised still more at what he does. The newborn Church of Christ is full of faith and love and joy, growing daily in numbers and influence. Suddenly sin is found in her midst. Ananias, and Sapphira his wife, apparently one of the most zealous couples in the whole Church, are betrayed, by the lust of reputation on the one hand and the lust of gold on the other, into the terrible sins of hypocrisy and lying. The infant Church must be purged from such sin. Some stern prophet of God is required to denounce their sin and speak their doom. Again we say that Peter is the Apostle we should least expect to undertake such a task. Bold, blasphemous falsehood was no small part of his own sin. Could he condemn these sinners? He does. "Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land? . . . Thou hast not lied unto men but unto God." To Sapphira he said: "How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out."

How shall we explain Peter's boldness on these two occasions? We cannot for a moment allow any supposition of insincerity. He must have been honest both to himself, to his fellows, and to his God, for he spoke inspired by the Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit, who is, above all things, the Spirit of truth and righteousness.

The only explanation possible is found in the renovating power of pardon. Sin makes us either hypocrites or cowards—probably both in the long run. But pardon, following on genuine repentance and confession, makes us men once more. It humbles—for there is nothing like forgiven sin to break a man down—yet how it disenthrals and elevates, filling with a disgust of sin, and with a noble love of righteousness!

How could Peter preach righteousness? Because when the cock crew, and when the Lord turned and looked upon Peter, he went out and wept bitterly. Because the Lord sought Peter on the Resurrection morning, and then, as we believe, Peter told Him all the sin, and He told Peter all the love. Because by the shores of Galilee's lake the Lord so spoke to Peter in the presence of the other Apostles as to fully reinstate him in their esteem, as well as in his position as their leader.

In face of these facts let no one refrain from the battle because of sin remembered. The awful question of personal guilt can be settled once and for all in the presence of Christ, the sin-bearer. Let us hasten to that presence, that we may be cleansed and healed and made strong for war.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A TOUR IN FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

DURING these last months I have been visiting with a comrade the towns of France and Switzerland where our banner is unfurled. We have been impressed with the depth and solidity of the work done, the "hunger and thirst after righteousness" manifested among our soldiers, and in hundreds of cases the glad possession and confession of a "full salvation."

Two girl officers took us first to their little home, "Aux Ollières," among the Cevennes mountains. It was only one room, roughly built for the purpose of keeping silkworms, with low beams, &c., but all is a model of neatness, order, and regularity. Sunday morning meeting here brought us a wave of blessing. In the afternoon there was an open-air meeting on the mountain side—about 500 people and glorious testimonies.

At Nîmes the following Sunday, we found a crowded hall all day, souls crying for mercy, among them seven young men. At St. Jean du Gard the mountains ring with salvation songs, and here, as at Calvisson, persecution follows, because those who sing will no longer dance at worldly fêtes, &c. At Mazamet (Tarn), whole families have been saved.

An interesting case is that of an old gipsy fortune-teller, who, on finding the Saviour, threw at once on the fire the cards she had used for her wicked trade.

A lad who had been leader of a Catholic choir, and who had spent his evenings in going from café to café singing comic songs, now sings each evening in the Salvation hall an invitation to sinners to seek the Saviour he has found.

In Switzerland, we are rapidly gaining ground. Two halls are regularly worked in Geneva, one in the lowest part of the town, and some former roughs are now among our redeemed band. Although we have less persecution than in past months the officers often suffer much. Two officers working at Granges have been chased, beaten, and almost killed, two brave girls have often been without necessary food. One of them remarked the other day, "We could not afford breakfast, dinner, and supper, so we put breakfast on the altar, and, although we suffered a little at first, we are quite accustomed now and do not mind at all."

La Sague, where we have recently formed a corps, is the scene of hard fighting. A few weeks since, when leaving a meeting, the soldiers were brutally attacked by roughs, and one poor fellow had his leg broken. He is at present a glorious witness of the power of God to keep in moments of trial. Another old man, who was cruelly beaten in a former attack at Mutrux, is now lying at death's door, and from far and wide visitors are coming to hear his words of faith, and grasp once more his hand before he enters "the river." The saved Anarchist, whose life is constantly in danger from his former companions, is going on well. Bright, devoted warriors are the La Sague converts.

From all the posts named, and from many others, there are candidates for the "Training Homes," young men and women who, hearing the call of God, have answered, "Here am I, send me!" The Paris training homes opened on September 15. We have now much larger premises, and are more than doubling our number of cadets. The call for officers is great. So pressing are the needs of the people, that those who are already on the field of battle are much over-worked.—Yours, K. H. PATRICK.

SELF-SUPPORTING MISSIONARIES.

THE Church of Christ is now becoming thoroughly alive to her great mission: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." But how shall it be accomplished? is the question of missionary societies. A noble army of Christian youths are pressing forward, saying, "Here am I, send me." But the societies have to respond, "Where are the means to send forth these young soldiers to the field?" It is to assist in answering this difficult question that I venture to tell my simple experience in Brazil.

About seven years ago Mr. Bowers left the East London Missionary Training Institute to take charge of a little native church in Pernambuco, Brazil. This little church had been formed some time previously by Dr. Kalley, a gentleman widely known for his missionary labours in Madeira and Rio Janeiro. Mr. Bowers, after a few brief days, was smitten down by yellow fever, and through the guiding hand of God I was led to take up the work in his place. During the first three years of my work in Brazil, I was partly sustained through the instrumentality of Dr. Kalley and a few Christian friends. At the end of three years, changes by death interfering with this arrangement, I was led to cast myself entirely upon God, and to endeavour to sustain myself, at the same time continuing the work of the mission. This I have now done for three years, and, through the goodness of God, I can now say that the work is self-supporting.

My plan is a very simple one. By giving a few lessons in English daily to private persons or in schools I have earned ample means for my support. I have never wanted for pupils, and my teaching has gained for me many friends and much influence. And, by the grace of God, I have preached regularly on Sundays and weekdays, and God has blessed the preaching of his word. We have a church of about fifty baptized members, and a congregation of about a hundred, besides Sunday-school, cottage meetings, &c. During the last four or five months upwards of a dozen have been baptized, all converts from Romanism.

Are there not many young men and women in privileged Britain who might go forth in the same way to preach and teach the Gospel in various parts of the world? Of course, ability and education are needed, as well as Christian heroism of a high class. But are there not many possessing such who stay at home, cramping the use of their talents while millions are perishing who have never heard the Gospel? This scheme is not Utopian. I have proved its success myself, and the Apostle Paul gave the example when he worked to sustain himself rather than leave the heathen without a preacher. In the city where I labour, workers are needed, and I much desire a colleague to labour with me. For a fitting man, having faith in God, there would be no lack of means.

At present our preaching hall is a hired house and we may at any time be ejected through the malice of our enemies, as was once the case. To avoid such a disaster it is our desire to build a hall, that the work may not be hindered. For this end the members, though they are generally very poor, have contributed about £300. The completion of this scheme will rejoice our hearts and aid in preaching the Gospel to thousands of unsaved souls. Any information may be had from Dr. Kalley, or Rev. H. Grattan Guinness.

ANTI-INFIDEL TRACT ENTERPRISE.—During the past month, Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has given away, to working men and others, over 300 of his five shilling packets of Anti-Infidel Tracts, but for want of means he is quite unable to give away any more, notwithstanding the fact that he is receiving daily numerous applications. Though there are three infidel papers published every week, the Anti-Infidel is the only magazine issued to counteract their baneful influence. This tract enterprise is on a self-supporting basis, and for every 5s. received, 10s. worth of tracts are sent to the donor or to any address given. Samples and catalogue post free of W. R. ON DISESTABLISHMENT.

By AN EVANGELICAL CLERGYMAN.

THE air is full of it; and to be, or not to be, is now the question. Determined to defend heir peculiar privileges, are thousands of Church- en, cleric and lay. Determined to demolish the Establishment," as such, are thousands of issenters, on the other side. Far-seeing men nong "Church" leaders have long regarded isestablishment as inevitable, and for years ave been taking precautionary measures against ie approaching "evil day." The dread of hat has been seen with the future has led them thoroughly overhaul every part of "Church" achinery. They have re-organised ruri-decanal hapters, archidiaconal conferences, diocesan, rovincial, and national synods; and, un- oubtedly, behind much of the ecclesiastical tivity which, wrongly baptized and received s "life," is now so prevalent in every part of ir land, is a desire, on the part of ecclesiastics hemselves, to stand well with the governing ass of the future.

But is the Establishment worth defending? rom the point of view occupied by Churchmen enerally, undoubtedly it is. Its ministers have certain "status" which Society does not so illingly accord to those of other denominations; nd, because of the national character of the stitution, it secures to itself, together with the lherence of the greater part of the gentry, a ertain kind of respectability which holds to s bosom very many of the middle and monied lasses. Its income, again, though so great, olls so regularly and readily into its coffers, hat the Churchman knows next to nothing of he perpetual worry to which his Nonconformist eighbour is subjected through the substantial apport demanded by his own particular "cause."

But let the question be considered from a hristian's point of view; and, when I speak of Christian, I use the word in its purest sense. have before me a man who claims to belong to Church, against which the Lord Himself has aid that the gates of hell shall never prevail—a hurch that has for its immovable safeguards ie presence, omniscience, and omnipotence of od. Is there anything so necessarily involved the tie which binds the Church of England to ie State that the disruption of the one from ie other should terrify and trouble such an one? nhesitatingly I answer, "No;" and I fear me iat the conduct of many who, in this sense, aim to be Christians, is causing outsiders to mark, rather freely, that such cannot be be- evers in their own creed.

One good brother professes to be fearing for ie fate of the disestablished in country villages. ake a map of England, dear friend, draw a ne through one of the counties, and then ndeavour to visit, or to get visited, all the illages on, or near that line. In how few arishes will be found more than one in ten of he adults of a village attending the parish hurch? And in how few churches will the ruth as it is in Jesus be heard from the pulpits? ou will find that salvation through, if not by, acraments, is taught by seven out of every ten f the clergy. You will hear these talk much of aptismal vows; but you will find them glorying, s a rule, in promoting what you deem unmiti- ated worldliness. One has but to take up some ocal weekly, at certain seasons of the year, to ind how one reverend gentleman has "brought own the house" by his admirable acting in ome screaming farce, and another has "won olden opinions," by his capital rendering of ome comic song.

In other reports you will have reverends pre- iding at and applauding performances from hich you yourself would shrink with something ke horror. You are thinking of a Protestant hurch of England. The majority of these men epudiate the name of Protestant, and were you visit their parishes they would very soon bid ou to take your "sour Puritanism" elsewhere. ou prize the British Sabbath, but it has become the fashion with the country clergy to support the movement which, but for interference on the part of God Himself, will end in its secularisation, after the fashion of continental countries. You have but to read the report of any clerical conference, where the Sabbath question has been discussed, to find that my words are true. To preserve their power over the people at large, these men are prepared to let them do almost as they like, provided they will render a certain amount of allegiance to themselves. Nay, were you but better acquainted with it, you would never deem the ecclesiastical system, known in country villages as the Church of England, essential to the welfare of the Church of Christ.

It is urged by other good men that "the Church of England" is the nation's strongest bulwark against the rising tide of Roman Catholicism. But whence does Rome derive her perverts, if not from "the Church of England"? The fact of the matter is, that whether we wilfully remain blind to the truth, or whether we boldly face it, "the Establishment" has been so thoroughly leavened by Tractarianism, that, under the guise of Ritualism, Romanism dominates in all its councils. If there is an Evangelical party left, its numbers are ever growing less; and but few young men are coming forward to fill up the gaps that death and defection are constantly making in its ranks. Let anyone consider the rules laid down by the present Bishop of Lichfield, with regard to the deacons of his diocese, rules that doubtless, ere long, will be far more extensively adopted, and this will cause but little surprise. The Evangelical party, at one time, was strong enough to have revised "The Book of Common Prayer." It failed to grasp its opportunity, which went by never to return. Revision of that book will shortly take place under Romanising influence.

"But how strange," will some good people say, "that some of the most pronounced Ritualists are advocates for Disestablishment." But this is by no means strange when considered from their point of view. I think it is written, in connection with the parable of the Unjust Steward, that "the children of this world are, in their generation, wiser than the children of light." These know what is most probably coming to pass, and act accordingly. If I may use one of Mr. Moody's favourite expressions, "I venture to say" they will be disappointed; but, while the Ritualists wish to be disestablished, to be freed from State restraint, they expect, or hope, to retain for themselves the greater part, if not all, of the endowment, and thus endeavour to gain a footing in the good graces of the rising Democracy.

Be this as it may, Disestablishment is seemingly inevitable; but should the dread of it distress or disturb the minds of the children of God? His own Word would certainly say, "No." Their bread and their water is sure; nor can any need that may ever arise remain hidden from their heavenly Father's eye. They may calmly leave the morrow in his hands. Sufficient unto the day shall be the evil thereof, and should any evil arrive, his grace shall prove sufficient for it. Let none, then, be moved in defence of what are well called "the temporalities" of a church, to dishonour, in the eyes of those around them, by the manifestation of party feeling, the name and cause of their Saviour Lord. Brethren, "the time is short." The Master is at hand. All wrongs will be righted when He comes, and till then let us be content to know that the very hairs of our heads are numbered.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.—The new Y.W.C.A. Institute has been formally opened. The rooms are very bright and attractive. The lower room is fitted up as a reading and recreation room; the other as a class-room, where Bible-classes, and other classes on sick-nursing, cookery, &c., will be held. It is hoped by all these means to double the number of Y.W.C.A. members, which is already over 200, owing to the exertions of the former vicar and his wife, the Rev. J. M. and Mrs. Laycock. The opening of the Institute was celebrated by a grand gathering of 600 young women. After tea, the bright and earnest words of Rev. T. J. Maddon, vicar, were followed by an address from Mrs. Stephen Menzies.

"GEMS OF PRAISE."*

THERE is no populous city in the world where the streets, crowded every day of the week, from early morning till late in the evening, by an eager, busy, throng—are so utterly deserted on Sundays, in the early part of the day—as London. Living at present in a quarter of the Metropolis where traffic is surging through the streets from break of day till midnight, the quiet of the Sunday mornings brings a sense of rest and peacefulness to the soul; and, as one wakes up from sleep, one becomes gradually conscious of the difference, and thinks, with a feeling of gladness, that it is the Sabbath morning.

It was at such a season as this, while everything was still hushed—not a sound to be heard—there came a note, clear and musical, as the carol of a bird. The unexpected sound, such a contrast to the hoarse noises of other mornings, awakened emotions of so much gladness that I held my breath to listen. Through the open window I could hear footsteps on the pathway below, as of some one hastening along, and I knew that the song came from the passer by. A fresh, young, masculine voice, attuned by the harmony of the soul, revealed the aspirations and content that possessed the heart of the singer. Well could one discern that it was not the first time such song had been sung. There was a certainty of enunciation, by which I could distinguish every word; and the melody was sustained as if the soul craved that its voice should be heard within the courts of heaven. How soft, and clear, and ringing these notes vibrated through the air! A matin of praise! And these were the words I heard:—

"I've found a friend in Jesus,
He's ev'rything to me,
He's the fairest of ten thousand
To my soul."

As the singer passed on, the words became less distinguishable, and, though I continued to listen, I believed I should hear no more. Just then, probably a current of wind bore back the sounds, and I could just catch, as it were, the faint whisperings of the refrain—

"The bright and morning star,
He's the fairest of ten thousand
To my soul."

"Singing to the Lord in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs." Few things are so effective in keeping the heart loyal to God, and to the Lord and Saviour, as beautiful thoughts allied to music. The mind, stored with such songs, carries with it a treasury, from which it can always draw, to keep the mind pure and the heart in tune.

I turn to that compendium of Hymns, "Gems of Praise," and scanning it more scrutinisingly, I find it includes a large number of sacred songs, fitted to awaken and keep alive sentiments of joy, and gladness, and rejoicing. We greatly need the spiritual habit of gladness; it overcomes distrust and half-heartedness, and enables us to realise vividly a true life in a risen, living Saviour.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.

ON Thursday evening a Monthly Meeting for Christian workers was inaugurated at the Sheltering Homes, Liverpool, on a similar basis to the one that has been held for so many years, and with such blessed results, at the Spitalfields Home of Industry. The first hour was devoted to tea and social converse. Fifty children, received into the Sheltering Homes during the last three weeks, were present; with their singing and their bright happy looks, they contributed much to the cheerfulness of the gathering. It seemed almost incredible that but a few days (in some cases only a few hours) before, they had been in a state of wretchedness and squalor beyond description.

A deeply spiritual and encouraging address was given by Mr. Robert Jackson, one of the committee of the Homes, on "Workers together with God," and several testified to its strengthening influence. It is hoped this little monthly gathering may be a means of spiritual refreshment to many earnest and quiet labourers in the Lord's vineyard in this city.

SERVING THE LORD CHRIST.

FOR the past eighteen years the Servants' Mission and Homes have been (under the supervision of the superintendent, Mr. James Goodchild) unweariedly plodding on, endeavouring to supply advantages to enable all servants who come under its influence, to be servants of Christ in their daily duties. The institution comprises a Men's Home, 14, Sloane-terrace, S.W., and a Women's Home, 162, Warwick-street, S.W., where male and female servants of the nobility are accommodated with board and lodging—or more correctly—"a home from home" in the Metropolis, where they may, during their changes of situation, find a haven safe from the undercurrents of the never-resting sea of London life. The writer could give striking instances of conversion to God amongst the Jameses and Marys during their stay in the Homes. This is the end sought for. A perusal of the Report, which will be gladly sent to any applicant, will be well repaid.

The "Christian Servants' Association" is an outcome of the mission, and numbers some 300 servants of every grade. What are its members? Only such as are truly converted to God, and desire to be useful in leading others to Christ. They are Christians of different denominations, united not by creeds, but by Christ; having no party aim, but ever seeking to direct the unsaved to Christ. They are scattered here and there amidst the spiritual darkness of this and other countries, as God's witnesses and God's lights.

On Thursday evening the 1st inst., was held the quarterly meeting of this Association; and, notwithstanding the lateness of the season, and the fact that most of the servants are like their employers at this season—migratory birds, inhaling the country air in all parts of Great Britain—the mission-hall in Sloane-terrace was quite full.

After prayer and hearty praise, Mr. Goodchild addressed his friends from Ps. xviii. 1, 2. The servant of Christ, he said, must exercise perpetual watchfulness and prayer to overcome his spiritual foes. A timely word was given to the servants as to their responsibilities in regard to social purity, to watch against, condemn, and denounce indelicate speech, unchaste inuendoes, questionable conversations, which may be rife in the servants' hall, stables, or pantry, and to throw around the young and unsuspecting all possible protection. Incidental reference was made to the legal proceedings against Mr. Stead, who evidently has the sympathy of intelligent servants, as, at the close of the meeting, a vote of prayerful sympathy was adopted.

A budget of interesting letters, produced by Mr. Goodchild, contained varied requests, some for praise, others for prayer. A season was spent in prayer while requests were given out, which gave a peep behind the scenes of God's work amongst servants. Praise was offered for many souls brought to Christ during the past quarter in both the Homes, needs supplied and grace given to sick ones. The meeting was thrown open for remarks, and for the space of fully an hour and a half there was an uninterrupted stream of testimony and praise.

Before separating, all united in heartily singing the anthem, "Bless the Lord, O my soul! and forget not all his benefits." The pleasant evening passed all too quickly, for we were in good company. The servants are quite emphatic that "his service is perfect freedom," and they apparently seem to enjoy it, and rejoice in it.

It may not be amiss just now to call attention to a remark at a public meeting, made by the present Earl of Shaftesbury (God grant that he may emulate all the noble qualities of his revered and beloved ancestor who has just left us). The noble Lord said: "For some reason or another, boys and girls who in the old days would have been perfectly content to enter domestic service, now fly much higher. The daughters of small farmers all want to go out as nursery governesses, and the sons as clerks. Now, I cannot see anything more menial in sweeping a doorstep or brushing a pair of boots than in sitting all day long on a three-legged stool in a narrow, musty room, covering sheets of paper with ink, often to no good purpose, and certainly losing a great deal of the cheerful companionship, and other advantages that servants enjoy. Depend upon it, there is no disgrace in what we call 'menial occupations.' 'Honour,' says Pope, 'in no condition lies: act well your part; there all the honour lies.' When I look around me, and see many of my old friends whom I have known as footmen, others whom I have known as housemaids, and even scullery-maids, raising themselves steadily in the social scale, becoming householders, keeping house for lodgers, or improving their condition in other ways, I say, do not let any of those whom I now address be led away by what I am bound to call, stupid theories. I am sure if I had my bread to earn, I would far sooner go and win it as a coachman, a groom, or a gamekeeper, than by sitting, as I said before, from morning till night in a small dark office, required to keep up a respectable appearance in a calling, which, though some people may call it genteel, is not in reality half so desirable as the good pay, and the plentiful living generally provided for domestic servants." LESSONS FROM NEWGATE.

NEWGATE! What scenes have been here enacted! What sufferings have been endured! and what sorrows have been experienced. New Gate, which Stowe classifies as the fifth principal gate in the city wall, was first built about the time of Henry I. or Stephen, and was a prison for felons and trespassers as early as the reign of King John.

This gate of the city in time became old, and, needing repairs very badly, was pulled down and a new gate built (hence its name). It was destroyed in the great fire and rebuilt in a stronger and more convenient form. The prison was again burnt in the Gordon riots of 1780; the Fleet Prison, the King's Bench, Clerkenwell, and Bridewell, having been previously broken open.

The slang term for Newgate used to be the "Stone Jug," just as the "Bank" for Millbank, and "The Steel" for the House of Correction.

Accompanied by some friends, my fellow labourer, Mr. Clark, and I, were recently shown all over this old historic place. Entering through a small low door, we were taken into a room containing casts of the heads of the most notorious criminals who had been executed within and outside the prison for the past 100 years.

There are points in the histories of many of these criminals which are very suggestive and illustrative of eternal things. For example, Martha Browning, in 1846, murdered her mistress to obtain a £10 note which she had seen in her possession; but when she got it, it proved to be but a counterfeit. How many risk their soul's salvation for something in the world which, after all, proves but a delusion and a snare. Truly, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Then, again, Bishop and Williams were executed for killing persons for the sake of their bodies, which were sold for anatomical purposes; their last victim was a poor Italian boy, whom they drowned in a well, head downwards, to give the idea that he died a natural death; but water was found in the lungs, and they were brought to justice. "Be sure your sin will find you out" was brought to our minds very forcibly by this incident. A third man was also condemned with these two, and the gallows was made ready for the three, when a reprieve came for him at the last moment. Saved like the dying thief, just in time.

In the same room are exhibited irons of all descriptions, ancient and modern, for the arms, legs, and waists of the prisoners, some of the leg irons weighing nearly 40 lbs. The identical irons made for Jack Sheppard were shown us, and out of which he disentangled himself an escaped twice. A massive axe made to decapitat the Cato-street Conspirators, they being ordere to be "hanged, drawn and quartered," we als saw; and it may surprise many to hear that, a the law of England still stands, a person guilt of high treason may be thus treated.

"I have seen twenty-two men and one woma hanged in that strap," said our courteous guid showing us the belt with which the crimina were pinioned.

Leading the way through the old prison, th walls of which are two feet thick, the warder conducted us into quite a modern prison within th old one. It is only used now while the Centra Criminal Court is sitting as a house of detentio for the persons awaiting trial.

Entering the condemned cell, we were ver much struck with the text which hangs over th bed on which the prisoner under sentence o death sleeps; it reads, "Cast thy burden upo the Lord." Words easily read, but, with murde on the soul, not so easily obeyed. Two othe very suitable texts adorned the walls, viz "Hope thou in God," and "God is love. They were the gift of a lady in Norwich.

Silas Told, a Wesleyan minister, speaking o a visit to some condemned men in Newgate, i 1744, says:—"On being called out to have the irons knocked off, Lancaster looked towar heaven and smiled, saying, 'Glory be to God fo the first moment of my entrance into this plac Before I came hither my heart was as hard as m cell-wall, and my soul was as black as hel But I am now washed from all my sins, and soo shall be with Christ in Paradise.' He the exhorted the multitude to flee from the wrath t come."

Entering the chapel we noticed a slab over th pulpit on which was written the words, "No then we are ambassadors for Christ, as thoug God did beseech you by us: we pray you i Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God" (2 Co v. 20). A black chair is set apart under th pulpit for the use of the condemned man, wh thus listens on the Sunday previous to his execution to his own funeral sermon. What a incentive for the preacher, to know that one wa listening for the last time! May we ever preac as "a dying man to dying men!"

A few moments more and we were in a structure like a coach-house, which contains th gallows. This consists of two upright post with a stout beam running across. The unhapp criminal stands upon two hinged trap-doo which meet in the centre, and are secured b bolts connected with a lever. He is the pinioned and the noose is adjusted round h neck. When all is ready the executioner move the lever, the bolts are released, the hinged doo part in the centre, falling to their respective side and the soul is launched into eternity. Fro this very gallows, on one occasion, four me were hanged at the same moment.

Very solemn were the thoughts which fille our minds as we saw this place. Judgment wa the prominent thought; oh that, in these days o open sin and flaunting vice, men could be led t see that as judgment overtakes the breaker o his country's laws so inevitably will it also overtake those who transgress against the comman of God! If it is solemn to think of the senten of an earthly tribunal, how much more so is th thought of that Great Assize where God wi "judge the secrets of all men." He has "appointed a day in which He will judge the wor in righteousness by that Man whom He ha ordained."

It is stated in Stowe's Survey of London, th it was formerly the custom of the clerk or th bellman of St. Sepulchre's Church to go Newgate on the night preceding the executio of a criminal, ring his bell, and repeat th following words:—

> "All you that in the condemned cell do lie,
> Prepare you, for to-morrow you shall die;
> Watch all, and pray; the hour is drawing near,
> That you before the Almighty must appear.
> Examine well yourselves, in time repent,
> That you may not to eternal flames be sent;
> And when St. Sepulchre's bell to-morrow tolls,
> The Lord above have mercy on your souls!
> Past twelve o'clock."

SONGS AND SOLOS" IN JERUSALEM.

IR,—The collection of "Sacred Songs and Solos" does not, at this time of day, stand need of any recommendation. The work it as been doing will be mentioned in history herever the progress of Christ's kingdom in ese our days is faithfully described.

But, as an encouragement to mission workers out-of-the-way places, allow me to state the ollowing facts:—

Less than three years ago the above collection f hymns was known in Jerusalem by reputation nly. Your friend, Mr. Greene, of Ipswich, rought the first copy of the "penny edition" f "Sacred Songs and Solos" to Jerusalem, in ecember, 1882.

A lady, whose name I am not allowed to give, rocured a copy with notes, played first a few avourite hymns of Mr. Greene's in her own amily, and then encouraged a few Jewish conerts and inquirers to join her family circle very Sunday night in this service of praise.

Most of these young men knew very little nglish, and had the preparatory difficulty of earning to read the hymns and understand the rift of their teaching. None of these young en knew notes. Moreover, they were a shiftng population. The score or so of young men at might be seen on a certain Sunday night ould not be together for more than some onths, after which some who had made some rogress would leave, their places being taken y raw new-comers.

Surely there was little to encourage the hope at this weekly service of praise would produce reat pleasure or spiritual profit, and yet, after ttle more than two years' labour of love, I ejoice to be able to state that the spiritual esult of it has been very great.

(1) The tunes have so taken hold of these oung men that they have completely chased way out of their minds and memories the proane tunes they may have known before, and hey do now literally conform to the Apostle ames's injunction: "Is any of you merry, t him sing psalms."

I once joined an excursion from Jerusalem to he Jordan, where I saw some fifteen young men elonging to this improvised choir. They enoyed the outing thoroughly, and the expression f that enjoyment was the singing of hymns. Whether they waited in the morning for the rest f the party to get ready, or rode together during e hot day, or rested at night, they seemed to now no other pleasure than to sing some of heir hymns.

(2) The words have been a great blessing to any. I stated above that most of them knew ttle English; but, on the wings of the tunes, hich are exquisitely sweet to them, the hardest ords are readily brought to their memories, nd, while reading other books, the phrases used the hymns have, to my own knowledge, reeatedly been the means of spiritually furthering eginners in the knowledge of the Gospel, when ey happened to come across them elsewhere, nd were induced to think and speak about hem.

(3) These hymns have been the means of iving young converts practical experience of he community of saints.

Not only have they been drawn towards one nother when, of an evening, one began to lead nd the others joined him in singing the praises f our Redeemer, but it has happened to some, fter they had left Jerusalem, that whilst they ere humming to themselves, on board ship and lsewhere, one of these tunes, Christian persons resent gladly joined them and recognised as rethren in the faith those whom they might therwise have passed by without notice.

Touching are some of the anecdotes connected ith this latter result, but I must not further respass on your space, and trust that many eary workers may be encouraged by this unought for, most cheering result of the hymn-inging in Jerusalem, never to be weary in well-oing.—I am, yours faithfully,

A JERUSALEMITE.

CONVALESCENT HOME, SANDGATE.

BY A CASUAL VISITOR.

IN the centre of that noble bay which sweeps from the South Foreland round to Dungeness Point is situated the pretty little watering-place of Sandgate; and almost in the middle of the long, quaint street of which the town is principally composed, with its windows looking on to the beach, is the London Samaritan Mission's excellent Convalescent Home, known as "Beach Rocks."

Its first great advantage is seen at once—it is quite unlike an "Institution," being a long, low, two-storied house, once a private dwelling, but now with great skill converted into a charming and well-arranged Home for Convalescents. The entrance is through a pretty conservatory of ferns and flowers, which at once gives an air of quiet and refinement. This conservatory leads to a hall, whence open the various rooms for the patients. To the right a passage leads to the women's sitting-room, a large, lofty, and well-proportioned apartment, plainly but comfortably furnished. Three large French windows lead to a terrace and grass plot, across which is the beach where the Channel waters ceaselessly play. There are couches where the invalids may lie and gaze through the windows at the lovely panorama of sea and sky; and books and papers are supplied. There are also a harmonium and telescope. Returning down the passage we pass a private apartment, which is the matron's, and then come to the men's sitting-room, fitted in much the same manner as the preceding, but without the harmonium. This room also has a large window opening on to the terrace aforesaid. Oh! what an inexpressible delight it must be to poor invalids, weary with sickness and just struggling back to health and strength to rest in this lovely and quiet spot, and feast their eyes on this grand picture of the great Creator's own handiwork! The song of praise should go ceaselessly up to the Lord of all for his marvellous goodness to the children of men. "This delightful home," said one person, speaking of it, "is indeed a boon. I feel I am getting better and better every day, though I have only been here four days. My appetite is improving, and I am gaining strength."

If any one were to ask the writer the "specialty" of this spot, he would say the air is so soft and yet bracing. It strengthens without being too keen; and many an invalid—particularly those "weak on the chest"—who would find the air of Margate and Ramsgate too strong and searching, would rejoice in the soft, and yet health-giving breezes of Sandgate.

To return, however, to our review of this delightful Home. Behind the men's sitting-room is the dining-hall, where its patients take their meals in two "parties" daily, and they speak with thankfulness of the plentiful and wholesome food provided; while, on the opposite side, are the kitchens, right away from the sitting-rooms, and yet conveniently situated for serving the meals with promptitude and despatch.

Upstairs the arrangements are equally good. There are two distinct staircases for the men and women, and the suites of rooms are quite separate. The apartments are furnished plainly and comfortably, and everything is most scrupulously clean. Here the poor convalescents can enjoy health-giving and sound sleep, undisturbed by any sound save the soft lullaby of the ocean waves.

We have written this because we are anxious to interest our readers in the noble work carried on at this excellent and well-managed Home. It is intended for those, poor in this world's goods, who, having been broken down in health by reason of hard work or exhausting sickness, are in need of a health-giving resting-place, where they may recuperate their energies for their work and duty. There is many a toil-worn sufferer and wearied convalescent pent up in the great city, and languishing in the enervating air of the densely-populated East-end, who will never return to health and strength under those untoward conditions, and can only waver, like a shadow, along life's pathway, in feebleness and pain; but a fortnight or three weeks here would set them up again, and make, all the difference to them between health and sickness.

Here is a pale-faced little lad, just come from the Consumptive Hospital; there, a poor young woman recovering from a painful and hazardous operation; another is a working man struck down in the midst of his manhood; all are endeavouring to tread the path that leads back to health and strength, and the difference in the faces of those just arrived and those just about to return is striking enough, and the best evidence of the immense value of the Home.

This institution is a branch of the Master's work. In the parable the Good Samaritan bound up the wounds of the man who had fallen among thieves, and in this Home the groundwork of healing is carried on in his name.

The total cost, including railway-fare from London, is but £2 1s. for a three weeks' stay, and the patient can either pay this himself, or persons can send their servants, or any person they know, at this excedingly low charge. Annual subscribers of one guinea can give one letter yearly for the admission of a patient, who then only pays an additional few shillings per week. The late Earl Shaftesbury, after visting the Home, wrote that it was "a moral and physical Paradise."

All communications to be addressed to Mr. John James Jones, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.

THE seventeenth anniversary service was held on Sunday week at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, there being from two to three thousand persons present. Dr. Thain Davidson presided, and was accompanied by a large number of the local clergy and ministers, whose presence was a pleasing evidence of their hearty sympathy with the work.

After devotional exercises, conducted by the local vicar and Mr. Snashall, Dr. Davidson gave a brief address, in which he stated that the attendance, in the judgment of his valuable co-workers, had never been so good as during the past year. He was thankful to say that during seventeen years there had never been a hitch in the arrangements; and though all the services given were purely voluntary, the appointed preacher had never failed to appear. Denominationalism was unknown in that hall. They aimed at having a bright and hearty service and addresses that appealed alike to head and heart. Dr. Davidson referred to the great loss the cause of Christian philanthropy had sustained by the death of Lord Shaftesbury, who took a special interest in such services, and had sometimes presided at their meetings.

Brief addresses were given by two ministers, after which Mr. Elvin, the secretary of Mr. Spurgeon's Evangelistic Association, who takes charge of the Sunday evening congregations, gave a cheering report of his work. The interest he showed to be fully sustained. Taking both services together, it is computed that not less than four thousand persons hear the Gospel every Lord's day at the Agricultural Hall.

Y.W.C.A. TRAVELLERS' AID DEPARTMENT.

DEAR SIR,—I have to thank many of your readers for their kind response to my letter respecting the protection of our young girls while travelling. The department which we then formed to meet this need is progressing rapidly, and we could already give many touching illustrations of its usefulness. Friends residing on the lines of the South Eastern, the London and South Western, the Great Northern, the London, Brighton, and South Coast, and Midland Railways, who write for cards can have them at once, as full permission has been given for all stations on these lines, but we prefer to forward them to their destination through the railway officials. We again earnestly appeal for the co-operation of all Christian workers throughout the country. Handbills, 1s. per 100, for general distribution drawing attention to this effort, specially suitable for railway porters, waiting-room attendants, &c., and a little book, 1d., containing the list of all societies for the benefit of young women will shortly be ready, and can be had on application to the Travellers' Secretary, 17, Old Cavendish-street.—Yours faithfully,

"THE REAPER AND THE HARVEST."*

THIS is the title given to an attractive volume of five hundred and fifty pages of letterpress. The book is edited by Rev. P. C. Headley, author of "Evangelists in the Church," and there is an introductory chapter by Rev. A. H. Burlingham, D.D., both of America.

Two objects take prominent place even in the bare announcement of the book, (1) The Holy Ghost, (2) The Evangelist. The one is presented as the great motor power, the other as the agent of that power. The one is invisible, intangible, yet presented as a power, the other is a mortal man; and, being such by constitution, therefore of like passions with other men, one who can be seen, scrutinised, judged. We may, therefore, look to find in this volume a history, under certain limitations, of these two worlds designated the Invisible and the Visible.

This history goes back to 1860-61, when the work of Mr. Hammond may be said to have begun, that is, it was in Scotland that this son of the Western Hemisphere became known as a labourer in conjunction with organised churches. He was then a student, having spent some time in the Theological College of Edinburgh, and the dew of young manhood was then still upon him. While there were already a few faithful workers outside of ordination, and one or two gentlemen of birth and distinction holding university degrees, who were and had been labouring—carrying words of warning to the multitudes of all grades—it will detract not a jot from the value and distinctiveness of these labourers to say it was Mr. Hammond's WORK—its mode and manner, its pervasiveness and conspicuous results—that bore in upon the general mind, and fixed the heart of the Churches to the recognition and acceptance of the "Evangelist," as having a distinct function in the Christian Church.

As a canon of belief, the office of evangelist has always existed in all the Christian Churches, and it has had its exponents at different periods even with splendour; but a quarter of a century ago, in Scotland and in England, the function had fallen into abeyance, and its worth and necessity had almost entirely lost recognition.

The freedom from the existing manner more or less necessarily characterising all our clergy of whatever denomination—the spontaneity of thought and utterance, the freshness of a fresh mind fashioned under different skies and institutions, to those of the older countries, the simple forms in which he cast the old, old truths, and, one thing more, the influence going forth from the man—these all combining, going forth as rayons from a central source of light and heat, quickened and vitalised the souls of multitudes of all grades, and made them conscious that impulses of a different order animated them in their feelings and actions, and filled them with a great desire to live the ideal life, that is, the Life from Divine influx.

The other feature of importance was made conspicuous during the several months which engrossed Mr. Hammond's labours. In all the great centres of population, such as Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dumfries, the towns of the north, the towns of the south, wherever he was invited, it was where the clergy had been for a long course of years fulfiling the duties of their responsible office with a faithfulness worthy of Apostolic days—illumined men, laborious in the instruction of their congregations, and acting with much insight into human needs. It was this long previous preparedness, whore the moral ground had been ploughed deep, and the seed spread broadcast, it was the results there that so conspicuously illustrated the work of the Evangelist. He came as a skilled electrician, and fired the mine, and all men saw, ay, the world outside saw, and must needs cease to sneer and cavil, for they were constrained, if they would not belie common sense, to admit that a power was pervading the community that could not be gainsayed, and that its influence was humanising the manners and controlling the life to higher aims, which bespoke it to be of higher agency than the mere wisdom of men.

And these faithful pastors rejoiced and gave glory to God, for they saw the fruit of their loving and prayerful labours. The humility of the younger worker, the utter freedom from jealousy that distinguished the clergy throughout, were testimony, reliable, of their enlightenment, of the diversity of gifts which is needed within the Church, and of their thankfulness that what had been yet awanting to the perfection of their own work had been granted, and the praise and the glory were given to the God who rules and reigns amidst the affairs of men.

But we refer the reader to the volume itself, to learn how much tillage the evangelist accomplished in other wide fields where the virgin soil first was stirred, and how abundantly the seed was cast in, and how tenderly every lovely emotion was strengthened. Twenty-five years has this man done the work of an evangelist, yet his soul renews its life, even as the eagles by soaring near to the sun absorb the potent electricity in the high altitudes, so does the soul by rising to the influences of the Sun of Righteousness vivify its functions and absorb new draughts of fervid life.

MR. HAMMOND IN LONDON.

I FEEL it a great privilege to add my humble testimony to the reality and power of Mr. Hammond's work among the young. I am thankful that the Lord directed my footsteps to London at this time, so that I might have the joy of attending the services at Mildmay, and witnessing for myself a wonderful outpouring of God's Spirit. Thousands of children have passed through these meetings; it will be quite safe to say, speaking cautiously, that many hundreds have been brought to the Lord, and are now rejoicing. The work has been carried on with great judgment; those who have been present day after day have remarked the absence of excitement, and the manifest presence of the Holy Ghost.

The service in the Conference Hall on the last night was one never to be forgotten. I have never in my life been present in a meeting for old or young where there was such deep solemnity and power. For an hour and ten minutes thousands of eyes were kept riveted, many filled with tears, and the after-meeting testified that the slain of the Lord were many. No words can describe that meeting; the Word of God was brought to bear upon the immense gathering with telling effect; many must have lost sight of the speaker, and felt that they were face to face with the living God.

My growing conviction is that the Lord has sent Mr. Hammond to London to do a very blessed work, that there is "a sound of abundance of rain," and that there will be "multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision." If the Lord inclines his servant to labour here all the winter, I shall feel it my great privilege to stop in town, and assist in any way, rather than visit the provinces, so must postpone missions in towns where I was expected.

Yours very faithfully, JOSIAH SPIERS.

After the close of such a busy fortnight as Mr. Hammond had at Mildmay it might be thought he would be taking a little rest, but on Monday and Tuesday nights, 5th and 6th inst., he might have been found surrounded by hundreds of children in the schoolroom of All Saints' Church, Muriel-street, Caledonian-road, and on Wednesday and Thursday evenings amongst the young men at the "Priory," Upper-street, Islington. About five hundred men filled the building on both nights, and a supplementary meeting was held on Friday night. We rejoice to know that many a young man saw for the first time his true position in God's sight, and went away rejoicing in the knowledge and faith of Christ.

On Thursday evening Mr. Hammond spoke specially on the curse of drink and evil companionship on the young men of our land. He besought the young men present to give their hearts to the Saviour; under his guidance the snares of whisky drinking and the temptations of "fast" friends would lose their power. H.

HADDON HALL, BERMONDSEY.

Mr. Hammond's visit to Bermondsey New-road was preceded by a week of special prayer, and remarkable blessing amongst the young. Almost every evening last week some fresh cases of conviction or conversion amongst the young people were brought to light. The evangelist commenced his labours here last Saturday evening by a prayer-meeting and address to workers. On Sunday morning he again met Christians fo special prayer, when the room was crowded. I the afternoon he addressed nearly 1000 childre and young people in the hall, and in the evening about 700 adults.

The word bore immediate fruit. In the inquiry meetings both afternoon and evening "th harvest" was almost greater than the "reapers' could gather in. Many were weeping. Som —men, women, and children—long "haltin between two opinions," took the decisive step In instance after instance Christian workers foun their own children amongst the broken-hearted ones. Children who had been found weeping i the afternoon were found rejoicing at night, an able to give a good reason for "the hope i them." To those who are engaged in the servic of God here in Bermondsey, it is abundantl evident that our brother is sent of God to do mighty work. His evening address to adult was singularly powerful. During the inquiry meeting in the evening a brother told how he ha found the Lord through Mr. Hammond's Londo services seventeen years ago. Prayer is earnestl asked for the remaining services here, to clos Friday, 16th instant. W. O.

LADY MEDICAL MISSIONARIES.

THE Mansion House was placed at the disposal of the friends of the Zenana an Medical Mission School and Home on Tuesda week for their annual meeting. The Lord Mayo having briefly expressed his sense of the grea importance of the work of the Society, Dr G. de G. Griffith, Honorary Secretary, read th report, which stated that its great objects wer to supply the medical attendance so urgentl needed by the women and children of Easter lands for whom no proper provision exists. Th students receive a careful and practical medica training, but it is never forgotten the great en is that they should be missionaries indeed. DROUGHT IN MYSORE.

OUR friend, Miss L H. Austey, of the Cola Mission, who sailed from Liverpool for Indi on Saturday last, wrote to us a few days previously :—

Things are very, very dark in Mysore. Th rains keep off : it is April weather, so hot. Th tanks are dry, the wells drying up, the crop perishing ; many cultivators of the soil hav given up their lands in despair, and are doin coolie work. The Prime Minister of Mysore i about to establish relief camps.

The cry of famine is heard once again. Th grain is very expensive, and we shall soon hav famine prices if the rains do not come. Th Lord preserve the hundreds of little ones wh depend on Him alone for their daily bread in th lonely, isolated, heathen town of Colar. Th Lord increase our faith !

MR. SPURGEON ON BIOGRAPHIES.—In a notic of Miss Marsh's brief memorial of Earl Cairns, Mr Spurgeon says :—"The little book which pleasantl reminds us of him is, of course, only a mere outlin of the career of such a man ; but we believe it wi do far more good than will ever be accomplishe by those huge duplicate masses of rubbish whic are so often piled upon good men's graves. Giv us brief memorials of our great men, instead o huge biographies of our little men."

THE LATE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

FUNERAL SERVICE IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

IN spite of the keen wind and the heavy rain, soon after ten o'clock last Thursday morning people were to be seen approaching Westminster Abbey on foot from all directions. At first they came by twos and threes, then by dozens, and then in a steady continuous stream. They were drawn from all classes of society, but it was noticeable that many of them were of the poorest of the poor. It was a motley crowd that surged against the gates and railings of the Abbey. There were working men and working women, ragged urchins and greyheaded old men, roughs of every type, and all the hangers-on of every London mob. But the most careless observer would have noticed that this was no ordinary occasion. Almost every voice was hushed and every face was sad, and it was very touching to see here and there the attempts of those who had little enough clothing of any description to wear some badge of mourning. A bit of crape was tied round the sleeve of many a ragged jacket, and many a bonnet was bound with black ribbon. But it was in the bearing of the people that the most remarkable sign of sorrow was to be seen. On almost every face was the shadow that comes only with the sense of personal loss.

The scene inside the Abbey was even more grand and impressive. The intense gloom and the dead silence which was preserved by so many thousands of mourners gave to the occasion an adventitious solemnity. Seen from the choir, the sight was one which cannot readily be forgotten. On all sides there was a sea of human faces, and on every face the impress of a profound sorrow. Every seat was filled, and every point of vantage occupied, when, at a few minutes before noon, the tolling of the Abbey bell broke the silence. Very beautiful was the organist's rendering of Chopin's "Funeral March." The clock had scarcely struck the hour, when the imposing cavalcade slowly marched into the Abbey, the opening sentences of the Burial Service being sung in procession from the Nave to the Choir, with grand effect. The coffin was literally embowered in flowers. With many of the wreaths there were most touching inscriptions, one of them being a token from "Three Indian Orphans" to their "beloved Sahib;" and another, "A loving tribute from the Flower-girls of London." In the centre were placed wreaths sent by the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany, and the members of Lord Shaftesbury's family; while all around them were very similar tokens of affection from the principal societies with which he was most directly associated.

The following was the order of service:—Funeral March (Chopin); the opening sentences of the Burial Service were sung in procession from the nave to the choir; the 90th Psalm; the Proper Lesson; Anthems, "When the ear heard him" (Handel) and "Blest are the departed" (Spohr); the two concluding prayers of the Burial Service; Hymn (in which the whole congregation were asked to join), "Come, let us join our friends above" (Tune, "Dundee"); the Blessing; the Dead March in "Saul," during which the procession returned from the choir, under the organ, to the north aisle door of the north transept, through which the body of the deceased Earl was carried for his final resting-place in the family tomb at St. Giles, Dorsetshire. The pall-bearers were Messrs. John Macgregor, representing the Bible Society and London Shoeblacks Brigades; H. R Williams, King Edward Industrial Schools; George Williams, Young Men's Christian Association; W. J. Orsman, Costermongers' Mission; Joseph G. Gent, Ragged School Union; William Williams, National Refuges and Training Ships; George Holland, George Yard Ragged School; J. M. Weylland, London City Mission.

The Queen was represented, as was the Prince of Wales, by the Marquis of Hamilton, and the Duke of Edinburgh by the Hon. Colonel Colville. Thy country ill can spare thee, Shaftesbury!
Proud lawgiver of mercy to the poor,
Reclaiming tracts of lost humanity,
First step of brotherhood at many a door;

Who from thy lofty height of studious ease,
And proud ambition's noblest vantage ground.
Descended to avenge earth's miseries,
And stagnant depths of desolation sound.

No law of mercy but leapt forth from thee,
No galling yoke but thou wert first to hear;
Thy sovereign freedom was to set men free,
Thy noblest landscape was the human tear.

Thy grand heroic form all sorrow knew,
The ragged outcast wrung that knightly hand,
Thy footstep was the coming of the dew
To heal the burden of a fainting band!

Thou hadst a statesman's far prophetic eye,
Thy noble utterances majestic, slow,
Inspired the patriot to live, not die—
Stern warrior, warring with all human woes.

Yea! every inch a warrior, all life long!
God's hero with the lighted marble brow;
The holy thunder of that warning tongue,
The dauntless form! who leads to victory now?

Three sorrowing generations mourn thy loss,
Grand pioneer of a triumphant band
Of dauntless souls that start from Calvary's cross,
To heal the hidden sorrows of the land!

Charles A. Fox.

From "Punch."

Is life worth living? Who will dare to ask,
Remembering thy nobly rounded task,
Large-hearted Earl, whose lengthened track of years,
Death-shadowed now amidst a people's tears,
Spread smiles like sunshine on the earth's dark ways?
If Heaven's approval and the people's praise,
Poverty's blessing, and the joy sublime
Of ministry that lifts the curse of crime—
If these avail to dower our days with worth,
How happy was thy life, who wealth and birth
Mad'st not a perch for pleasure, pride, pretence,
But vantage ground for high beneficence!
Friend of the fallen, helper of the poor,
The poor shall see, the fallen hear no more
That kindly presence, that inspiring voice.
As in thy life their thousands did rejoice,
So at thy death they grieve. Those toilers grey,
Who find so little sun on life's hard way,
Those helpless thralls of trade, whose spirits feel
The long relentless grinding of the wheel,
Those all unchildlike children, victims small
Of modern Molochs, all who creep or fall
On poverty's rough road, or crime's steep slope,
Will miss the presence of incarnate hope,
In the Good Earl. Yet has their champion left Bequests of which they shall not be bereft,
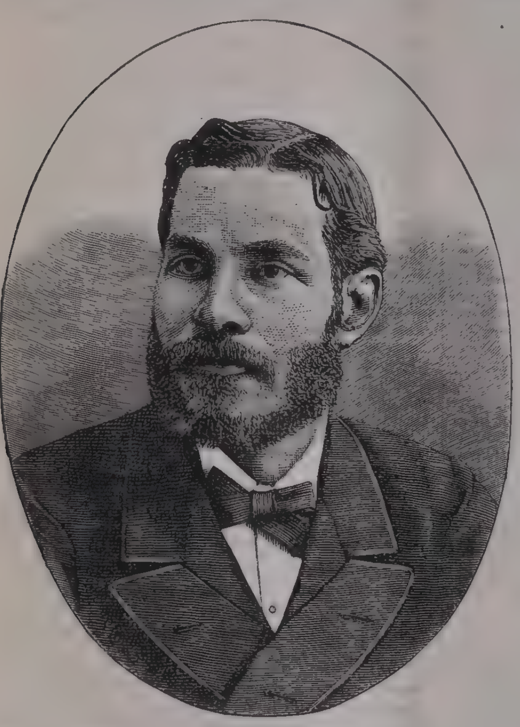
And legacies of help, in softened law,
And guardian edict; so that MAMMON's maw
Crushes them not quite wholly as of old.
There be his monuments! His heart is cold
Who reads unmoved the roll of that long life,
With nought but suffering and wrong at strife,
Or marks without a touch of tearful mist,
The passing of the great Philanthropist.

A LABOURER FOR GOD.*

THE LATE JAMES SCOTT, GLASGOW.

ONE of those sorrowful seasons through which we all have to pass, came to us towards the end of June last year, when we heard that James Scott, of Glasgow, had departed this life and had entered unto his rest. We called to mind the pleasant and profitable times we had spent together, both in work, and in play; and, though we could not mourn for him with whom all was well, we deeply felt the rude severance of a friendship that had been fast, though it had not been long. How much keener was the sorrow of his many intimate fellow-workers in Glasgow, not to speak of the multitudes on whose behalf he spent his strength, we could to some extent imagine. We gratefully hail the publication of this most interesting record from the pen of that veteran servant of God, Dr. Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow. No one is better fitted to write the story of Mr. Scott's busy and useful life, and the good Doctor has admirably discharged his task.



The book is much more than a mere biographical narrative; it is the well-constructed account of a remarkable chapter in the history of modern evangelism, and as such will have a profound interest even for those who did not personally know the subject of the memoir.

Among the many results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first visit to Glasgow was the formation of the United Evangelistic Association, which has been an unspeakable blessing not to Glasgow alone, but, we may truly say, to the ends of the earth; for it was in connection with it that Dr. Somerville was thrust forth into the foreign evangelistic field, visiting in turn Australia, the European Continent, South Africa, and recently the region of the Levant. It was as the active Secretary of this Association that Mr. James Scott accomplished the greater part of his life work. Dr. Bonar tells us here how he had been prepared for that important post by earnest and successful mission work in the same city. Through Mr. Moody's powerful advocacy, the well-known "Christian Institute," in Bothwell-street, was erected in 1874 at a cost of £30,000. Since then, besides being the headquarters of the Y.M.C.A., it has been the centre of all kinds of Christian and philanthropic work, and will, doubtless, continue to be so for many years to come. Here we may make a brief extract from the book:—

"When Mr. Moody, in 1874, had become acquainted with and observed his zeal and tact, it struck him that he had found in James Scott one who might do an important service to the revival movement. He suggested the consideration of the matter to the ministers and laymen engaged in the work, and found his suggestion approved of. Very soon, indeed, they were all of one mind as to having found a prudent, prayerful, and single-minded worker, who had special aptness for superintending and guiding the various meetings. It was remarkable how quickly Mr. Scott's capacity for organisation developed itself. Frank and lively, cheerful and happy, he exhibited rare skill and tact for the details of the work to which, from the moment of his appointment he entirely devoted himself."

Dr. Bonar gives in considerable detail the history of the Free Breakfast movement, the work among destitute children, the Mizpah Band, the evangelistic work at James Morison-street Hall, and many other developments of Christian effort, in all of which Mr. Scott was a leading worker. Failing health compelled him to seek relaxation and rest abroad. These journeys are described, and the influence they had on his subsequent work, before the Lord called his servant to Himself.

As one link in the chain of events, Dr. Bonar briefly relates the visit paid by himself and his daughter to Northfield, on the occasion of Mr. Moody's Convention in August, 1881. Our Special Commissioner, who has recently returned from America, bears testimony to the high esteem in which the Doctor is held by Christian workers on the other side. Many were the regrets expressed, by those who attended the late Northfield Convention, at the absence of the Scottish brother whose earnest and experimental talk had afforded them so much pleasure and profit at the previous gathering.

It was not given to James Scott to labour long in the harvest-field of this world, but he gathered many sheaves for the Master in the course of his brief day of toil. Dr. Bonar's narrative will not only serve to embalm the memory of him who has gone, but will, we cannot doubt, prompt to more consecrated and unremitting effort on the part of those who are still spared to engage in the service of God and of mankind.

MR. SPURGEON, referring in his "Personal Notes" in the current issue of Sword and Trowel to the fact of Mr. Manton Smith having sung at the Tabernacle, "Hallelujah for the Cross!" (The Christian Choir, Page 86), says:—"We wish all our friends would learn this noble, soul-stirring hymn, and make it the Christian's National Anthem. In these days of disloyalty to Christ, all who are true to him ought to take special pains to show their attachment and devotion to his cause."

A MEDICAL MISSION FOR SOUTH LONDON.—It is proposed to convert the Surrey Homœopathic Dispensary (72, St. George's-road, Southwark) into a medical mission, in connection with which the sick will be healed in a prayerful spirit, and the Gospel preached freely to the poor. If the necessary means can be raised, the upper part of the house will be fitted up for the reception of in-patients, where their temporal and spiritual necessities will be attended to. An earnest appeal is made for help in this effort.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

IPSWICH.

THE annual meeting of this association was held on Tuesday week. It was crowded, and a great success. The chairman, Mr. George Williams, of London, kindly gives 100 guineas towards the proposed new building. This Association has had prosperous times during the past year, many young men giving evidence of true conversion. The membership has steadily gone up from ninety in 1882 to 320 at present time.

NOTTINGHAM.

A band of young men in connection with the Y.M.C.A., worked earnestly during the recent goose fair, to disseminate the Gospel amongst the masses. The Open-air Mission, London, sent Mr. E. Bailey to help. The power of the Holy Ghost was felt to be present at each meeting, and many of the crowd were brought under the influence of the truth.

IRELAND.

The opening meeting of the Bray Association, reorganised last year, was held on Monday evening, October 5. Mr. John R. Fowler, President, entertained the members to tea, and addresses were given by Mr. R. McCann (Travelling Secretary), Rev. C. M. Irwin, Dr. Wise, and Captain Lefroy. A branch association has been organised at Midleton, co. Cork. At a meeting of members of the Clonmel Association an address on National Organisation was given by Mr. McCann, showing the benefits arising from such an organisation. The Male Voice Choir of the Dublin Association have been holding a series of meetings in the Y.M.C.A., Lower Abbey-street.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Cincinnati is, in American parlance, a "hard" city. The Sunday is known almost solely by the calendar; comparatively few remember it as the "Lord's-day." A great deal of the business, the theatres, "races," and other amusements are in full swing. Amid this surrounding iniquity and godlessness the Y.M.C.A. (under the care of Secretary Howser) stands for God and Christ, testifying with no uncertain sound. It has a well-attended Saturday-night Praise meeting, with sixty to ninety in attendance, and growing interest. An evangelistic Bible-class, an instructive and helpful "Worker's-class," Sunday-school Teachers' Preparation-class, lectures, concerts, &c.; I need hardly add the usual complement of Sunday-meetings, both in and out of doors. Last, but not least, a noon-day prayer-meeting, which stands fourth on the list of such meetings in the United States.

The brethren propose, and look forward to, a series of special Gospel meetings shortly. Brethren, pray for these.

James C. Oakshett, Pastor.
Fergus-street Church, Cin., Ohio, U.S.A.

PUNJAUB, INDIA.—A correspondent states that the zealous Baptist missionaries, labouring in Agra, did good service by preaching and selling books at the "Sitala Mela" or fair held there in July last.

THE MEN'S NIGHT SCHOOL at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, is now re-opened for the winter session. Free classes for reading, writing, arithmetic, mensuration, composition, English history, book-keeping, shorthand, geometry, freehand drawing, French and Scripture, are held every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, from 7.30 to 9.30.

BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—At the monthly meeting of the Glasgow Directors on Monday week, a cordial tribute was paid to the memory and eminent services of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, President of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and who had always shown a special interest in the work of the National Bible Society. The Board also adopted a letter of welcome to the Evangelical Alliance then meeting in Glasgow.

THE GOSPEL IN THE VILLAGES.—Mr. W. Catlin writes:—Three years ago I visited Radford, near Leamington, and laboured a few days with Mrs. Robinson, a resident who began a cottage meeting in her back parlour. We prayed God for a mission room, and without any begging the money came in. The Robinson family likewise, her poor neighbours, made such sacrifices as I have seldom seen. They have erected, in their own orchard, a very pretty iron room, holding 200, and last week I had the joy of conducting seven services of Praise. Should any evangelists be going that way they will be welcomed at Radford, where a wonderful work of grace is progressing.

THE DEMAND FOR MORAL MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.

A WOMAN'S APPEAL TO THE ELECTORS.

By JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

BY whom are we in future to be governed? Women are asking this question on the eve of the approaching elections, even more anxiously, I believe, than men; more anxiously, because they themselves are still denied the right and power of expressing by their votes their opinion of the candidates who are crowding forward, asking to be allowed to represent them in Parliament, and to have a share in making the laws by which they and their children, their households, and even their nurseries, are in future to be influenced for good or for evil. As a woman, I am deeply thankful that at last the question of private and personal character is coming to the front in the selection of our representatives. I hope the day is past in which it could be said or believed that it was possible for a man who was corrupt in his private life and character to be a useful, just, or beneficent ruler. Who can reckon up the miseries, the wrongs, the soul murders, and the destruction of young lives which have been going on for years past, owing in a great measure to the shameful state of our laws on questions bearing on morality, that shameful state being obstinately maintained year by year by men in Parliament whose very presence there is a block to all good and pure measures? The time has come for

PLAIN SPEAKING.

When women, who, like myself, having done what they could to save a few of the lost, have looked at such men in Parliament, and heard them arguing in favour of Contagious Diseases Acts, and against any proposed modicum of protection for little girls, they have felt sick with anger and sorrow, in their knowledge of facts of which they could not speak, because none would have believed or heeded their words. We have listened to cynical arguments in favour of the protection of male vice from men in that House of Commons, whose illegitimate children and cast-off paramours we have sheltered and nursed in their disease and poverty and desertion, and the victims of whose seductions we have laboured hard to restore to hope and a new life. Sometimes, after looking down from the ladies' gallery there, or vainly arguing with some hardened sinner in the lobby, we have returned to our almost hopeless work among their victims, and have been driven in a moment of darkness to ask, "Is there indeed a God in heaven?" I have seen a good mother, wild with grief, kneeling by the dead body of her young daughter in my own house, where my husband and I had received the dying outcast, and heard that mother shriek the name of the man, the gentleman, the "honourable member for ——," who had ruined her child. "If that man could but see her now!" she cried. "O God, keep me from thoughts of revenge and blood." How little do some good people understand our pitiful, desperate demand to be put just on a level with the poor agricultural labourers, and to be granted that little favour, the Parliamentary vote! They prate about women coveting power, and stepping out of their sphere, while what we are craving for, with aching hearts, is but to be able to protect ourselves and our children from male destroyers, not only from their deeds of shame, but from their evil influence in the Legislature. There is a French saying, that it is "women who make the morals of a country." That is not true, it cannot be true, so long as

MEN ALONE MAKE THE LAWS.

For the law is a mighty teacher of morality or immorality, justice or injustice. It is a matter of regret to thousands of women that they are unable, at this critical moment, to bring any direct influence to bear in the creation of the new Parliament; and all the more do they earnestly pray that the men electors—those among them at least who fear God and love justice—will take full advantage of the present wave of public feeling in favour of righteousness, which has been promoted, in God's providence, since the revelations of The Pall Mall Gazette. We do hope better things of a new Parliament, a people's Parliament, than we have ever realised in the past. What we have got of good in the past has been due to the efforts of a handful of true and just men, who have watched and battled for a measure of justice; but who could not even have obtained what they did but for the backing up of a strong public opinion outside, aroused at last by a pressing sense of danger and wrong. Whether or not the old party distinctions will be broken up, one thing seems certain—that the M.P.'s of the future must be truer representatives of the public conscience than those of the past have been; that they must comprehend better, and echo more clearly the voice of the people. Only in those men who have the courage to protest against iniquity on every side will the people ultimately trust. The eyes of the people are being opened, partially at least, to the moral corruption in the midst of which they have been living. Hitherto they have been conscious only, perhaps, of some one wrong pressing immediately on themselves or their own section of society, but not of the great mass of criminal vice around them which is now revealed; and there is now a cry arising in the people's heart for justice; more or less articulately it expresses the thought, "since God created us brothers, let us put an end to this trading in man by man, this conspiracy of greed and lust which is destroying the daughters of the people: let us have redress and justice." The leaders of the future, whether in or out of Parliament, if they wish to accomplish any real and fruitful work for the multitudes of our land—an enduring work, not a mere ephemeral structure built upon the ruins that strew our path—must rise above the ordinary notions of Parliamentary politics to the regal conception of justice; and those who profess the religion of Jesus must bring into public life and into the Legislature the stern, practical, social, real side of the Gospel. The religion of Christ must become again what it was when He was on earth.

TEST QUESTIONS AT ELECTIONS are useful things. They give electors some chance of obtaining in a compact and concrete, if not a very exhaustive form, the views generally of the candidate on the great moral questions now before the country, and, it may be said, before the world. It may be left to those who are more skilled than I am in the drawing up of such test questions to choose and formulate them. But I would suggest that each candidate should be asked questions in some such form as the following:—

(1) Will he vote for the total repeal of the C.D. Acts?

(2) Is he prepared to vote for a Parliamentary inquiry into the reason why the prosecution of Mrs. Jeffries was hushed up, and why Inspector Minahan was dismissed from the police force?

(3) Is he prepared to vote for, or to ask a question in Parliament on the subject of a Parliamentary inquiry as to the circumstances which have induced the prosecution by the Treasury of Mr. Stead, Mr. Booth, and their assistants, to whose labours the Criminal Law Amendment Act has been mainly due; while no prosecution has been undertaken by the Treasury against any single one of the real offenders, whose crimes these persons have done so much to expose?

Many others might be suggested. A true answer given to the first question would tend to unmask the false friends of democracy, the secret enemies of liberty, even though they should be professedly Radicals and men of the people. Such men are very ready with fine phrases; but just ask them one or two very plain, very precise questions upon certain facts, insignificant in appearance, but which have a special power of unveiling their inmost hearts. Ask them

WHAT DO THEY THINK OF THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS?

Then pay attention! Mark them well! Some will do their best to evade the question, or they will tell you they can't understand why you are so eager about a matter of secondary importance, a matter of hygiene, of mere public convenience, of order in the streets, of one of the many methods by which the suppression of vice may be at least partially attained, &c., &c. But be it well understood that at the root of this question, above all others which have come before us in our times, lies the great fundamental question of individual liberty. The partisan of arbitrary power, whether he calls himself a Radical or a Tory, displays by his favourable opinion of those Acts the contempt he entertains for the individual, so long as that individual is insignificant or stands alone. Full of vague ideas and grandiloquent phrases about acting on the "masses," why need he disturb himself about individuals who have no power or influence? These base C. D. Acts take direct effect on women only. Their advocates, by cynically displaying their contempt for women—because woman is a weak creature whose anger is not dangerous and whose cry is easily stifled—confess, without knowing it, their contempt for all individuality, for personal freedom itself. If men like this get the upper hand, it is not difficult to see to what a social condition we shall be slowly but fatally reduced. Police rule and police regulations will, even under a popular Government, be gradually substituted for law. Every form of violence which works its way by trampling on the rights of the individual has been found throughout history to proceed, of necessity, to set aside the law, in order to get rid of the obstacles which the law opposes to its designs and working. This is the reason why the shallow, the rough and ready, and the selfish and tyrannising politicians are alike eager to extend the discretionary

POWERS OF THE POLICE.

The triumph of the police over law brings, sooner or later, also the depravation of the magistracy—the guardians and interpreters of the law. We see the beginning of these tendencies very strongly already. How does the police appear—what has its action been in connection with some recent events? Take a single illustration:—

For many years English girls have been carried off to ruin or death in evil houses on the Continent. Some of us made an outcry, and the police investigated and denied the fact. Then the Committee of the House of Lords endorsed the truth of our assertions, and the fact that multitudes of such girls were so cheated and destroyed. But not in one single instance, during the time of office of Mr. Howard Vincent, had the police brought one of these girls back, nor have they or the Government instituted any proceedings against these abductors. They have now produced Eliza Armstrong, for whose pretended abduction some of the best and bravest friends of justice are now on their trial.

It is a matter for profound gratitude that the new Criminal Law Amendment Act gives no new or extended powers to the police, but that it throws responsibility rather on the citizens. This question of the police, and their unfitness to be entrusted with powers over women or any guardianship of public morality, is one of the vital questions of the present time. When electors ask the question of candidates for election, "Will you vote for the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts?" or "What is your opinion concerning the regulation of vice?"—let them remember that this question, insignificant as it may seem to some in appearance, is in reality of the very gravest import. The true meaning of the question is,

"HOW MUCH DO YOU CARE FOR THE RIGHTS OF THE WEAK?"

Christian electors have a right to employ the test employed by their Divine Master, and to declare to those who seek their confidence—"By your attitude towards the lowliest and most despised members of society will we judge of the sincerity of your professions towards ourselves. By your judgment of and action towards the most disinherited of human beings, the fallen woman, we will form our estimate of what is likely to be the character of your influence in Parliament."

THE CRUSADE.

The crusade so heroically undertaken by Mr. Stead and his fellow-workers was difficult enough; but let me press on your readers the consideration of what the difficulty would have been had the system of State regulation of vice existed in London. The doors which he found it so difficult and perilous to enter would have been doubly barred against him. He would have had to attack a fortress not only maintained by the gold and influence of highly-placed individuals (some of them, no doubt, members of the Legislature, and filling public offices), but by the Government itself. He would have had the whole dead weight of the State guardianship and State monopoly of prostitution to contend against. For under this terrible system (as a member of the French Senate, Mons. E. de Pressensé, says), "The State holds the key of this chamber of death—the State is the door-keeper to admit to it whom it will, and to exclude whom it will. In this officially guarded chamber of death the State sacrifices thousands of female victims doomed to perdition, treating them as vile matter which receives the official stamp at the custom-house of human merchandise." Mr. Stead has had to meet the cunning, the craft, the opposition, the hatred, the vengeance (shown in the present prosecution) of individuals, some of them influential, as is proved by their successful provocation of the Government to play the astounding part to which it has committed itself in this prosecution; but under the régime of regulation, he would have had from the first to fight the Government itself in every step he took; he would have been guilty of attacking a Government Institution. Few persons in England have any conception of the difficulties we meet with on the Continent in our battle against criminal vice. Such an uprising as that promoted by Mr. Stead's action, and such an onward movement towards reformation, is next to an impossibility in foreign countries where this system exists. It seems as if no real reform in this direction could be achieved on the Continent short of a political revolution. We have, happily, not had the accursed system long enough among us here to see all its abominable fruits in full development. We have seen them all in embryo, and growing apace, until the vote of April, 1883, paralysed its operation. It still remains, however, on the Statute Book, the law of the land for certain districts, and could in a moment be restored in all its activity. It must be got rid of by the new Parliament. A clean sweep must be made of all such abominable Continental importations.

We are on the eve of great events; we are already in the heat of a great moral conflict; and the battle will grow hotter yet—far hotter. We are only at the beginning of the era of prosecution and persecution for righteousness' sake. We may, and do, hope for a purer Parliament, if the electors will wake up to the tremendous issues now before this country, issues immeasurably greater than those depending on the triumph of this or that political party: but when we shall have secured a purer Parliament, the struggle for a purified nation and a saved people will only be at its beginning. Unless God, by the might of his Holy Spirit, works powerfully and widely in the hearts of our people—in our own hearts, each one of us—we shall not be saved as a people in the mighty shaking of the nations which is at hand. The diseases of our own hearts and of our social system, if but slightly healed, will break forth again; moral corruption will set in again like a flood-tide; the noble watchwords of to-day will become the rotten and wretched Shibboleths of to-morrow; we shall have "a name to live while we are dead." For my part, I have not an atom of faith in any reform, moral, social, or political, which has not at its root a real repentance before God, a ruthless banishing from the heart and life, by individuals, of all that is opposed to justice, purity, and holiness, and a quickening of every power of the soul by the breath of the Spirit of God. Christian politicians, lovers of our country, let us, while we work, also pray—unitedly pray—that God will arise and, taking our nation in hand, will chasten, train, and mould it for the carrying out of his own purposes in the future of the world.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

[Contributions to these Notes will be welcomed from any quarter; specially of evanglistic work in any of the churches.]

EVENWOOD, DURHAM.—Gospel meetings were lately held here, and several professed to decide for Christ.

REV. W. HASLAM is full of work in Canada, and proposes till Christmas to take a series of missions in the Province of Ontaria.

SALFORD.—The "Hephzibah Christian Mission" carried on here reports an increase during the last six weeks of forty souls, old and young.

MR. G. C. NEEDHAM.—The Daily Bee, of Lynn, Mass., reports Gospel services by this evangelist, "which for impressiveness have not been equalled" in the city. Professor Towner was in charge of the service of song. Mr. Moody was announced to speak at one of the meetings.

THREE BRIDGES.—A very successful fifteen days' mission has been carried on at the Worth Mission Hall by Mr. G. A. Weller. Many have been awakened, others have come out on the Lord's side, and it has been a time of great blessing and refreshing to all connected with the work.

REV. J. MOUNTAIN and Mrs. Mountain, according to latest reports, were conducting three weeks' Gospel services in Brisbane, Queensland; so far as the meetings had gone, there was no little apparent fruit. The evangelists were afterwards to visit Rockhampton and Maryborough.

OUR RAILWAY MEN.—The sending of monthly packets of Gospel literature amongst our Metropolitan Railway-men, is carried on by Christians interested in this work. Lately a mission-room has been opened on the Company's premises at Edgware-road. Miss Jackson, 21, Stanley-gardens, London, W., will gladly supply the names of men to any willing to help in this simple work for the Master. Each packet costs about 2½d.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.—During the summer months one of the Evangelisation Society's tents has been in full work in this district. Several villages have been reached, and the result gives great cause for gratitude to God. When harvest came on, and the people in villages were busy, the tent was moved to Gainsborough, on the opposite side of the Trent. For six weeks the evangelists laboured there with much success.

MARYLAND POINT, E.—Our venerable brother, Mr. John Stabb, writes:—On Sunday week I conducted the Harvest Thanksgiving Service at our mission room here. The attendance was large, and the occasion was most interesting and solemn. By the Gospel Temperance meetings held weekly 450 persons have joined the movement, and many have been converted. The men have formed a prayer-meeting, which is held weekly in that hall.

QUEEN'S-PARK HALL, HARROW-ROAD, W.—This hall was built by the Directors of the Artisans' Dwellings Company, for the use of the people residing on the estate. An earnest Christian residing in the neighbourhood secured the hall for use on the Lords-day, and the Lord has greatly blessed the effort. The Evangelisation Society have principally supplied the speakers for the Sunday evenings. On Sunday week Mr. Henry Varley preached to an immense audience.

SALVATION LIFE GUARDS.—Last week the "Salvation Life Guards" arrived in London, after their seven weeks' campaign in the Northern and Midland counties. They numbered about 170 men. They were joined at Leicester by about 200 "lasses," mostly from the Clapton Training Homes, and a number of men officers in charge of corps in the London division, all of whom accompanied them to London. The campaign appears to have been most successful in its results. A meeting was held in the Clapton Congress Hall to welcome them home. Mr. H. Booth said they had marched over 400 miles on foot, and had had as many as 163,000 people in the meetings. The people in the different places had received them with the utmost generosity, and had taken great interest in providing them with food.

CITY TEMPLE.—At a recent social gatherin Dr. Parker said he should be glad to see a numbe of young men brought together under some suc name as the Evangelistic Band, who should go ou and invite to that church persons in the City wh did not attend any place of worship.

MR. HENRY VARLEY preached at Southgate road Presbyterian Church on Sunday last. At th close of a solemn and thoughtful address, on th subject of the rich man and Lazarus, thirty-tw persons in the after meeting rose in confession o their faith in Christ. Very clearly did this servan of Christ show how the motives of terror in view o the wrath to come, and eternal glory in view of th world to come, are alike parts of the whole counse of God.

PLUMSTEAD.—A good work is carried o at the Cage-lane Mission Hall here, mainly throug the zeal of a Christian lady, who contributes to th cost largely out of her own limited means. A serie of special Gospel services are to be held during th first half of November, and prayer for a rich blessing on the effort is desired. We commend th general work of the mission in a most needy neighbourhood, to the sympathetic consideration of th Christian public.

SCARBOROUGH.—The last open-air servic for the season, conducted by Rev. R. Balgarni was held on Sunday week in the Foreshore-roa This is the thirtieth year of their continuanc During the past summer fourteen services hav been held, which have been largly attended. M Balgarnie has frequently received letters fro different parts of the country, thanking him fo spiritual benefits experienced at these service This year the collection made on behalf of the Se Bathing Infirmary amounted to £10 12s. 5d.

MRS. GUINNESS writes:—We have cheerin and delightful tidings from our son Harry in Australia. He has been labouring in Hobart, Launceston, Adelaide, and is now in Melbourne an Sydney. Everywhere the Lord has granted hi wide acceptance and much Gospel success, hundreds having been gathered in through his labour We hope to see him home in the course of ne year with his brother and sister. They come New Zealand and San Francisco, and, as Harr will be preaching by the way, may not reach till the end of next summer.

THE RIVERSIDE GOSPEL MISSION begu about two years ago, and, conducted by Mr. Tregal is carried on amidst the waterside population of th parish of Rotherhithe. The labourers living o the banks of the Thames form the poorest o London's inhabitants, and are the most difficult reach by the ordinary church service. A goodl number have professed to have found Christ. The now teach in the Sabbath-school connected with th mission, distribute tracts, &c. The Sabbath-scho numbers 200 scholars drawn from the homes of th very poor, and there is a Temperance Society.

GLOUCESTER.—Rev. F. D. Sandford, of Boston, America (whom God has greatly blessed i many cities), has kindly consented (D.V.) to conduct a mission for Scriptural Holiness in the Cor Exchange, from October 20 to November 1. M Sandford is associated with Dr. Charles Cullis, o Boston, America, in the well-known work of Go there, and in the Holiness Conventions of whic Dr. Cullis is President in the United States, an was one of the delegates at the recent internationa conferences in London, Brighton, Liverpool, Newcastle, Aberdeen, &c.

A NEW RAILWAY MISSION HALL.—A ne hall was opened at West Brompton, on the 8t inst., in connection with "The Railway Mission. It is situated in the Lillie-road, and will seat near 500. Dr. Churchill presided at the opening servic and addresses were given by Messrs. D. Spence H. E. Walton, Ned Wright, and W. Tharme. Th first-named, with Miss Eck and Miss Protheroe an a resident missionary, has the care of the work Gospel meetings are being held by Mr. W. Tharme of Liverpool. Ladies and gentlemen willing help are invited to write to Mr. D. Spencer, 18 Aldersgate-street, E.C.

HALIFAX.—Rev. Thomas Waugh has co cluded a fortnight of special mission services her which have resulted in great blessing. The turnin point in the mission was at the men's meeting o the Sunday afternoon. About 800 men gathere together to hear the mission preacher. Earnes faithful words were spoken, and many hearts we bowed before the Lord. The influence of the mi sion now became widespread. On Monday nigh when Mr. Waugh gave an account of his conve sion, scores were turned away from the doors. Th afternoon meetings for holiness were times o special blessing.—Methodist Times.

THE SPARROW'S BREAKFAST.

Your heavenly Father feedeth them."—Matt. vi. 26.

A LITTLE sparrow flew past the window, and alighting on the roof of an out-house, it egan pegging away at a small crust of bread hich happened to be there. I had often heard f God feeding the birds. I now watched to see ow He did it.

The little bird ate heartily. It was clear that s appetite was good, but his outward appear- nce betrayed no sign of acquaintance with unger. His face showed no trace of care or nxiety such as I had seen on the faces of men. e seemed to eat till he felt satisfied. Then he ew away to a tree.

I began to think. Now, if that little bird had ken a fancy for a lump of sugar to eat with s bread, possibly he would have to hop, and pend the remainder of the day in looking for , and go to his bed dissatisfied and dis- ppointed.

In the case of man, who is of "more value an many sparrows," he is not so easily satisfied, ence his continual discontentment and anxiety, d the endless toil necessary to satisfy a long ain of wants. Give him bread, and he will ant butter on it; give him butter on it, and e will then want sugar on the butter; give m the bread, with butter and sugar on it, and e will want cream to moisten the sugar. So ith his clothing, his house, his all. His ever- creasing number of wants make him their ave.

If thou art a child of God, have as few wants possible, that thou mayest have more time to evote to God's service on earth. "Better is a indful with quietness, than both the hands full ith travail and vexation of spirit" (Eccl. iv. 6.)

e golden glow of harvest-tide was shed cross the fields at dawn, where reapers sped out their busy task, nor dreamed of rest, ll waiting sheaves in shining store were prest:
e wealth of warm, sweet-scented summer air ngered amidst the tresses of a maiden fair, ho idly strayed throughout the sunlit hours, lanes and harvest-field, in search of flowers.

e day wore on; and still, in dreams and play,
e maiden whiled the happy hours away;
e reapers paused to watch the child, and ask,
Wilt thou not gladly share our harvest-task?
ther in golden sheaves, nor stay to rest, ll yonder blazing sun sleeps in the west?"
Nay," smiled the maiden, "surely sunny hours e only meant to spend in gathering flowers!"

e hours rolled by; and evening's cooler shade ept with its silent softness over field and glade; reaper paused beside the careless child ith grave, sad face, which never changed, nor smiled;
Suppose the Master came to-night this way, king account of hours now gone for aye;
oking to see the sheaves your hands have bound,
e work your fingers in his fields have found;
ow would you answer for the wasted hours hich you have dreamed away in gathering flowers?"

this rebuke, aroused, dismayed, the child, lled with a terror half-defined, and wild, rang to her feet, and quickly made her way here the great shining sheaves of harvest lay, aiting some willing hand. She toiled and wept,
d wept and toiled, while weary reapers slept, der the moonlit skies, nor dared to rest hile that strange terror filled her wakened breast.

t, oh! when once again the morning smiled fair sweet beauty on the weary child, w calm her soul! how full of rest her heart!
owing that in the Master's work she had a part, owing the recompense of work well-done—ough late—by her had been most surely won; owing, that come He when He would, her hours re better fruit than sheaves of withered flowers.

d would not have our brightest, sweetest hours, life and love, spent idly gathering flowers—has some service for each soul to do, its brief life-day, if it only knew!
d, when God's child, heaven-grown to man's estate, sses rejoicing through the golden gate, sweeter memories his life will yield an those of hours spent in God's harvest-field.

HOOKS AND EYES.*

SKY-ROCKET BALLS.

"Who will go to Polesloe-park and see the fireworks?" had been the cry amongst the young ones. At last it was decided that Eleanor and James should chaperone the other three, whilst all five should be escorted under Mr. and Mrs. Grant's wings with their own birdies, whilst our poor caged dove was to coo by the corner of the bedroom window under my cover. From this window we could see all the rockets ascend "miles and miles high," as Robby said afterwards.

"Whether it were miles or feet, we did not care to measure, but we gained a lesson out of the pretty balls, didn't we, Dovey?"

"Yes, aunty," said our "guardian angel," as one boy called her, and "tutelary saint," the other.

As I was holding her thin little hand in mine, and supporting her hot head against my shoulder that evening, she said:

"Aunty, aunty, look! there's a bang! now for the balls; look! gold—now red—now blue—now violet; now out, just as they have touched the tree-tops. Ah, aunty, ar'n't they lovely? they seem to grow out of each other!"

"Yes, darling, and that is why I like to look at them; they always remind me of the twelve manner of fruits in Rev. xxii., the second verse. The tree that yields fruit every month—one comes out of the other, as the beauteous balls break, and others come out of them. So the fruit of the tree of life; only with this fruit there is no exhaustion, no death, no withering. It remains; it goes on for ever—every month always fresh and beautiful. And is not this tree but the symbol of what spiritual life ought to be? One grace produces another; that first one does not fade, but another grows out of it."

"Aunty, shall I ever be like that?"

"Yes; I am sure you will, Dovey. I always expect to find new graces in my pets. If I find love this year, I expect joy added on next, as St. Paul says in Gal. v. 22; and then peace, &c. Or the 'faith' of St. Peter buds into virtue, and virtue blossoms in the end into charity or love."

"Oh, aunty, I am asking God to make me patient this year. Shall I bud into something else? Patience is white; what shall the rest be—blue?"

"Yes, darling, call it blue if you like; but God says, 'Patience worketh experience, and experience blossoms into hope, and hope blooms into love,' because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts" (Rom. v. 4, 5).

CHILDREN'S MISSION, FOREIGN BRANCH.

DEAR FRIEND,—We are greatly in want of help for the Foreign Branch of our Children's Mission, which is to supply missionaries all the world over with simple Gospel tracts for children. This important work is rapidly developing, but so very little money has come in for it the last few months, that we are becoming seriously perplexed.

Nearly a million and a half more of these tracts are now passing through the press, and they will cost about £1000. We shall soon have these beautifully-illustrated tracts in forty languages. Our Committee will indeed be thankful for help in this our time of need. An edition of 150,000 can be printed for £100, including cost of pictures, &c.

Dr. Bruce of the Bible Society, has written from Ispahan, most kindly offering to translate the tracts into Persian and Armenian; and Dr. Williamson, of the Tract and Book Society for China, who has just started for Shanghai, is about to translate them into Wun-li and Mandarin Chinese, and we should much like to be able to print 250,000 of each of these dialects, but that would cost £300 more.—Faithfully yours, Josiah Spiers.

THE GOSPEL FOR THE MASSES.

THE Committee of the Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission-rooms have agreed to resume the services at the following buildings:—Pavilion Theatre, Whitechapel-road; Town Hall, Shoreditch; Town Hall, Holborn; Town Hall, Bermondsey; Town Hall, Kensington; St. James's Hall, Regent-street; Temple of Varieties, Hammersmith; Croydon Theatre (supplied only with preachers); Good Duke Humphrey Hall, Greenwich; Alexandra Temperance Hall, Southwark-park-road; Park Hall, Camden Town; The Morley Hall, Hackney; Evangelical Hall, High-street, Homerton (supplied only with preachers); Queen's-park Hall, Harrow-road (grant made in aid of).

Associated as we have been with the late Earl of Shaftesbury in this effort to reach the people from the very commencement, we feel profoundly grateful not only that year by year the necessary resources have generally been provided, but also that at the present time all sections of the Christian Church are now recognising the wisdom of the principles on which the Committee have all along proceeded. The failure of mere church-building schemes to win the people for Christ is now generally confessed, and the various religious bodies acknowledge that the "old lines" of missionary effort must be departed from. Last winter the services in the fourteen buildings engaged by the Committee were attended in the most encouraging manner, and at the Pavilion Theatre, on Sunday evenings, 3000 to 4000 persons were often to be found listening to the words of everlasting life. The Committee regret to commence this new course of services with a deficit of £150.

Truly London belongs to the whole nation. It is a portion of our glory, and, in some respects, of our shame. The interest of all the other cities of the kingdom is purely local, but the welfare—social, commercial, and religious—of this great centre of civilisation, this "aggregate of various nations," as Addison called it, is imperial in character, and belongs to every Englishman. Can you kindly aid us in this effort to preach the Gospel to the poor?

MISS MITTENDORFF'S ORPHAN HOME.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly inform the readers of The Christian that Miss Mittendorff's Home for Deserted and Destitute Children is just now in great need? About seventy of the children were with us on a recent Sunday morning, when I called upon the congregation to "serve the Lord with gladness; come before his presence with singing." It must have been hard for them to do so with a comparatively empty larder. In a note after service, full of hope in God and confidence for the future, our sister writes: "As poor as we can possibly be, without meat and butter, and thankful for the daily bread only." It occurred to me that if some of the stewards of the Lord's gold and silver knew this the heart of our sister would soon be relieved, and made to triumph in the Lord. The Home is dear to many of us, who, beyond praying for it, and sympathising with its work and workers, are not able much to aid it.—Yours truly, Epsom. (Rev.) W. Summers.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Oct. 18, Luke xxi. 25—38; Oct. 19, xxii. 1—13; Oct. 20, xxii. 14—23; Oct. 21, xxii. 24—38; Oct. 22, xxii. 39—53; Oct. 23, xxii. 54—71; Oct. 24, xxiii. 1—12.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—On Friday last, a crowded meeting in aid of this Society was held in the Mansion House. Mr. J. Maden Holt presided, and addresses were given by Revs. Dr. Lewis Borrett White, J. Vaughan, and G. Plaford, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, and other friends. Mr. J. E Hazelton, secretary, read a statement of the operations of the Society, showing that 1109 pensioners are now on the books, and upwards of £7000 per annum expended in pensions alone; 180 of the pensioners have comfortable abodes in the four Homes of the Society. Fresh help is needed.

* Hooks and Eyes is the title of a new book which Miss Leakey, Exeter, wishes to publish shortly, if friends will send her orders at once.

Notes and Comments.

THOSE who wish to understand fully the bearings of the now famous "Armstrong case," so far as it has been made public, should read the verbatim report of the proceedings at Bow-street Police-court, published (with numerous illustrations) at the office of The Pall Mall Gazette, 2, Northumberland-street, Strand, price 6d. The letter on the same subject, by Mrs. Josephine Butler, which recently appeared in our columns, can be had from this office in neat leaflet form, 1s. 6d. per 100, post free.

We draw special attention to the rousing appeal to the electors, by Mrs. Josephine Butler, which appears in our present issue. The same demand for a purified Legislature was strenuously made by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes in a sermon on Sunday week:—

> "They had thought it possible in the past for an impure man to be quite fit for a public position. Henceforth, so far as in them lay, no man who sinned against the great law of God should either make their laws or administer them. They were not so foolish as to suppose that they could suppress private vice, or make men virtuous by Act of Parliament, but they could at least relegate the impure to private life."

Mr. Price Hughes, instead of taking a season of holiday rest, has been visiting some of the large northern towns with Mr. Stead, endeavouring by his fervid speech to educate these great constituencies on the subjects that are moving the nation.

Friends of missions may be glad to know that Major Tucker, who has for some years superintended the work of the Salvation Army in India, will give an account of his experiences this (Thursday) evening at eight o'clock, at Farnley House, No. 15, Chelsea Embankment, the residence of Mr. W. J. Armitage.

Amongst the coming local reforms none is more imperative than the removal of the power which the magistrates possess to grant licenses. Designed originally to restrain, the magistrates have licensed three times the number of the houses which are legitimately required. These houses stand almost as three to one compared with the grocer, butcher, or baker. This condition arises from the enormous influence which wealthy distillers and brewers bring to bear upon the Bench. No wonder that poverty and degradation abound, or that Lord Salisbury should use the following words at Newport on Wednesday week concerning this very subject. Speaking of Local Government, his Lordship said:—

> "I should be prepared to go a step further, and to place the power of licensing in the hands of local authorities to the extent to which the magistrates have it now. I see no reason for thinking that the local authority would exercise it less wisely and less liberally than the magistrates, and I cannot blind my eyes to the fact that special sectional and not always fair opinions sometimes gain ground on the Bench, and really disqualify the magistrates from exercising a perfectly satisfactory jurisdiction on the subject."

A Roman Catholic priest, who advertises weekly, describes his church, in one of the London suburbs, as the "centre of prayer for the faithful departed," and announces the fact that the Mass is offered there "once a week, and prayer said daily for the suffering souls in purgatory." The advertisement goes on to say, "Names are placed on the yearly list for one shilling, or on the permanent list for ten shillings." The existence of this "permanent list" may give rise to grave doubts as to the efficacy of the Masses, but the matter may be capable of explanation, for, to judge from some Romish publications and utterances, purgatorial time, like geological time, requires many figures for its expression, and does not mean very much after all.

The Pope, at any rate, is very liberal in his dealings with it, and quite recently he has, according to Cardinal Manning's Pastoral, "granted an indulgence of seven years and seven times forty days" for each attendance at the recital of the Rosary, and "each prayer for the intention of the Holy Father," and "to all who shall fulfil at least ten times these devotions a plenary indulgence of all the punishment attached to the sins they have committed." The Decree of the Sacred Congregation of Rites, which conveys the Pope's directions, is a singular document. "The Rosary" was, it states, "instituted by the special providence of God for the purpose chiefly of imploring the most powerful and ready aid of the Queen of Heaven," and it is added that the Virgin Mary "has alone destroyed all heresies throughout the world," and that she will, "if we show worthy fruits of penance, at length turn aside the avenging anger of Divine justice."

"Cruel cheapness" has its martyrs in other places than the East-end of London. The women and girls who are engaged in the staple industry of Glenties and other places in the north of Ireland, glove and stocking knitting, earn five farthings by eighteen hours' work! At a recent meeting on the subject of the low rate of remuneration, one of the speakers made a demand which seems modest enough even in these days of fierce competition. "We ask," said he, "that the knitters may be paid at the rate of twopence per pair. At this price an expert knitter will be able to earn the handsome wages of fourpence per day, and for this she can buy four or five pounds of Indian meal."

Surely in such matters ignorance must be bliss, for but few people would be able to wear the gloves with any feeling of comfort if they were aware of the fact that their cheapness was based upon the hungry and unrewarded toil of a starved woman. Such knowledge, one would think, would be almost too much even for some of our leading political economists.

At a quiet little Sussex village, almost under the shadow of the lovely Downs, a chapel was "opened and blessed" the other day in the house of a small brotherhood with the very high-sounding name of "The Exiled Præmonstratensians," a certain Brother Francis taking the vows at the same time.

The Duke of Norfolk, who already has erected seven or eight Roman Catholic churches in Sussex, has, it seems, expressed a wish to provide the few inhabitants of Storrington "with the means of acquiring a knowledge of the true faith," and has given a small property to the five monks who were expelled from France in 1882, and the nine others who have joined them since they came to Sussex. The movement is an interesting one from the fact that the object which the exiles have in view is stated to be "the conversion of England," and that the monks as yet have made slight progress in their study of the English language. It is recorded, however, that as yet, the Duke of Norfolk notwithstanding, "the help received from England has been but small," though in return for benefactions the monks offer "their devotions, works, and merits."

If statesmen just now abstain from any striking references to the Temperance question, electors can make up for the omission by following the keenly practical advice recently given by Rev. Charles Garrett, to "let party landmarks go, and vote for a sober country." A heavy drink bill and heavy taxation are simply cause and effect, and as it is impossible to reduce the drink bill without lessening vice, crime, and poverty, the elector who votes for a sober country, not only helps to bring about economical reform, but labours in the direction of removing barriers now in the way of the spread of Christ's kingdom.

Twenty years ago, one wild night, when the sea was dashing up the beach, and the wind roaring up the one street, we were in the Congregational chapel of a little fishing village in Devon. To our surprise candles were brought in, but it was only to illuminate the unadorned building. At first the place looked gloomy enough, but the preacher's lips had been touched with a coal of fire, and there was a light that was not of earth as he spoke the words of life eternal, words never to be forgotten by some.

Reading, as we did a few days ago, of the lighted candles upon the Communion-table of a gas-lit Congregational chapel in a large town of the Midlands, during a recent Sabbath-day harvest service, the memory of the sweet simplicity of the worship of a quarter of a century back seems like a dream; and we cannot but fear that in losing the simplicity we may have lost something of infinitely greater importance and value.

The following wise and timely words appears in Mr. Spurgeon's recent sermon on Hindrances to Faith, No. 1857:—

> "Some of you, I am afraid, do not give five minutes in the day to meditation. You are in too great a hurry for that. In London life men get up in a hurry, even as they went to bed in a hurry and slept in a hurry. They swallow their breakfast in a hurry—they have no time to digest it; the bell is ringing at the station, and they must hurry to catch the train; they reach business in a hurry, they hurry through it, and they hurry to get back from it. Men cannot think, for they have barely time to wink their eyes. As to an hour's meditation and reading the Scriptures, and communing with God, many professors nowadays would think they committed robbery against the god of this world if they took half an hour out of his service to give it to fellowship with the world to come. If our faith is to grow exceedingly, we must maintain constant intercourse with God. Another way of increasing faith is by much prayer. Pray for faith and pray with faith; thus shall thy soul become firm in its reliance on the promises."

A foreign missionary writes as follows in a recent letter:—

> "Passing cities and towns and villages with their teeming populations all uncared for, one cannot but feel moved to pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth more and more of His labourers—those who will not talk, or dream, or sing of self-denial, but who, without fuss or ado, will live self-denying lives. Surely in these last days we may expect an influx of such labourers. If we do not mind, sentimentality will eat the very heart out of our present-day Christianity, and we shall become jelly-fish, instead of men in Christ Jesus. If we saw things more from God's standpoint we should hardly feel so elated that seven men had determined to obey the Saviour in going to China, and four had determined to follow their Lord to Africa. If the numbers were multiplied by thousands, the needs would not be met—the Lord's expectations would yet be unfulfilled, and yet there might be room for a moderate amount of thankfulness."

The Spectator well remarked lately that ere is a setting forth of Christianity hich tries to make it inoffensive, but at the ost of making it meaningless. Darwin and yndall formerly, and the minds influenced y them, were no more in sympathy with e Broad School of Maurice than with the vangelicals. There is just now a preachg which is influenced by the notion that e dominant influence of the day is physical ience or literary criticism. When sermons ccommodate truth to this notion, congregaons woefully suffer, and there is not a single ass really benefited.

Nothing could be more useful to those ho adapt Divine revelations to the varying inds of modern opinion than to mingle for time among the leading scientists who are uly Christian believers. No men more love e very marrow of evangelical truth, or have reater dislike to the attempt to make the ospel inoffensive by glossing over its essenal announcements. How little did Christ ame his discourses to suit the temper of his ge; and, as Rutherford says, "They are not orthy of Jesus who will not take a blow for e Master's sake."

The Spectator has another testimony from late passenger respecting gambling on Atntic steamers. There is, he remarks, no ore dangerous place for young men than ese vessels. Professional gamblers cross every boat. Youths from school or college e entrapped, and robbed, to all intents, of rge sums. In the case specially referred , the Captain seemed powerless and the ssengers were annoyed. How long is this tolerable iniquity and scandal to continue?

An important paper has appeared in The uardian concerning Ireland. One who has avelled through its wildest parts says that e priests have almost entirely lost power districts where they were supreme thirty ars ago. But the people are throwing off religion to become political, and nothing, ys the writer, is less probable than the conrsion of Ireland to Protestantism. This s been the history of Romanism everyhere. The priests first disgust a people th their travesty of religion, then a tion rushes into wild schemes of political wlessness.

At a time when the country is recalling rd Shaftesbury's efforts for the deliverance women and girls from slavery in mines, it pleasant to read of an electric apparatus ich promises to light coal-pits in a way ich will be an enormous gain to miners, d which is soon to be used for lighting the w Moor Colliery. Science fulfils its true ission when it lessens the perils and suffergs of men.

It is a pleasure to record an act of Chrisn catholicity. The meetings of the Conegational Union were held last week in e Staffordshire Potteries. The rector of e parish of Stoke and other clergymen fered to receive the ministers into their mes. We are astonished to find that other spirit prevails in such a reputedly angelical place as Tunbridge Wells. From paragraph which appeared in The Nonconrmist and Independent it appears that at e formation for the town of a Social Purity gilance Committee the Nonconformists re left out. With Disestablishment probly looming in the near future, such tion seems to us not only unchristian but icidal. The former example, of respect for a godly, spiritual independence, serves the interests of religion all round; the latter is a wrong all round.

A Roman Catholic Bishop is reported to have recently said, "The Roman Church does not now persecute, because it has not the power. But when it regains the power to do so, persecution of heretics will be recommenced." At a meeting of the Irish National League a speaker remarked, "Every man who joins the League must have the brand of Parnell stamped on his forehead."

Both these utterances are significant of the state of men's minds. Nothing but the grace of God can change the heart and enlighten the mind. The Church of Christ needs to keep clear of the Apostate Church of Rome, deadly in its emnity and drunk with the blood of the saints. The mystery of lawlessness is busy at work also, undermining, by slow but sure degrees, the foundations of Society. Boycotting is largely on the increase in Ireland, and the suffering caused thereby to the law-abiding section of the community is increasing in proportion. "Can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

Some of our leading novel writers are doing much to spread false ideas of the character of God and the way of salvation. We have lately skimmed the pages of one that has been highly commended for its purity of tone and elevated sentiment.. The central figure in the book is a cultured atheist of the most pronounced type, who is represented as wielding his exceptional power as a writer and an orator in destroying all faith in Christianity amongst the working classes. His daughter is depicted as an ardent follower of her father, until thrown in the way of a clergyman of broad sympathies—a type of the modern, true Christian. Through his influence and teaching she becomes a Christian, and renounces the atheism of her childhood.

This is the type of Christian teaching that is described as being "pure in tone." The Son of God is spoken of as "The Great Social Reformer." God is described as "The All-Father, loving intensely all his creatures, and purposing to bring all into the fulness of light and knowledge sooner or later." When the atheist dies, the Christian daughter is comforted by this clergyman with the suggestion that the "All-Father" has, through death, purified the dead man's soul—has acknowledged the purity of his motives in seeking to free his countrymen from the tyranny of superstitious belief and from oppressive legislation. Though he has been a denier of Christ and of God, yet his advocacy of Reform has been inspired by the same purity of aim as the life of the "Great Social Reformer;" and now light has dawned upon him at the gate of death, and he has passed into the unclouded presence of a holy God! This blasphemy against God and his blessed Son is paraded as "the highest type of Christianity." Novel-reading is playing an important part in sapping the spiritual and moral well-being of the children in Christian homes.

Within the last few days two cases have come before the Courts. In one a young Irishman was charged with persuading a lady under twenty-one years of age, a ward in Chancery, and worth £5000, to elope with him from her father's house, in order to get married. He was remanded, bail being refused. In the other case a young man was sent to prison for six months for procuring marriage with a girl over sixteen years of age, by falsely representing both the girl and himself to be of age.

We have no desire to minimise the gravity of the offences charged against the defendants in these two cases. What we do wish is to point out that while the law very properly visits such offences, when proved, with heavy penalties, it provides no punishment for the man who deliberately deprives a girl of her innocence and her honour, if only she be sixteen years of age, though the results in this case may be far more terrible and lasting than in the others. It is a scandal and a disgrace that the law cares nought for the wrong a girl suffers who is entrapped into the sacrifice of her maiden purity, while it regards as a heinous offence that she should be beguiled into a marriage.

RENEWED DAY BY DAY.

THE brooklet to the river
  Its tribute still supplies,
The river to the ocean,
  The ocean to the skies;
By showers from heaven descending,
  And soft distilling dews,
Its fruitfulness and verdure
  The pining earth renews.

Thus rill, and stream, and river,
  Their wasted strength regain;
Old ocean's floods their fulness,
  The skies their stores of rain.
The mighty heart of Nature
  Sends circling through her frame,
The element that keeps it,
  Though changing still the same.

Even so, in ceaseless current,
  That heavenly water rolls,
Which gladdens and refreshes,
  And quickens faithful souls.
And lest, through human weakness,
  Their graces should decay,
The stream of grace unfailing,
  Renews them day by day.

rain should cease, the ocean
  Would leave an empty bed,
And dreary desolation
  Throughout the earth would spread.
And if his Holy Spirit
  God took from men away,
Their being would be blighted,
  Their ruin sealed for aye.

But He, in tender mercy,
  Still sends that Spirit forth,
To give them, by his washing,
  A new and heavenly birth.
And evermore imparting
  Of life, and light, and love,
To lead them on to glory
  And perfect bliss above.

ILLUMINATED TEXTS.—A lady who for some years past has interested herself in the gratuitous distribution of illuminated texts tor the visitors' bedrooms at hotels, asks us to mention that she will be much pleased to furnish outlines to any ladies who may be willing to assist her in painting the same. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. J. T., The Elms, Twickenham-park, S.W.

THE MEDITERRANEAN.—Mr. John Ellery comes from England to engage in special mission work in Italian and Sicilian ports among British seamen, in connection with the Sailors' Rest Society. Please ask earnest prayer for this brother's mission, and the work among sailors at Naples, Palermo, and Messina. The effects of cholera at Palermo will be known to your readers, and in the distribution of relief some of the people connected with the evangelical churches may be overlooked. A worthy Englishman, Mr. Ambrose Brown, is indefatigable in aiding the poor smitten ones. Mr. Wm. Folkes, of Messrs. Shilton & Co., Naples, is receiving subscriptions for Palermo, transmitted to his friend there.

DUBLIN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.

DR. DUNCAN presided this morning. After an earnest devotional service,

Rev. Dr. Bevan (London) delivered an address on "The Unceasing Miracles of Spiritual Life." The central thought of the address was that great as were the physical miracles wrought by our Lord, the marvels of Divine grace in the conversion of sinners are quite as wonderful, and may be classed among "the greater works" which our Lord promised in connection with his ascension and the gift of the Holy Spirit. In this sense, the miracles of spiritual life are unceasing. The conversion of Afrikaner, the wild freebooter, on whose head a price was placed, and who was brought by Robert Moffat before the Governor, meek and gentle as a lamb, was given as a telling illustration among several others. To tame the lion, said the speaker, is nothing compared to the task of taming the savage man; but Christ can do it, is doing it continually, and the ceaseless miracle of the Spirit's power is repeated in the ever-succeeding ages of the Church's story.

Rev. E. A. Stuart spoke upon "Unity of Plan in the Word of God." In the Old Testament, he said, we have, so to speak, the roots of the tree, and in the New Testament, the trunk and the branches, and in the last book of all, Revelation, we have the fruit.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, Jun., gave a powerful address on "Saved to Save," in the course of which he told a touching little story of the days of his boyhood, when he was made useful to a young companion only nine years of age, who was out with him for a holiday.—Some years ago, when busy in commercial life, I got into a very low state, physically. The devil likes to find a man in that condition; he is an awful coward, and when he finds a man down, he likes to trample on him. He sent a number of hideous, awful, blasphemous thoughts into my mind, and I was always in darkness and sorrow. There was the Cross, but it seemed hewn of rock, and when I tried to cling to it, my hands seemed to slip off. For seventeen days I was in a dreadful valley, with Apollyon meeting me with those hobgoblins of which Bunyan speaks, buzzing about me. Thank God, I have had a holy mother, who used to make me learn three or four verses of a hymn, and there was not one I had learnt that did not come into my mind as I walked in gloom across a bleak common. Then temptation seemed too strong for me. I sang my hymns, but I had to fight every inch of the way. I was passing through great trouble, but thanks be to God, He saved me! In the middle of the night I opened my Bible, and asked God to deliver me; unbelief went, darkness vanished, and I slept like a little child, when before this I had not known what it was to have five minutes' continuous slumber.

In the afternoon there was a very earnest meeting indeed on "Consecration." It is scarcely possible to convey an idea of the earnest spirit pervading the meeting, and which only, in part, found expression in the addresses of Colonel Noble, who presided, Canon Wynne, Rev. A. Rentaul, Rev. J. Ervine, and Rev. R. S. Lee. At the close of the afternoon meeting, the following important resolution was passed, on the motion of Rev. Mr. Prenter, seconded by Rev. Dr. Wright: "That this Convention, consisting of members of different sections of the Church of Christ from all parts of Ireland, recognising in the present unsettled state of the country, a loud call to us, acknowledging our past sins and negligences, to unite in instant and earnest prayer that God would graciously preserve to us the inestimable blessings of civil and religious liberty, fill the hearts of the people everywhere with his fear, draw them to Christ and to one another in Him, and extend throughout our entire population the beneficent reign of truth, righteousness, and brotherly love."

The evening meeting was again a very large one, and it became necessary to have an overflow meeting in the Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Fraser spoke upon "Thirst for God," remarking upon the fact that those who have been roused from their apathy and brought to a closer acquaintance with God through his Son, thirst for more knowledge of Him and more connection with Him.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun., followed with remarks upon "Christ in Relation to Believers and Unbelievers." One of many earnest thoughts which he expressed was: Take away the sun from the material world, and God's order ceases—disorder, derangement, and chaos ensue. Take away Christ from the Church, take away Christ from the ministry, take away Christ from the soul, and then must come disorder, destruction, disunion, and death. Mr. Rainsford also addressed a large after-meeting.

THURSDAY.

Mr. G. Chambers, J.P., presided, remarking that as this was the last day of the Convention, it should also be indeed the great day of the feast. Amidst all the troubles of Ireland we should remember that the kingdom of Christ ruleth over all.

Rev. F. Ellis spoke upon the "I musts" of Christ. He showed, among other things, that while Christ is great in his kingliness, and in the thousand acts of tender ministry to the needy, what made his greatness complete was the "I must" which was heard in his boyhood, in his temptation, in his agony, and on the cross.

Dr. Bevan followed with an address upon "The Church's Victory through the Blood of the Lamb," in which he enforced the truth that just in proportion to the prominence and distinctness of the doctrine of the Atonement by the blood of the Lamb was the victory of the Church.

Rev. Dr. Fraser spoke upon Spiritual Growth. Spiritual childhood with its caprice and changefulness was put away as man advanced, and he no longer followed the various new fads and fashions and extravagances which came forth in crops year after year, and which big babies run after with great avidity. We must grow by the sustenance and stimulus which the Word of Grace and the Spirit of Grace are alone able to afford.

In the afternoon there was a meeting for women only, on the questions of social purity and of our girls abroad. Miss Ellice Hopkins and Miss Leigh, of Paris, were the speakers.

THE CLOSING MEETING

was an overflowing one, and numbers failed to gain admission. After a very earnest devotional meeting, Pastor Spurgeon spoke upon "Be Men." Yesterday, he said, I went through your college, and on my way to the library I passed by the busts of celebrated men. The old fashion of the Romans was to have monuments of their heroes, so that the children of their families might be stirred up to emulate their example. I have lately seen a little child treading on the seashore in footsteps bigger than his own, which had been left by one who had gone before. Now that is what we have to do with Him who has gone before us, leaving us an example that we should tread in his steps. To be men in the sense in which the Apostle speaks is to be Christlike, for until we are like our Master we shall never be real men. How are we to become more and more like Christ? Only by keeping near the Cross, for it is there that transformation takes place.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun., delivered an evangelistic address, remarking that it had been a great privilege to attend the series of meetings which to-night were brought to a close. A time of privilege, however, is always a time of responsibility, and if the Convention had not been a blessing to our souls, then it had been a curse. If it has not strengthened our souls it has weakened them, for the great truths which have been proclaimed from day to day have either been the savour of life unto life or of death unto death. There are three mysteries about the love of God: the first is why God loves us at all, the second is how much He loves us, and the third is the agents whom God employs for making known his love. He did not write it across the sky, He did not send angels to proclaim it, but left it to men to tell their fellow-men of his love.

The Convention was closed by Rev. J. S. Fletcher offering prayer. There was an after-meeting, at the close of which a large number remained, and these were addressed by Rev. Mr. Grubb.

YOUNG WOMEN IN IRELAND.

INTERESTING CONFERENCE IN DUBLIN.

ON the day following the close of the Dublin Convention a very valuable Conference was held in Sackville Hall, Upper Sackville-street, in connection with the Y.W.C. Association which is rapidly multiplying its branches throughout Ireland. Young women are becoming more and more sensible of the great good to be derived from connection with it.

At the morning gathering Mrs. Noble gave a pleasing account of a tour she had recently made in the north and south of Ireland, by way of encouraging the members in various centres. It was cheering to learn that in the North she had found 150 new members added to that division of the Association. Mrs. Noble made it clear, that while the Association is helpful to young women in situations in a variety of ways, the main object is to lead all to personal faith in Christ.

At the afternoon meeting reports were presented from secretaries and friends connected with branches in various parts of Ireland. Mrs. Walker, from London, also showed what was being done in our own great city. Colonel Noble stated that the work had extended to Barbadoes, Singapore, and other far away places. A touching letter of condolence with the family of the late Earl of Shaftesbury was sent to Lady Evelyn Ashley, expressing the deep sorrow with which the members had received the news of his decease. Among those taking part in the proceedings of the afternoon were Miss Hopkins, Mrs. Abel Smith, Miss Marrable, Miss Chatteris, Mrs. Tottenham. Miss Leigh, of Paris, who was present, spoke earnestly of the necessity of guarding young girls from the evils which surrounded them in houses of business, and in life in cities generally.

The evening meeting was numerously attended, and among the speakers were Mr. Lefroy, Q.C., Miss Reynolds, Mrs. Wallace, Rev. Mr. Bird, and Rev. Marcus Rainsford, Jun. The meeting from first to last was a happy one, and it was evident, from the bright faces of the young women present, that they had heartily enjoyed the evening.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR a rich blessing on the coming Conference on Holiness at Weston-super-Mare.——That much blessing may rest on a mission to be held in Pewsey Barn, conducted by Mr. Oscar Owers.——A minister requests prayer that he may be mightily used of God.——For blessing on a tea-meeting at Edgware-road for engine-drivers and firemen, on 23rd inst.——For Gospel meetings at West Auckland.——That God will pour out his converting grace upon the past and present members of a Bible class.——For special services at the Eccles and Patricroft Railway Mission, near Manchester, by Mr. H. Eliot Walton, also for a weekly midday meeting some railway-men are trying to start at the goods station of the L. and N. W. Railway, Liverpool-road, Manchester.——A Christian worker who has been much blessed in his work in the past, and who is now passing through a time of trouble, anxiety, and depression, asks for prayer that he may be guided aright and strengthened in faith.

PERU.—No Protestant missionary society has as yet attempted to form a station in Peru. But there is a missionary at work there, a Mrs. Peterson, an illiterate washerwoman and a Swede. She reads the Bible to the women with whom she comes in contact. Recently, when a missionary was at Callao, where Mrs. Peterson lives, she went round and invited a number of persons to come to her house, and when the missionary arrived he found fifty assembled, all of whom showed great pleasure in hearing him, and a strong desire was expressed to have such gatherings frequently repeated.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

CONFERENCE IN GLASGOW.

AFTER a long interval the Annual Convention of this Alliance was again held in Glasgow last week. A proof of the prevalence of Christian union and love, and of the desire to manifest this spirit among evangelical brethren, appeared in the numerous gathering which, on Tuesday evening, left little space in the Queen's Rooms, where a conversazione was held in a hall capable of accommodating an audience of 1200 persons. Ministers and laymen, besides a very considerable sprinkling of ladies, assembled for friendly intercourse. They belonged not to one or two Churches only, but were fully representative of all the different Christian communities in the city. The Lord Provost of Glasgow presided at the public meeting which followed, and accentuated the earnestness of the welcome which, on behalf of the local committee, was given by the conveners — Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang, Rev. Principal Douglas, and Rev. Dr. W. Boyd. The greeting, given with so much fulness of heart, was duly acknowledged by Lord Polwarth (the President of the Alliance), the Marquis of Ailsa, and Sir W. McArthur, K.C.M.G., M.P. Then an address on "The Evangelical Alliance—its work in promoting Christian union and the defence of the persecuted" was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Rigg.

Preparatory to the opening of the Conference proper, on Wednesday, there was held, in Claremont Church, a united communion service, conducted by Revs. Dr. Andrew Bonar, Dr. Elder Cumming, and Scott Matheson. A more than usually solemn feeling prevailed on account of the death of the Rev. Dr. Logan Aikman, whose name had appeared in earlier editions of the programme as one of the conductors of this service. At eleven o'clock the Conference proceedings commenced, with Lord Polwarth in the chair. The annual address was given by Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson, who spoke, with his customary ability, upon "Unity by the way of the Cross." The Practical Resolutions of the Evangelical Alliance, which, by a constitutional law, are submitted at each annual assembly of the British branch, were read and enforced by Rev. Dr. John Stoughton.

A short abstract of the annual report was presented by the Secretary (Mr. A. J. Arnold), who stated that about 800 new members had been enrolled during the past year, in addition to those received by the Irish and other local branches. [This is the largest number ever registered in a single year.] The secretaries (General Field and Mr. A. J. Arnold) had paid deputation visits to fifty or sixty places, not counting the nearer suburbs of London: and in Scotland alone nearly 300 new members, including 70 ministers, had been received at drawing-room meetings. The Week of Prayer had been increasingly appreciated both at home and abroad, especially in the foreign mission field. A branch of the Alliance had been formed at Shanghai, and this new bond of union was calculated to lead to more hearty co-operation, in the cause of Christ, among missionaries and others. The activity of the New York branch had been marked by its successful opposition to an Act, introduced into the Senate, professedly to secure to inmates of institutions for the care of the poor freedom of worship, but which was a disguised attempt on the part of Roman Catholics to obtain an unfair advantage for proselytising purposes. In Italy, the Roman Committee were endeavouring to form the various branches into an Italian Evangelical Alliance; and the Milan Association had initiated a movement for a weekly united prayer meeting of the ministers and members of the Waldensian, Wesleyan Methodist, Baptist, and Free Churches. The Council had also been watching with profound interest the proposal for the union of the Waldensian and the Free Churches of Italy. With regard to religious liberty, the report referred to the vexatious restriction and actual persecutions suffered by Christian brethren in Austria and Hungary, and also mentioned, as a gratifying sign of the times, that the question of freedom of conscience had been discussed in the Hungarian Parliament. Fresh cases of intolerance had been reported from Neustadt. As to Turkey, the case was cited of a Moslem professor and fifteen of his pupils, who, having been led to embrace Christianity (and that without the intervention of any missionary), started from Constantinople with the intention of seeking in a Christian land religious liberty, which they could not ensure in their own country. Outside the city they were arrested, imprisoned, and then drafted illegally into the army, all trace of them having since been lost. The Turkish Committee had also brought under the notice of the Council of the Alliance the case of the Nusarieh tribe in Syria. The Governor of Damascus had openly declared that he would not allow any person to profess any other religion than that of their fathers, and he had forcibly registered the whole of the 200,000 Nusariehs as Moslems! The Committee at Constantinople urged the Alliance to take prompt and energetic action in regard to both these cases.

After the reading of the report, a resolution, relating to the action of the Council, in regard to the religious persecution in Turkey, was moved by Mr. Donald Matheson (treasurer of the Alliance) and adopted by the Conference.

Great was the disappointment when it was announced by the chairman, at the Wednesday morning sitting, that Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, who had been expected to deliver an address, was detained by the pressure of his numerous engagements. His place was occupied by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, of Sunderland, who read a paper which gave much satisfaction to those who listened. The subject dealt with so efficiently was "Present-day Worldliness among Professing Christians."

The "Non-Church-going Problem" invited a solution from the Conference. Rev. James Paton (Glasgow) accepted the challenge. Very many, if not most, of the non-churchgoers, he said (found in all social grades) live and die at our very doors, as if Christ had never lived on earth. Indicating the lines on which he believed the problem might be solved, the writer of the paper recommended that Christian men should be slow to adopt any method of evangelistic work which, from the very nature of the case, created a disrelish for the ordinary services of the Church. The problem, however, never could be solved by the personal efforts of any mere official class alone, such as ministers, missionaries, or Bible-readers, but by the united services, and the organised personal influence, of all warm-hearted Christian men and women on every non-churchgoer they could reach.

No member of the Alliance is entitled to be heard with more respect than Rev. Principal Cairns, of Edinburgh, who has not only for many years watched, with real interest, the advancement of Christian union throughout Europe, but is conversant with the religious history of these nations. He gave an historical survey of the religion of the Scandinavian regions which he has visited from time to time with immense advantage to evangelical Christians in other parts of the world, as indicated by the valuable information he gave. It was very gratifying to hear that Rationalism has little or no place now in the different branches of the Scandinavian Church, thanks in some measure to the writings of Bishop Martensen, and to the more eccentric and impetuous Grundtvig, one of the greatest preachers and hymn-writers Scandinavia had ever produced. As to the presence of earnest Christian life in ministers and people, Dr. Cairns approached this question with great caution, ending the inquiry with a compromise, viz., that the number is all too few in other Churches besides the Scandinavian who are watching for souls as those that must give account, and that, if a choice is to be made, it is better to have the balance of zeal on the part of the young, and of worldliness and officialism on the part of the old who are passing away. Many signs had, however, convinced Dr. Cairns that there must have been a very considerable revival of religion within the Scandinavian Church in recent years.

The Conference ended, as it began, with an overflow meeting, a proof of the sustained interest which has gratified all who sincerely desire the manifestation of Christian union amongst all true believers. If one thing has been more emphasised than another throughout the proceedings, it is the wisdom, in a high degree, of having a society with a basis round which all evangelical Christians may rally who go in for the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. It was this grand truth, said the Chairman of the closing meeting, on Thursday night, that, by its Basis, the Alliance was a witness to. Sir W. Muir referred to one cure for divisions, as prescribed by the Bishop of St. Andrews, viz., a junction between Episcopacy and Presbyterianism; but the meeting, by its unmistakable applause, pronounced strongly for the Alliance, when the Chairman said: "Join the Evangelical Alliance to show that there is something above and beyond Presbyterianism, and something in which we can show unity of spirit, though we may be called by different names." That very unity of spirit was demonstrated in a marked manner, at every sitting of this Conference.

The concluding meeting was distinguished by another significant feature—viz., by the reiteration of a series of remarkable statements, made at the introductory gathering, and now confirmed without the faintest whisper of an attempt to challenge them at any stage. Not the least noteworthy of these asseverations was that, after coming back to Scotland, the Rev. Dr. Boyd (who spoke at the first, and Sir W. Muir at the last, meeting) found, to their joy, that the bitterness and troubles, formerly so rife, had disappeared; and there was now prevalent the spirit of love and charity, more (said Sir William) than he had seen in any country in the world.

In one particular respect the functions of the Alliance are sometimes misunderstood: it is a union of evangelical Christians, not an evangelistic agency; but it extends its sympathy to Christian ministers and laymen who are employing various means, in many lands, to reach, to awaken the careless, and to bring them to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. It was, therefore, in perfect harmony with the design of the Alliance to give place to earnest workers at this Conference, as at its predecessors, and to listen with lively sympathy to such accounts of evangelistic toil as the Rev. W. Gibson, of Paris, gave on Thursday, at the public breakfast which prefaced that day's deliberations.

Mr. Gibson went to the French capital in 1862, and the interesting story of his mission dated from that year. He made particular reference to the period of the Franco-German war, and in the recital of his own labours he did not forget the honourable service rendered to the cause of Christ by eminent workers like Mr. McAll and Mdlle. de Broen. Since religious liberty in France had been perfected, a wider opening than ever has been presented for Christian effort, and Mr. Gibson's exhortation will probably be heeded, in more than one quarter, that evangelistic agents should press forward, and avail themselves of the grand opportunity.

The devotion to Protestant Christianity was also proved at this Scottish Convention. The Secretary of the Irish Branch mentioned the encouraging fact that out of a population of 5,000,000, at least 1,250,000 were thoroughly loyal to the Protestant religion. The same spirit animates members of the Alliance on the further side of the Atlantic, as indicated by Rev. Dr. Draper, who spoke of the hard fight the Alliance had in New York against Romanism. The interlacing of different countries, in regard to Christian sympathy and enterprise, appears to concern Glasgow more largely than one would at first imagine; for in that city, as well as in other parts of Caledonia, may be found German-speaking people. Pastor Wagner, from the Fatherland pointed out that there are already fifteen German congregations in Scotland, and an endeavour is being made to form another. With these, and other Evangelical Christians in Germany itself, the Alliance has sympathised from time to time; and in their behalf Pastor Wagner thanked the Alliance. The statement of these facts will doubtless tend to intensify the love of Christian brethren in Scotland towards the German residents and congregations, on the one hand, and, on the other, stimulate their prayers for the success of evangelistic labour in every part of the world.

The discussions on Thursday ranged over so wide a field that pressure on our space permits only a very rapid survey of some of the topics. At the morning Conference, over which Mr. Donald Matheson, Treasurer of the Alliance, presided, there was a numerous audience listening to a profitable address from Rev. Canon Taylor, of Liverpool, on "The Authority and Sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures." As to the sufficiency, said the rev. gentleman, with a burst of eloquence, they were a thousand times more than sufficient; and, he added, "A single text of that Book is sufficient for salvation." Then there was a powerful address from the Rev. Talbot Greaves, on "The Power of Christ's Resurrection," who remarked that, "the seal upon the stone and the watch were all over," ruled by the providence of God to the more glorious manifestation of his power.

No Conference of the Evangelical Alliance would be complete without the consideration of Sabbath-day Observance, and, in introducing the topic, the Chairman of the afternoon session (Admiral Sir W. King Hall, K.C.B.) took occasion of the opportunity to congratulate Glasgow on the noble stand the workmen of the city took, at the Trades Congress, in regard to the question. It has been generally understood that in no country is the Sabbath more rigidly observed than in Scotland; and, therefore, what the Rev. A. Campbell said seemed to surprise his English brethren. In no section of Christendom, he asserted, was the keeping of the Sabbath being more rapidly disregarded than in Scotland, notwithstanding shortened hours of labour, and a half-holiday once a week.

Nor are social subjects excluded from the deliberations of the Alliance; and, intimately associated with these questions, is "Temperance," upon which Professor McKendrick gave his views in an exhaustive paper, written from the view of a physiologist and physician, and contending that the total abstainer was in the real position to deal with the problem, and that a reform which would put a stop to alcoholic drinking would be far more reaching and more beneficent than had ever entered the dreams of any statesman.

"The Godly up-bringing of the Young" was the subject of a paper by Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes, and this we reserve, in full, for our readers next week.

There was a considerable amount of natural curiosity excited by the appearance on the programme of "Faith Healing, or the Power of Prayer," and, as the readers of The Christian may be disposed to make a similar inquiry, we give the points of Rev. Newman Hall's paper on the subject. In the course of his address, he said there were a multitude of people, devout Christians, and in other respects of ordinary common sense, who did believe, and said they were sure that a multitude of cases had occurred recently of persons who had been cured by the power of belief in prayer, whose cure could not be attributed to ordinary means. Of course, a good deal of deduction must be made, as some people's disease was imaginary, and by imagination they could be cured, while some were very much affected, either for good or evil, by sudden emotions. Some people might be influenced by thought, and so they could be cured by thought, a sort of animal magnetism. But making all such deductions, there remained a large number of cases which, at any rate, formed a primâ facie case deserving investigation, and he thought science, which had to do with facts, should think it worth while carefully to investigate these facts, instead of unscientifically deriding them.

Having instanced several of the Old and New Testament miraculous cures, Mr. Hall said that if we believed that God may supernaturally cure souls, were we to disbelieve in the possibility that God may supernaturally cure the body? In fact all of us prayed such prayers, for when we were ill, or our friends were ill, we prayed God to restore them and us. There was a natural tendency in the body to heal, and medical aid was only effective in removing any impediment. That tendency to heal was God working in the body, and even the doctor's skill was given by God. We should not expect unwisely from prayer, because we might be discouraged altogether if the expected result did not take place. But if we did not get everything we asked for, we were refused in order that we might get something more for our good.

Congratulations were exchanged as the hour drew near for the Conference to dissolve, and its last act was, perhaps, the best of all its good deeds done during the whole three days—an ascription of praise, as well as a prayer to God—praise to the Great Head of the Church, to whom "the Council humbly and confidently look for a rich and full blessing to follow the earnest addresses given at the meetings"; and prayer that the hearts of all who love the Lord Jesus Christ will have been revived and strengthened in the desire and effort to increase union and brotherly love to the glory of his Name.

NOTES FROM THE AUSTRALIAN BUSH.

By D. M. LOGAN.

SIR,—Before me lies a copy of The Christian, dated June 18. On the cover is an illustrated plea for help for a day in the country for poor little children of "Ragged London in the Centre," on Wednesday, July 8. I only wish a batch of them could, at the present time, be transported to the hills around my run. They would think they had reached heaven, for the air is laden with perfume from acres and acres of lovely flowering bushes, heaths, and wild flowers. Ground berries and five corners, the latter growing on bushes rather larger than gooseberry-bushes, are just ripening, and would be a treat to them; the charming atmosphere of our winter season would bring the bloom to their cheeks and send them home fresh and happy.

It may be interesting to friends who are busy at home in furthering the cause of social purity to know that on the evening of that 8th of July I gave the first address in this district on that subject. It was delivered to a meeting of men only, gathered together by the Presbyterian minister of Forbes, a township about thirty miles from this place. Rev. Mr. Aspinall has lived there for about twelve years, and during that time has done much good work. Taking special interest in the young men of that town, he established a society for them, started Blue Ribbon meetings, and had announced this meeting, when I had the unexpected pleasure of being on the spot and addressing a fine gathering on this important subject. Recollections of notes and addresses read in The Christian were of great service to me, thus suddenly called upon whilst travelling.

Probably, Rev. H. J. Gamble little thought whilst preaching his sermon on "Faith Healing," on June 14, at Upper Clapton, that on August 14, someone in the far away Australian bush would thank God for the definiteness and the undoubted Biblical clearness of his remarks on this difficult subject. I am glad it is so fully reported and so largely spread abroad by The Christian. Well do I remember, on one occasion, my wife (who had long been an invalid, owing to the severity of the English climate after many years' residence abroad) being told by a godly and aged gentleman that sickness came as a chastisement for sin. He evidently hinted also, that no one who was strong in faith would be made ill. Not long after that he was suddenly laid prostrate and suffered excruciating agony from an internal complaint. He was obliged to call in a medical man who despaired of his life. However, he recovered. I fancy that sickness was sent him by God to teach him a good lesson. Mr. Gamble states that, "Everything in life is disciplinary, poverty, anxiety, and so forth." How true this is! Many a time have I been like to rebel against constant trouble and worry and loss from the wild dogs among the sheep; but, thank God, I have learnt this is for my good. I thought my faith was strong when I could still trust God after sudden danger and heavy loss were sent once and again, but I have had to find out that it is the "holding fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end" that is the true proof of our faith. Many a passage and promise from God's word has sustained me under trial. Some of Spurgeon's sermons are rich with true comfort under such circumstances, and I feel confident that he never could have penned them unless he had known, from personal experience, much of that sorrow and trouble which he so ably and feelingly describes.

In The Christian before me I see a quotation from one of Mr. Spurgeon's recent sermons in which he fearlessly denounces the prevailing wickedness of Great Britain. Were he out here, he would have a large scope for similar rebukes. Infidelity, scepticism and atheism abound. A few mornings ago I started on horseback by moonlight, and, after an hour's ride through the hills, came to a hut where a godly old Wesleyan was just hauling on his togs, while his billy was a-boiling on the open fireplace. We exchanged greetings. He was mourning over the declension of some of the colonial Church leaders. It is a sad fact that several of these have gone off to "anythingarianism," greatly to the injury of the Church of Christ.

About twenty miles from this is a small and scattered hamlet named Trelawarren, which some weeks back was the scene of revival work. The advent of a fresh Wesleyan minister roused the sympathies of some of the "old uns as were conwarted many year ago i' Sumersetsheer an' Cornwall," and they gathered for prayer. They were refreshed, and some of the young people were "brought in" under the evangelistic preaching of the Rev. Joseph Tarn, who continued nightly services for about a week. Bible-classes have been formed as a result of these meetings, and a generally awakened spirit of inquiry is observable in the neighbourhood. So "our hidden hamlets" are receiving blessing from God. We long for more of it.

Some little time ago we had a visit from one of the New South Wales bush missionaries. Mr. Duffield seems born for such work. He carries a baby organ in his colportage van, and producing this starts off playing hymns in open air, or in a room. We had a grand sing whilst he was here, and gathered a few neighbours together, when he told the Gospel story in his own simple and effective way. I know of one or two instances in which the books he has sold in this neighbourhood have been the means of great blessing to those who got them. We were much refreshed by his visit. This mission is a great boon to the like of us who live far from church and chapel, and it is doing a noble work throughout the New South Wales colony.

(To be concluded.)

MR. RICHARD WEAVER will preach on Sunday next and three following days at Mr. Hatton' Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane The meetings will be continued till Oct. 26, and Mr William Harrison will preach on Sunday week.

THE DEPTFORD RAGGED SCHOOL.—No distric throughout the vast extent of the metropolis give a more appropriate field for Ragged School worl than Deptford in the south-east. All who are interested in a work that lay so near the heart of th late lamented Earl of Shaftesbury, should read deeply interesting sketch of the early history struggles, and triumphs of the Deptford Ragge School. Copies may be had (price 3d.) from th Secretary, Mr. T. Arnold, 6, Circus-street, Green wich, S.E.

THE ANTIPATHIES AND PREJUDICES whic separate different sections of the community fron each other—the rich from the poor, the employe from his work-people, Churchman from Dissenter Irishman from Englishman—are a scandal to ou religion, and a source of weakness to the common wealth. The Christian could engage in few noble works than in the endeavour to break down thes walls of separation, and end the bitter feeling which have existed between those who are divide from each other.—Congregationalist.

Letters to the Editor.

THE GREAT NORTH-WEST.

SIR,—At a time when much attention is directed o Manitoba and the North-west I should like to ring the needs of the North American Indians efore your readers, especially the Sioux Indians, hose Reserve is near to us on the Assiniboine. uring the late rebellion, although repeatedly reatened, and living in daily fear of attack from bellious powerful tribes, they remained true to the ritish flag, and we attribute it to the influence the Christians amongst them—about forty in umber.

The Sioux are a tribe of Indians some 5000 or 00, who some years ago sought protection in this nd from their enemies in the States. When the overnment entered into treaty with the Aborigines, ey were excluded from certain privileges possessed the others, being foreigners. They were given eserves like the rest: land reserved especially for eir benefit, the smallest being about six miles uare (containing some 150 persons), and this they e supposed to cultivate and turn to good account, ut the change from the freedom of the boundless airie, with the buffalo which supplied his food, othing, and shelter—in fact, every need—to the straint and poverty of his present state, is very eat. The buffalo has gone as the white man and vilisation advanced, and he cannot live! He does t know how to farm; perhaps his children may arn, but he never will be different from the wild ntsman of the forest or prairie. They are in a ost helpless, wretched state, in some cases really arving, unable physically and morally to make e exertion necessary to procure a livelihood in a nd which taxes the energies and endurance of our n persevering, hardy people. Those who have ne in and out amongst them, and know their bits, their carelessness about comfort, their averon to work, and their intense dislike to being tied own to continuous exertion of any kind, can only onder that affairs have continued as peaceable as ey are. When we consider their ignorance and perstition, we must admire the loyalty which, ith few exceptions, has kept them true to the hite man.

Those who look at these things from a Christian oint of view, and knowing how penuriously the overnment have treated the poor Indian, and w much cause he has to complain, feel that a avy responsibility rests upon Christians. The esent generation of Indians may never be very fferent as far as social duties are concerned; but ere is a wide scope for usefulness amongst their ung people. They have many fine qualities. heir kindness to the white prisoners—men and omen—during many weeks and months they ere in their hands during the rebellion, and tirely at their mercy, ought to produce a kindly d grateful feeling towards them, but unfortutely they are looked upon generally as a useless cumbrance, and in many cases represented as oodthirsty savages. But these things ought not be so. We should try to do our duty towards em as Christians, not only in teaching them our nguage, or even in giving them native missionies. They want the civilising influence of Chrisan white women amongst them. Until their omen are different, the Indians will never imove.

It is scarcely possible to imagine a more miserable ene than meets the eye on entering one of their rious log huts. The women, with their long kempt hair, a shawl and a petticoat, huddled together with the children on the ground; not e smallest appearance of comfort or cleanliness. one ever visits them or takes any interest in em. Their native missionary, with his family so tle removed from them in ideas, and their habits d customs similar, has no power to raise them civilisation.

The Christians amongst them are very anxious to ing up their children as white children. They do t wish them to go into domestic service, as in ny cases they have not been kindly treated, but ey would gladly welcome an industrial school, ere the girls would learn to sew and cook, and e boys to use their hands as well as their heads. e Government promised the "Treaty Indians" ools; but, except in a few cases, they have not pt their promise, many large Reserves being thout education. The Sioux Indians have no ht to expect schools from the Government; but some cases teachers are provided by missionary ort, the log hut serving the double purpose of lhouse and church, and often in a very miserle condition.

The Christian Indians near us are trying to get a more comfortable building, and I am sure if the Lord's people at home knew the difficulties they have, and the little sympathy they meet with in their efforts, they would help them. There is no field of labour more needing labourers, or one which would more fully repay any Christian ladies with means, willing to spend and be spent for the Lord. The Indian girls are bright and intelligent, and it is well known that the race is capable of rising, many young Indians taking the highest places in colleges, both in this country (Canada) and the States.

We should heartily welcome any who will help in this work, and, having been here three years, can smooth the way, and prevent many of the difficulties which must be the lot of missionaries in a country like this.

The climate is all that could be desired, with the exception of December, January and February. These three months are very severe, but, with the excellent Canadian stoves, houses are kept warm and comfortable, and the constant sunshine gives a charm to the winter, which makes many prefer it to the summer. The life is a busy, active one, with few of the conventionalities of the "old country." Many Christian friends have joined us, so that we are no longer isolated from Christian fellowship. The journey is a delightful one from England; just a fortnight's travelling brings a person to Ellehorn, the nearest station to us on the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are living four miles from the Indian Reserve, twenty miles from Ellehorn, and 250 miles west of Winnipeg, on the River Assiniboine. The scenery is very pretty, and the district one of the best in Manitoba, and well (even thickly in this part) settled up.

If any reading this care to hear more about Manitoba, either as a sphere of usefulness, or as a future home for their sons and daughters, we shall be glad to communicate with them direct, or information can be received from Captain Orde Browne, Downham, Shooter's-hill, Woolwich.

THE REFUGE SYSTEM.

DEAR SIR,—A sense of duty impels me to pen some words in reference to the subject of Mr. Linuell's letter in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN. In my capacity as a "head of a mission" for many years, I have necessarily had many preventive and other cases of tempted or fallen women to deal with, and gladly record how much readiness I have found in those in charge of Rescue Homes to do all they could to assist every case brought before them.

I have also frequently found it my privilege to visit the "Homes" wherein these have been placed, and can gladly give testimony to the open door and air of perfect liberty that has prevailed in the arrangements. That there are defects at times is sadly true, both as regards the suitability of the matron, the rules, and the details of labour, and hours of rest and recreation.

But I am fully aware that the gravest consequences have arisen from little preventible causes. A friend and fellow-worker took one day, by appointment, a poor fallen girl from a common lodging-house he had visited, but by some mistake the arrangement to receive the poor girl was not properly understood by the matron or superior person in charge. The consequence was the young woman was told to apply again, but did not. When met again in that lodging-house her answer to her would-be benefactor was, "You don't make a fool of me the second time!"

It has been my sorrowful task of late to endeavour to find a "Home" for a respectable servant who had been betrayed, and was soon to become a mother. She had lived with a charwoman till her money was gone, and dreaded the workhouse. However, her "case" was decided upon favourably by the directorate of a London Home, but as a preliminary to further negotiations £5 was to be sent by post. As time and other matters made immediate action indispensable, a date was asked for when she should be received before sending the money. This being refused, the matter fell to the ground to our grief, if not disgust, and the charwoman declares she will see her through.—Yours truly,

A HEAD OF A LONDON MISSION.

[We fully sympathise with the writer in regretting that any chance of rescuing a penitent one should be lost through excessive red tape. At the same time it must be remembered that the work of these Refuges is limited by the amount of means at command. We scarcely think any of the friends who manage them would dream of imposing restrictions as to admission, if the exchequer were in a flourishing condition.—ED.]

THE USE OF THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

SIR,—The Book of Proverbs was long in general use as a book to be read and studied in Scottish schools, and much of what is good in Scottish character has been attributed to this by shrewd observers. Multitudes of Christians read through the Book of Psalms every month, gaining unspeakably by familiarity with this inspired manual of devotion; they might find it profitable if, every month, they also read the thirty-one chapters of Proverbs as the inspired guide for daily life.

Familiarity with it might settle the question how far we are to keep out of sight the knowledge of certain forms of evil, and might show how to prevent much of this evil by keeping before the eyes of our youth of both sexes God's moral law for all.

In illustration of my meaning let me mention what I read, I suppose, between twenty and thirty years ago, and I shall be very glad if anyone can tell me where I read it. As some ladies were conversing about their families, one or more of them took for granted that all their sons had to pass through a course of vice as they grew up. One lady who indignantly denied this, in the case of her sons at all events, was asked how she had dealt with them. She replied that she thought it right they should know something about the evil which they were about to meet when entering upon life, and that the knowledge was best to come from her own lips; that when she judged it the suitable time, on a Sunday afternoon, she took the son with whom she wished to deal alone to her room, read with him various passages from the Book of Proverbs, spoke with him a little, and prayed with him. So far as she knew, or could form an opinion, her sons had all been preserved.

RED INDIANS FOR CHRIST.

A FRIEND sends us the following touching extract from the letter of a young missionary to the Indians in Canada:—

Last Sabbath was a sweet day to me. I have received a rich reward for the work of the past year. How sweet to work for Jesus if He rewards us thus. We had our communion,—we met in the lovely forest. The service was in the Cree language. Fifteen sat down to commemorate the love and death of the Lord Jesus, four of these for the first time. These, a few years ago, were savages, their hands red with the blood of their fellows. When I heard them sing these words, "Mă-kā-nă-wa pa oh tam wa-ki" (When I survey the wondrous Cross), I thought I saw a new meaning in the words of Paul (Rom. i. 16).

In the afternoon a messenger was sent to us from the tent of a chief seven miles away, asking us to go and see him. We went, and he said his object was that he wished to be baptized. There were many interesting facts in connection with his conversion.

On the following Monday we were passing a little lake where a number of Indians were gathered receiving Government supplies. Stopping for a little to give our horses drink, we heard human voices a little distance from us in the shrubbery, and, listening, we caught this sentence: "I have seen the conjuring of my people, and the worshipping of the north wind, and the thunder, and the stones, but my heart was never at rest until I received the knowledge of the living and true God." There was a poor Indian, who, on the previous day made public profession of faith in the Lord Jesus, now commending Him to others. So let us tell of his mighty love, let the white man tell of it, and the Hindoo, and the African, and the poor Indian. So "they shall come from the east, and the west, from the north and south, and shall sit down in the kingdom with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob."

When you read this letter may I ask that you go to your room, and, on your knees, thank the Lord for the conversion of those I have named?

H. MCKAY.

[If any would like the privilege of assisting this devoted young missionary, I am sure they will get God's blessing. Gifts may be sent to the office of THE CHRISTIAN.]

PARABLES OF THE LAKE. By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. Under this title Dr. Macduff treats of the Seven Parables which were spoken by the Sea of Galilee. This the author does with all his usual felicity of style and aptness of illustration. The local colouring is so vivid that the reader might well imagine himself on the border of the Lake of Gennesaret. A very attractive, instructive, and pleasant volume.

NORWEGIAN PICTURES. Drawn with pen and pencil. Containing also a glance at Sweden and the Gotha Canal. With map and 127 illustrations and sketches. By RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. 8s. Religious Tract Society. The series of illustrated books of travel of which this is the latest is in every way a valuable contribution to recent English literature. For vivid descriptive writing, beauty of pictorial illustration, general elegance of appearance, and lowness of price, as well as for the useful information they contain, these volumes are unequalled. They are specially appropriate for prizes to the young and presents to their elders. This volume on Norway comes at an appropriate time, when that interesting and picturesque country is beginning to receive adequate attention from holiday and health-seeking travellers.

FAITH AND INSPIRATION. By ROBERT WATTS, D.D. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. A powerful and timely defence of "verbal inspiration." In opposition to writers, and theologians, Romish, sceptical, and Rationalistic of all ages and schools. Professor Watts maintains the Westminister doctrine of Inspiration, viz., that not only in the subject matter, but in the language of their messages, the pen-men of the canonical Scriptures were miraculously directed by the Holy Ghost. This view we confess is the only one that warrants us in calling the Bible an infallible guide, but it is not often upheld with such cogency and consistency as by Dr. Watts. The fairness with which he examines opposing theories, the thoroughness and patience with which he clears up misapprehensions, the various lines of argument by which he establishes his position are admirable. It is a book that must promote minute study of the Scriptures, and a profound reverence for God the Holy Ghost.

A COMMENTARY ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS. By THOMAS C. EDWARDS, M.A. 14s. Hodder & Stoughton. This able and scholarly Commentary has in six months reached a second edition, and deservedly so. It combines scholarship with spiritual insight into the meaning of the Epistle, and on foundation points seems clear and sound. We would, however, except some High Church notions, such as that expressed on the words, "the Lord's table," x. 21: "The table is an altar, inasmuch as the communion rests on Christ's atoning sacrifice." Our Reformers, who deliberately struck out the word "altar" from the Prayer-book, in every place where it had previously stood, and substituted for it "the Lord's table," would hardly have agreed with this. There is also some objectionable language used as to the sacramental bread being "the means of communion with Christ's Body," which seems little in accord with the words of Article xxviii.: "The mean whereby the Body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper is faith."

THE CANDIDATES' AND VOTERS' MANUAL (T. Fisher Unwin. 1s.) should be in the hands of all electors who wish to guard against ex parte statements, and to understand modern legislation concerning Parliamentary elections. INDIA'S INTERESTS IN THE BRITISH BALLOT BOX, by WM. DIGBY (6d. Talbot Brothers, Carter-lane, London) is also a pamphlet for the General Election. It presses into the 112 pages a vast amount of information in relation to India. Mr. Digby, by his long residence in the East, is fully equal to his task.

VERITIES IN VERSES. 1s. Elliot Stock. A brochure dealing with many phases of modern religious thought. Occasionally the rhymes make very indifferent poetry; at other times the poetry is undoubted, and is telling in its homeliness.

We have received from Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling, N.B., a parcel of Sunday-school Reward Cards, of various sizes and styles; some of them are the daintiest and cheapest we have yet seen. In the parcel to hand we have no fewer than 3414 cards, the price of the whole being 4s. 4d.

SOCIALISM AT ST. STEPHEN'S, 1869—1885. 4d. Liberty and Property Defence League, 4, Westminster-chambers. This pamphlet is a reprint of a speech of the Earl of Wemyss delivered in the House of Lords, and may be profitably studied even by those who disagree with the views set forth.

Messrs. Fowlger & Co., 14, Paternoster-row, have issued as a penny pamphlet of sixteen pages, "The True Story of William Stead, and the Ogres, and the Children, and the Constituted Authorities." This story written by a Soldier's Sister as though told by her to her little nephew and niece over the nursery fire, in the style of "Jack the Giant Killer," has much in it to interest grown-up people. The pamphlet is offered for distribution at 3s. 6d. per 100, carriage paid.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE quarterly revenue returns show a decrease in Customs of £528,000, and in Excise of £310,000. The leading newspapers ascribe the decrease mainly to the growth of Temperance.

AT a recent Temperance Conference in connection with the Manchester Presbytery, Rev. R. Bell urged that there should be a Temperance organisation in connection with every church.

THE Eighth Council of the National Liberal Federation, held at Bradford, passed a resolution against granting drink licences in any locality against the will of the bulk of the inhabitants.

A VERY successful Gospel Temperance Mission, lasting thirteen days, was lately held in the Grosvenor-street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester. Mr. Coad was the missioner, and betwen 1300 and 1400 persons took the pledge.

SOUTH LONDON Temperance work has had a severe loss in the death of Mr. Andrew Dunn, for many years an active worker and liberal supporter of the cause. He was sixty-nine years of age, and from early life an abstainer.

THE Bishop of London opened the new wing of the London Temperance Hospital on Friday last, October 9. In the annual report of the Hospital it is stated that during the year in no case has any alcoholic medication been required.

THE Congregational Total Abstinence Society held a public meeting at Hanley, October 5, in connection with the meeting of the Union. Of 353 students only 50 are non-abstainers, and of 94 newly settled ministers last year 84 were total abstainers.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE appears to be actively engaged on the other side of the Atlantic with his Gospel Temperance work. At a convention held near Worcester, Mass., he gave an earnest address combating the arguments on behalf of moderate drinking and urging personal effort.

THE report of Rev. J. G. Gregson's Temperance work amongst the Soldiers in India is now published, and is a record of arduous but successful toil. In the Indian army drunkenness and crime have much decreased. Mr. Gregson finds the moderation pledge worse than useless.

THE Bromley Board of Guardians are considering the desirability of discontinuing the supply o intoxicants to the out-door poor.

AT Nottingham, every Sunday evening, shor Gospel Temperance services are held in abou thirty lodging-houses. The morality of the distric has greatly improved.

IT is stated that, though in consequence of the general election, the Social Science Congress wil not meet this year, there will be a conference i London during the winter instead, when there wil be full discussion of questions relating to the drin traffic.

CONSECRATION.

BY MRS. PEARCE CLARK.

WE hear and read a good deal now on thi subject, and I fancy that to some of you i is not a pleasant one; you think of it only i connection with giving up a great many thing which you like, leaving a somewhat dreary spac in your life.

Just let us look at the real meaning of the word itself. There are two main ideas conveyed by it in the original: (1) filling, (2) separation—the first of these being the more frequent The second is chiefly found in connection with the vow of the Nazarite (Num. vi.), and even then the prominent thought is separation "unt the Lord." You see the Bible dwells on the privilege side of consecration, bringing before u what we receive rather than what we yield; firs comes the filling, then the separating; we ar separated because filled. Filled with what you will say.

Let us think over this. What must we b filled with that we may be satisfied, holding thi world loosely, with a joyful heart and happy face?

People often think, if they only had this thing or that, they would be happy—riches, fame power, &c., and they find when their object i attained, the heart is empty still; it wants love and personal love. So you and I can never b content with anything short of being filled with Jesus Himself. Isn't it a beautiful and wonderful thought that He comes to the hungry heart—hungry for love and purity and power—and will if admitted, so fill that heart that it shall b satisfied in the fullest sense, satisfied with th Lord Himself, possessing all things in Him.

"All things that can satisfy, Having Jesus, those have I."

Consecration, then, is, first of all, a full receiving of Jesus. Open your hearts to Him saying, "Lord, fill me, and then let Him hav his own way with you. He wants empty vessels empty hands to be filled with his gifts, and i you really want what He has to give, you wi not hesitate to drop the tinsel toys you hold. child does not fret at putting down sham frui when the real is offered.

Now, separation comes as the result of filling When you are filled with Jesus, you will no care for things that once you loved. A han filled with gold does not drop sovereigns to pic up pennies, and you will not want to do anything which would rob you of your great possession, or to go where you cannot carry it wit you. Does not this test settle many a difficu question? A girl came to me one day asking "Do you think it is right to dance?" I sai "Can you take Christ with you in your dancing that is the point, not what I think." She wa silent for a minute, then said, "No, I won do it."

"Who, then, is willing to consecrate h service this day unto the Lord?" Who willing to come to Jesus to be filled with Himself, and then to go and live for Him in happ friendship and service, gladly laying down a that cannot be held with and in Him? W you not say to-day:—

"In full and glad surrender, I give myself to Thee, Thine utterly, and only, and evermore to be.
O Son of God, who lovest me, I will be thine alone,
And all I am and all I have shall henceforth be thi own!"

WINTER COLDS, ASTHMA, AND BRONCHITIS.

HOW TO PREVENT THEM.

Of all the diseases known to the medical profession, none have received more attention and study, and are more to be dreaded, than the above maladies, which are so incidental to our climate, and which so often result in phthisis; and yet the most eminent physicians are compelled to admit themselves baffled when confronted with a case of real consumption.

The efficiency of Magneto-Electricity in all affections of the chest and respiratory organs has been most uniform, owing to its permeating and soothing properties which reach the congested organs, clear the capillary vessels, and produce an even circulation. Moreover, by heightening the resisting powers of the system, it becomes a most valuable protection against external influences.

The bracing effect of a clear frosty air as compared with a negative and damp atmosphere induces a healthy condition of the system, under which we feel better and work better than we should on a damp and foggy November day; but we do not consider that we are prodigally using our vitality because we are enabled by natural means thus to exert ourselves. These are as truly outside influences as to the influence of Magneto-Electricity: but the latter supplies to the weary one the most natural penetrating and permeating influence known, aiding the invalid to recover a normal state of health. Through the application of Magneto-Electric currents a patient may be surrounded by an energising influence like the free electricity of the Swiss mountain air, and may obtain, without leaving home, the reanimation or recreation for which many toil and travel at so great an expense.

The usual effect is precisely that produced upon the debilitated and exhausted patient by far more expensive means, such as a sea voyage or lengthened residence at a watering place, at once showing the natural, though almost imperceptible, character of the agent employed and of the change produced.

These facts are being abundantly proved by personal experience, as the following statements will show:—

Mr. WILLIAM BUTT, 46, Akerman Road, Brixton, S.W.

February 13, 1885.—"I cannot speak too highly of the benefit I have derived from your Treatment, which has quite cured me of the severe attacks of Bronchitis to which I was subject I wear my Appliances all the winter months, and leave them off during the summer, and all I can say, humanly speaking, is, I feel perfectly safe in winter time, and I should be sorry to be without the remedy if it cost five times as much. It throws cold off, and gives vitality to the whole of the system, a delightful warmth from head to foot.

"I have recommended your Treatment to numerous friends for various complaints, and I can vouch for this, there is not one of them who cannot speak in the highest and most encouraging terms of the benefit they have derived, and they feel it their duty to recommend it to all suffering friends."

Mrs. MESSITER, Sutton Benger, near Chippenham.

"I can speak in high praise of your treatment, my husband having adopted it for the last seven or eight years, and derived great benefit. He was suffering from a weak chest and delicate lungs; we tried everything we could, but nothing seemed to do him any good. Everyone thought he was going into a rapid consumption, when we were persuaded to try Magnetism. We did so, and he soon found great relief, and has been able to attend to business ever since."

March 14, 1885.—"My husband continues to enjoy fairly good health. The disease of the right lung from which he suffered has made no further progress, and I am glad to say he is still able to go to business daily."

Mr. B. Copson Garratt will always be pleased to attend to inquiries from sufferers, no matter how chronic or severe their affections may be, and will in every instance state his candid opinion of the case brought before him. All consultations, whether personally or by correspondence, are free. A series of essays and tractates upon Mr. Garratt's treatment may be had post free upon application at his Consulting Rooms, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the "Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road London, E.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15.—REV. XXII.

v. 2.—"In the midst of the street of it."—The word "street" occurs ch. xxi. 21, and is rendered "broad way" by the "Speaker's Commentary," which adds, "The word is used collectively; all the streets compose one ideal street."

v. 3.—"And there shall be no curse any more" (R.V.).—A reversal of Gen. iii. 17.

"His servants shall serve Him."—"Shall worship Him, not them, for Christ has said: 'I and my Father are One.'"—Sp. Com.

v. 5.—"And they shall reign for ever and ever."—"With this promise the Revelation proper (ch. iv. 1—xxii. 5) comes to a close."—Sp. Com. What follows is an epilogue, in which the angel confirms the truth of the communications already made, and Christ Himself adds his own testimony thereto.

v. 6.—"The Lord God of the holy prophets."—Rather, "The Lord the God of the spirits of the prophets" (R.V.).

v. 10.—"Seal not up the words of the prophecy of this book" (R.V.).—"As in Dan. viii. 26, xii. 4, God is wont to command his prophets to 'seal up' his prophecies when they refer to remote times; so when they refer to times near at hand He commands that the Revelation should not be sealed."

v. 14.—"Blessed are they that wash their robes, that they may have the right (to come) to the tree of life," &c. (R.V.).—An interesting reading, fully borne out by MS. authority, as well as by that of Versions. . .

v. 17.—"Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—This gracious invitation may be called the last message in the Book of God, as what follows is a denunciation of those who add to or take from "the words of the book of this prophecy," an expression which, while it primarily refers to the Book of Revelation, may well be taken to extend to the whole Bible, at the close of which it stands.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16.—GENESIS I.

v. 1.—"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."—"'The beginning' here spoken of belongs to a period of indefinite antiquity, when God created the worlds out of nothing. The commencement of the first day's work I hold to be the moving of the Spirit of God upon the face of the waters. We can allow Geology the amplest time for its various revelations without infringing even on the literality of the Mosaic Record."—Dr. Chalmers.

v. 2.—"And the earth was without form, and void."—This is not to be taken with the former verse, as if it was part of the history of the creation. It is a subsequent state or condition, separated, it may be, by ages from the original creation, and describes a state of confusion, apparently the result of judgment. Twice (Isa. xxxiv. 11, Jer. iv. 23) where these same words "without form, and void," occur together, it is in the description of Divine judgments. Baumgarten (Acts xxvi. 18) connects this judgment with the Apostasy of Satan and his angels, the former inhabitants and rulers of the world. If so, much light is thrown on Satan's subsequent connection with the world's history, and his crafty and malicious plot to ruin man who had succeeded him.

v. 3.—"Let there be light." v. 14.—"And God said, Let there be lights."—The Hebrew word for "lights" differs from that for "light," as "light-giver" or "luminary" differs from "light." Modern scientific discoveries fully confirm this distinction between light itself and that which causes light.

There is an interesting analogy, which can only be hinted at here, between the order of the days of creation as described in this chapter and that of the new creation (2 Cor. v. 17). (1) "Light" (see 2 Cor. iv. 6); (2) "the firmament" (or expanse called) "Heaven" (Eph. ii. 6); (3) Earth "bringing forth fruit" (John xv. 16); (4) "Lights . . . to give light upon the earth" (Phil. ii. 15, 16); (5) Waters "bring forth abundantly the . . . creature that hath life" (John x. 10); (6) "God created man in his own image" (Rom. viii. 29, Phil. iii. 21); (7) "God's Sabbath rest" (Heb. iv. 9).

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17.—GENESIS II.

v. 3.—"And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it."—"The natural interpretation of these words is that the blessing of the Sabbath was immediately consequent on the first creation of man, for whom the Sabbath was made (Mark ii. 27)."—Sp. Com.

v. 4.—"These are the generations," &c.—"It is apparent that the narrative proceeds in direct order from Gen. i. 1 to this verse ii. 4, and that from this verse there is a return to the first formation of plants and vegetables and to the creation of man, a kind of recapitulation, yet with some appearance of diversity. . . . The word 'generations,' which occurs for the first time in this verse, meets us again continually at the head of every principal section of the Book of Genesis. It is used in general to usher in a history of the race or descendants of the heads of the great patriarchal families."—Ibid.

v. 8.—"Eden."—"The word 'Eden' signifies 'delight,' and the Vulgate renders 'a garden of delight; a pleasure garden;' but the word is a proper name, and points to a region the extent of which is unknown. The difficulty consists in discovering the four rivers. It is generally agreed that one, 'Phrath' (v. 14) is the Euphrates, and that another, 'Hiddekel,' is the Tigris."—Ibid.

v. 17.—"In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."—This points, in the first instance, to spiritual death, which took place at the very time of Adam's sin.

v. 23.—"Bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh."—Compare the application of these words (Eph. v. 30) to the Church, as similarly taken out of Christ during his "deep sleep," and hereafter to be brought to Him.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 18.—GENESIS III.

v. 1.—"Now the serpent," &c.—"Almost throughout the East the serpent was used as an emblem of the evil principle."—Kalisch. "The reason why Satan took the form of a beast remarkable for its subtlety may have been that so Eve might be the less upon her guard."—Sp. Com. Compare the reference to this event in Rev. xii. 9; Luke x. 19; and John viii. 44.

v. 5.—"Ye shall be as God" (R.V.).—"The plural word 'Elohim' stands at times for false gods, but most commonly for the one true God."—Sp. Com.

v. 6.—"And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food," &c.—We have here the three great principles of "the world," as set forth in 1 John ii. 16: "Good for food" = "the lust of the flesh," "pleasant to the eyes" = "the lust of the eyes," and "to be desired to make one wise" = "the pride of life." Our Lord's threefold temptation by Satan (Luke iv. 1) corresponds: (1) to make stones bread; (2) to accept from Satan all the kingdoms of the world, and their glory; (3) to display his power by casting Himself down from the pinnacle of the Temple.

v. 7.—"The eyes of them both were opened," &c.—"The hiding of sin from self is gone when God's presence comes in. Adam, who had covered his nakedness, speaks of himself when God is there as as much so as if he had done nothing to cover it."—J. N. Darby.

v. 8.—"Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord."—"God finds his creatures hiding from Him. He would let them learn the position into which they have brought themselves by disobedience. Does He do this by reproaches? He simply says, 'Where art thou?' How comes it you are not with Me? Adam has his excuse at hand, and man's excuse is yet the same."—A. Jukes.

v. 15.—"I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed."—"There has been but one descendant of Eve who had no earthly father; and 'He was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil.'"—Sp. Com. "As representing the race, Adam had no promises: there is none to the first Adam, all is in the Second, the woman's Seed."—J. N. Darby.

v. 20.—"Because she was the mother of all living."—Delitzsch translates this "She became the mother." The name of Eve signifies "life," and Adam recognised thereby that the promise just given as to her seed would in time be fulfilled.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19.—GENESIS IV.

v. 1.—"I have gotten a man from the Lord."—"That she sees in the birth of this son the commencement of the fulfilment of the promise, and thankfully acknowledges the Divine help in this display of mercy, is evident from the name Jehovah, the God of salvation."—Delitzsch.

v. 3.—"Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord."—The ground was under a curse (iii. 17), and its best fruits and flowers could be no more accepted as an offering than can the best deeds of unregenerate human nature, which is itself under a curse too (Gal. iii. 10).

v. 4.—"The Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering."—"Abel comes as guilty, and unable as he is to draw near to God, setting the death of another between himself and God, recognises the judgment of sin, has faith in expiation."—J. N. D. See Heb. xi. 4. How God "had respect unto" or "testified of" his offering, we are not told, but probably it was (as the Greek translation by Theodotion suggests) by fire from heaven.

v. 7.—"Unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him."—The word "his" may refer either to Abel or to sin. "Sp. Com." prefers the former as "the more ancient, more natural, and more according with the simple meaning of the original."

v. 15.—"The Lord set a mark upon Cain."—"Appointed a sign for Cain" (R.V.).—Most modern commentators agree that God gave some sign to Cain to assure him that he should not be slain."—Sp. Com.

v. 23.—And Lamech said unto his wives," &c.—"The apparent meaning of the words is this: Amid the violence of the times, especially among the descendants of Cain, Lamech comforts his wives with the assurance, that with the aid of the bronze and iron instruments now in his hands he could kill anyone who injured him ('I slay, or would slay, a man for wounding me'). The speech is one of confident boasting."—Sp. Com.

v. 26.—"Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord."—The posterity of Cain build cities and enjoy life, making themselves at home in the world. The posterity of Seth own their wretchedness (Enos means "wretched"), and turn for help and comfort to God.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20.—GENESIS V.

v. 3.—"Adam lived," &c.—"The genealogy given is that of the Sethites, probably as the line of the promised seed. The genealogy of the Cainites was given much more imperfectly in the last chapter, and with no dates or chronological marks, because (says Keil) being under the curse of God they had no future."—Sp. Com.

v. 27.—"All the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years."—"Bochart interprets Methuselah, 'his death the sending forth,' as indicating that his death was contemporary with the pouring forth of the waters, for Methuselah must have died in the very year of the Flood."—Sp. Com. If so, his name was prophetic, and was probably given to him by his father Enoch, who we know was a prophet (Jude 14), to mark the time of the approaching judgment. The names of the Patriarchs from Adam to Noah are, when put together, a very striking unfolding of man's ruin and redemption. Adam, man; Seth, appointed; Enos, wretched; Cainan, lamentation; Mahalaleel, God to be praised; Jared, shall descend; Enoch, dedicated; Methuselah, his death the sending forth; Lamech, to the humble; Noah, consolation.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21.—GENESIS VI.

v. 2.—"The sons of God saw the daughters of men," &c.—"Sp. Com." mentions five different explanations, but prefers this one: "The 'sons of God' were the descendants of Seth, who adhered to the worship and service of the true God: . . . the daughters of men were of the race of the ungodly Cain. This was the belief of the ancient Church Fathers, Chrysostom, Cyril (Alex.), Theodoret, Augustine, and Jerome. It was adopted by Luther, Calvin, and most of the Reformers. The line of the Sethites, traced in ch. v., alone appears to have kept itself pure, the little Church of God, in the midst of gathering darkness of the world around. This little Church may well have been called 'the children of God.' When, therefore, some of these 'sons of God' went out from their own little home circle to make mixed marriages with the general heathenised races round them, the elements of corruption were brought from the world into the Church, the Church itself became corrupted, and the single family of Noah appears to have been kept pure from that corruption."

v. 14.—"Pitch it within and without with pitch."—Literally, "Cover it within and without with covering." The verb and noun here used for the first time, play a very important part in subsequent portions of Scripture. The verb "caphar" is the one used so often, especially in Leviticus, for "make an atonement," the root idea in this word atonement or propitiation being a covering for sin. Hence the safety of those in the Ark depended upon a "covering," which was typical of the propitiation of the Lord Jesus Christ.

BRIGHTON.—A wave of blessing has come upon the Junior Section of the Brighton Y.M.C.A., many of the boys having decided for Christ.

JAPAN.—Mr. Foukouzawa, one of the most progressive representatives of the Japanese press, has lately exhorted his readers to accept Christianity. After two scientific journeys in Europe and America Mr. Foukouzawa has slowly come to the conviction that Western civilisation is a product of Christianity. If Japan, then, is to resemble Europe, it must be through Christianity. It is only twenty-five years ago that Dr. Hepburn landed at Yokohama as the first evangelical missionary to Japan, and now there are about 80,000 Christians belonging to the different evangelical sects.—Journal des Missions Evangéliques.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North a trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all year round in providing our tables with fish. These n, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety rm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, ndreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some all share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so ghly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

rrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy d pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to le away the weary hours, allowing relief in case of kness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull d monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a and work, worthy of the support of a great maritime tion like England; and I believe that the results of ir effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only pported liberally by the public, be of untold value in future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to GOD, their own FATHER and MOTHER, and true BIBLE Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables PARENTS to teach one child or a family of twelve children, TEACHERS to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, EDUCATED LADIES to teach all ages, or MINISTERS without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the

BIBLE VOICES can be had—Part I., 1d., or 7s. per 100; cloth, 2d. or 12s. Parts I. and II., 3d., or 18s. per 100.

A SOUTH WINDOW;

"Keep Yourselves in the Love of God."
BY DR. GEO. F. PENTECOST.

"Your poor soul has grown cold, and is full of the rheumatism of doubt and distress. In vain you have tried to expel your doubts and fears; but they have lodged themselves in your mind, and you cannot get the better of them. You have been trying to expel them by an effort of will, or by trying to love God; but in this you have failed—and ever will fail. There is but one remedy. Go and sit in the south window of God's love, and let the warm, life-giving rays of his glad sunshine pour themselves into your heart."—Extract.

JESUS THE LAMB OF GOD:

Showing how He Died on the Cross for Children; and how Little Ones have Learned to Love and Trust Him. By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

Anecdotes and Appeals; with very Numerous Instances of the Early Regeneration of the Young. Sixth Thousand.

Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Limp cloth, 2s.;
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Many testimonials have been received, speaking of the blessing this book has been to its readers in this and other countries where it has been, or is now being, translated.

"It has been circulated among missionaries in various lands. Many have been taught by it to lead children to the Saviour. Repeatedly we have had occasion to praise God for his seal of acceptance to this book.

"Many a precious work of grace among the children, often extending also to the adults, has been directly traceable to the influence of the truths and facts gathered in these pages."—Preface to English Edition.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath Schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonies of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."—Christian Leader.

AN ATTRACTIVE

Quarto Volume of Music & Words.

By IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."
Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions, when all the mists have rolled away."—Baptist Messenger.

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Mc Granahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

A COLLECTION OF

New Part Songs, Choruses & Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices.

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. Mc Granahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

"It is a splendid collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems, expressly arranged for male voices. Many of the pieces are the very words of Scripture, and are set to tunes which give great force and sweetness to the words themselves. The book cannot fail to be a blessing wherever used."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

"BOTH LUNGS DISEASED." CASE of Mr. RITSON.

The father of this patient, Mr. J. Ritson, of Stratford Collieries, near Barnsley, writing me in June, about a young woman's case, says:—"My son, who was first your patient two years ago, completely recovered under your treatment"

Referring back to this case I find the following history:—"Chest disease in the family; illness commenced with indigestion, then cough and spitting of blood. Expectoration light green, mixed with blood in the morning; pains in the chest and side. He had lost flesh in the ankles, arms, and face. The doctors report, 'both lungs affected.' Case recommended to me by a patient at Dodworth, near Barnsley."

In the following month the patient reported, "I am improving a little; the night sweats have disappeared; the expectoration is less, but the blood in the morning continues."

In another six weeks:—"Still progressing; gained 1½ lbs. of flesh in a month." In another month:—"Much stronger, and can walk four miles."

In the next letter the patient reported that spitting of blood had ceased, and that he was so much better in every respect that he was about returning to his employment. After this he got well, and continued so (as the father's letter of June last testifies).

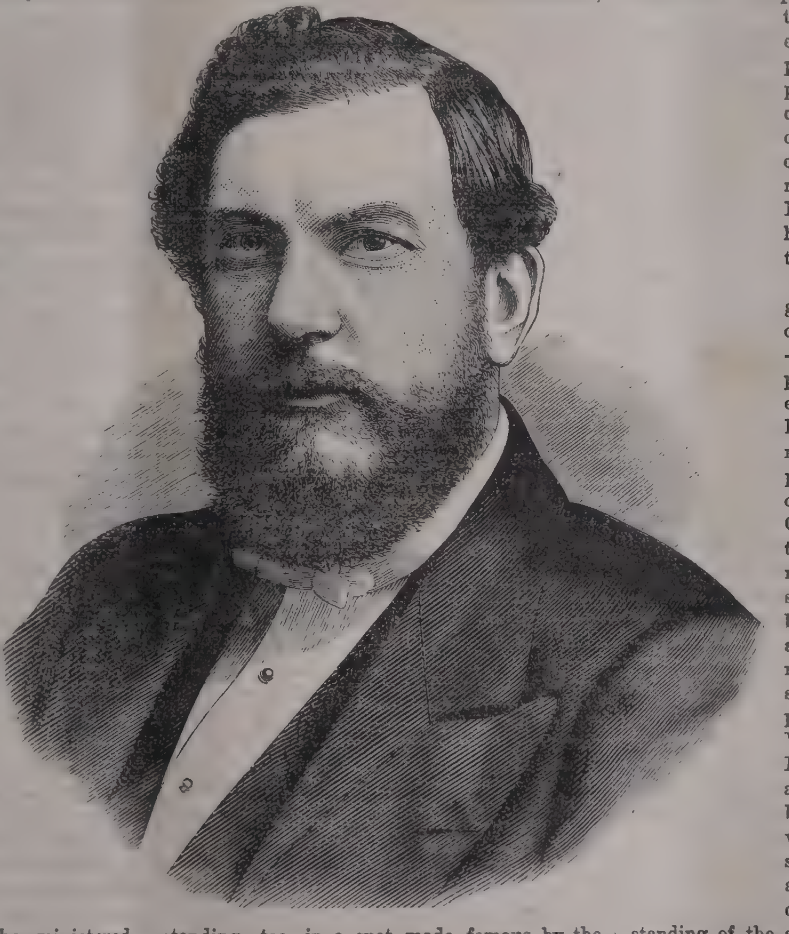
DR. OSWALD DYKES.

WITHIN the last two decades the Presbyterian Church has made rapid strides in ondon. During that period there has been uite a tide of immigration to the metropolis from cotland and Ireland of men who, having proved eir pulpit and pastoral capacity in quieter rovincial spheres, have obeyed the leading of ents, and elected to exercise their gifts in the orld's greatest centre of population and of in- uence. Among these is the subject of our ortrait, and of this brief sketch -the popular pastor of the egent - square Presbyterian hurch. It would be invidious a our part to assign to Dr. SWALD DYKES the exact place e holds in the galaxy of able en who fill the London pulpits his denomination; we would ly say that, in our judgment, e is second to none of them in tellectual grasp, in spiritual wer, and in sympathetic affi- ty with all the great and good ovements of the time. If his ysical strength were equal to s mental acumen, and his ristian catholicity and zeal, would wield a still more tent influence on the life of s generation.

A native of Renfrewshire, r. Dykes received his early ucation at the Dumfries cademy, and took his Arts gree at Edinburgh University 1853. His theological curri- lum embraced a visit to Ger- any; but he seems to have erged unscathed from the fire philosophic and rationalistic iticism that forms the con- nial pastime of certain schools religious belief in that land lager beer and loose thinking. ing duly "licensed" to preach 1858, the young Scottish udent became an ordained stor at East Kilbride, where he ministered the Gospel to an admiring flock for the ace of three years. His gifts and graces on gained for him a more important sphere, d he accepted a call to be the colleague of e of Scotland's most famous ecclesiastics, r. Candlish, of Free St. George's Church, dinburgh. Here was a centre of influence that ight satisfy the most ambitious, and, if his ealth had stood the strain, possibly Dr. Dykes ight at this hour be one of the leading evan- elical lights in the religious firmament of the "Modern Athens." A voyage had to be undertaken to the Antipodes, however, in order to recruit. After some measure of restored strength had been granted him, he returned to old England, to find a new and fitting sphere of service at Regent-square, where he still ministers with undiminished acceptance and success.

Not every man who essays to teach his fellow man could have hoped in any degree to fill the shoes of the revered Dr. James Hamilton, standing, too, in a spot made famous by the ministry of that still more brilliant, though less safe and steady pulpit luminary, Edward Irving. One has only to attend the Regent-square Church any Lord's Day, when Dr. Dykes is the preacher, to find that the fame of the place as a centre of religious inspiration and influence has suffered no eclipse. Probably there is no place of worship throughout the whole extent of the vast metropolis, where may be seen, among the regular attenders, so many sedate and serious-looking young men. Dr. Dykes cannot, indeed, be said to be a pulpit orator, in the popular acceptation of the term, and the fact that he is a rigid reader of his discourses, hinders rather than helps the attainment of the highest excellence in that respect. But there are many who would rather listen to a sermon read by Dr. Dykes than to one delivered by other men with all the undoubted aids of declamation that often accompany impromptu speech, so rich are his utterances in helpful, inspiring, and fructifying thought. He aims more at expository than at textual preaching, and the reading public have reaped the benefit of this method, in the volumes of practical sermons on the Life of Abraham, the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, &c., which the Doctor has published from time to time.



Dr. Dykes, besides being a great preacher, is an active organiser and Church politician —if we may use the latter phrase. His congregation is eminently a working one, and has been the fruitful mother of many thriving children. Unimpeachably orthodox in his conception and presentation of Gospel truth, he is yet alive to the fact that in many subsidiary matters the new wine cannot safely or wisely be kept in old bottles. So we find him heading a movement for an adequate relaxation of the bonds of subscription, among his brother presbyters, to the tenets of the Westminster Confession of Faith. The able and suggestive address delivered the other day before the Evangelical Alliance, which we report at length in subsequent columns, furnishes another illustration of that quality of prescience and understanding of the signs of the times which is so undoubted a mark of the highest Christian statesmanship.

In temperament and public demeanour, Dr. Dykes has always reminded us of our ideal conception of John the beloved Apostle. "I have never heard him speak an unkind word in a Presbytery meeting." Such is the testimony of one who is well qualified to speak on the subject; it is a testimony which means a good deal to those who have any extended knowledge of Presbyterian Church courts.

GODLY UPBRINGING OF THE YOUNG.

By Rev. J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.

I FEEL acutely the difficulty of handling, in the closing minutes of the Conference, a subject so vast, upon which we could better spend the whole time of the Conference than a few moments now. I feel also the difficulty of calling your attention away from the distant fields to which the Conference has been turned to-night to consider what lies so near us as our own firesides and homes. At the same time, I remember how very honourable is the place which the Christianity of Scotland has taken in the past with respect to the attention it has paid to the upbringing, in the faith of the Lord Jesus, the children of Scottish parents. I recall what our country has owed to this, and how, from the fireside teaching in the Holy Bible, and in the Shorter Catechism, strong, manly, calm Scottish piety developed itself in generations gone by—how, indeed, as our national poet sings—

> "From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur springs."

The days I have alluded to were days in which the training of Scottish youth, in the faith of Jesus and in the maxims of his Holy Gospel, was comparatively an easy matter. So long as our population lived a primitive and simple home life and had their homes scattered over the fields and straths of the South and North, and were not yet gathered together in vast hives of industry, it was comparatively easy to supplement the instruction of the Church by the more kindly and loving instruction of the home. But it seems to me we have passed into a state of society where this problem has become indefinitely more complicated and difficult, both as it affects the training of our own Christian boys and girls in our homes for self-preservation, and also the Christianising of the children of the neglectful and irreligious; I would ask you to keep these two points distinct in your thoughts.

The teaching of the young is the most important agent by which the Church preserves the ground it has already won, and trains into a full intelligent membership in her communion those who have been born within her pale. It is also, I think, although that is not quite so extensively recognised, her most effective agent for extending herself and widening her influence upon generations to follow by training those who are not yet her members. To take the first first, will you try to realise in your own thoughts for a moment how very large the percentage of the membership of our churches is, which is gained by the simple process of the education of our own children. Then compare the numbers that are gained in adult life from the world outside—the converts in matured years called out of the world; compare these in number with those who are added from month to month, and quarter to quarter, to the fellowship of the Church by the simple process of growth within, and you will see that out of all proportion the Church draws the great bulk of her membership, in point of numbers, to say nothing of other matters, by the godly upbringing of the boys and girls, who have the happiness to be born and grow up in her Christian families. That is a point to which the attention of the Church ought to be addressed with unrelaxing care; because, if anything should occur to make the training of the Christian home less effective in its results than it ought to be, you see at once that we are in danger of leakage, great in amount, beyond all experience, and in its quality dreadfully to be deplored. Not only are these members who are gained by the education of our own boys and girls the most numerous part of our membership; they are the part that may be expected to exhibit the highest intelligence, and the ripest type of Christian character; because they are the children, in many cases, of a long succession of Christian generations. Though grace is not hereditary, yet there are features of character matured in the individual by the grace which may be communicated from father to son. There may be a gentleness and purity of mind, a power of self-control, which are communicable by the laws of heredity. And when you have the descendants of a long line of Christian ancestors, you have materials laid from the very foundation of being, for a type of Christian manhood and womanhood—a type far better than you have any right to hope or expect from those who by God's grace are snatched out of evil and vicious surroundings.

Am I wrong in saying that the changes which have passed upon society throughout this country within the memory of our fathers of the last generation, if not this one, have all tended to increase the difficulty of home training, so as to produce the result of a well-defined Christian faith and a well-formed Christian character in the young men and women of our families? There are two factors entering into this education of the young—two pivots on which their godly upbringing turns—the home the one, and the Church the other. I am far from thinking that these two have co-operated in the past as much as they ought to have done. I think the Church has not been so careful of her baptized junior members in the past as she should have been. I think she has not made so much provision for them in her public services as she ought to have done. I think she has not provided helps to parents on the discharge of their home duties, and in other ways assisted them as she might have done. I think there is room for a more effective co-operation between the home and the Church in this matter. But there are two things which must be attended to on the part of the home and the Church respectively, if they are to fulfil their work here. The one is, that the Christian home must be not only Christian in the best sense; pervaded, that is, by a bright, assured, and cheerful intelligence—not a morbid, not an ascetic piety; but it should be also homely and homelike. It should be a true home, it should be made a centre of education and a place of nurture in which all the nature of the children not only in childhood, but in ladhood, girlhood, as they grow up into young manhood and maidenhood, shall find full development and scope. But if the home should, from any cause whatever, become less dear to the children as they grow up, if it should become less their home, a place to which they seek and find themselves at home, then be sure that, no matter how godly the parents may be, the children will not grow up imitating their example and imbibing their piety as we would wish them to do.

You and I, who live in the heart of great cities, know how numerous and attractive are those inducements which lead to the dissipation of home life, the spending of the evening hours by a portion, if not the whole, of the family away from home. May we not carry that a great deal too far? May we not be incurring danger because there are so many meetings, some good, some more dissipating and relaxing in their tendency; but some so attractive that, night after night, this member of the household is away—here, there, and everywhere—and the head of the house is away at the claims of fashion or society, or other forms of enjoyment, so that the home is thus less a home than it ought to be? I utter this warning for the consideration of all Christian parents, especially with regard to those children who are no longer children, and who are at an age which should be carefully studied.

But, besides taking care that the Christian home should be truly homelike, we should take care, also, that the Christian Church should be a spiritual mother to her children and furnish them with a spiritual home. This will not be done by the mere formal service of the Lord's Day or the sitting out of the formal prayer-meeting at which a few are gathered together on a week night. There must be a great deal more in the Church to suit the tastes of the young people and to find them occupation; to form in them a deep interest in God's work, and so gather them together in the Church as well as around the fireside. The one is the natural the other is the spiritual home to which their affections ought to cling. I believe it is by the union of these two, intelligently harmonising and gathering together their forces, that we shall best train up within our own Christian families that seed of God which shall give us a stronger and more robust Christian generation to come than that which we have now.

There is another remark I should like to make in this connection. I think that Christian parents, and the Church also, ought to remember, in dealing with the growing youth of our Christian families, that we are passing through an age of change, which, as regards its rapid and revolutionary character, few generations have had to live through since the world was. We live in an age of change, which specially affects religious questions. The word of suggestion I would utter is this—the parents should be careful to remember in their dealing with the youth of their families, that they are dealing with a new generation, and that the new generation, in times like this, cannot possibly be precisely the same as the old, even if it were desirable—I don't say it would be desirable. God is guiding the world forward, and I believe that the generations to follow will be better than those that have gone before. But if it were desirable—and of course those who take a strictly conservative view will think it is—it is not possible. They are the lads and maidens of a new age. They are growing up with its thoughts stirring their hearts and its questions before their minds. Their faith is taking its form in order to be ready to do its work, as we in our form do our work. To attempt to force into the old mould, in all its details, the precise modes of conduct, the precise habits of thought, which have been traditional with us, only ends in alienating the sympathies and driving away the intelligence of our young people from us.

I turn to the other side of the question—the value of Christian training, and modes of it for Church extension purposes; that is to say, for operating upon those who do not belong to Christian families. Here I think the right key-note to strike is this—that our hope lies with the next generation. I presume there are many here who have given much attention to work among the indifferent and Godless classes of this great city (Glasgow), or of other cities similarly circumstanced. I think they will agree with me that the success which attends all our most earnest and laborious mission work among the adults is comparatively slight. That is to say, the men and women of formed character, and habits, and modes of opinion, whom we succeed by the grace of God in drawing out of darkness into light, are units rather than hundreds or thousands. We gather them up one at a time, and God knows we gather too few. Well now, that is a slow process, and if we had nothing but that to look to, to create hope for the future, I should not be very hopeful. But I believe the most hopeful fact is this, that while we find it extremely difficult to get access to the adult population who are away from Church ordinances, —and even when we do get access to them we find it difficult to change their habits of life and induce them to turn to the Church of God—we have in our hands actually, almost to a single individual, the children of these very people. The working classes of this country, to a very large extent—I know it is so in England, especially with the lower classes of working men and women—are so alienated from the Church or from habits of Church attendance, that they are very seldom to be seen there, and it is with the greatest possible difficulty we can induce them to attend the mission service or hear the Gospel in any form. That is a great fact, which staggers and perplexes us. Yet here is a countervailing factor on the other side, viz., that these men and women are not only willing that their children should go into our Sunday-schools, but they send them there and offer them to us; they give them gladly to us, and seem anxious that they should come. They have no misgivings about the Sunday-school teacher, whatever they may have as to the parson.

I venture to think that is a very large and significant fact at the present moment. It lays upon the Christian Church a very peculiar responsibility to be careful as to how she uses this immense engine which God has put in her power, and which we may call her last weapon against the indifference and unbelief of these classes of society. It is not generally known, but I believe it to be a fact, according to the latest statistics which have been gathered together, that the number of children in the Sunday-schools of England is at this moment larger than the whole number of scholars who are forced into your primary schools under the statute law. In other words, the State has not by a compulsory Act driven into the day-schools so many children as the parents whose ungodliness and indifference we all lament are actually pushing into our schools of their own accord. We ought to lay that to heart to this extent, that we make our school accommodation as extensive as we can, that we rise to the occasion, and have as many schools as possible.

But we ought to do more. We ought to try to make the schools as effective as we can for their purpose. There are two reasons why, I think, the style of the education in our Sunday-schools should be improved, so far as it is possible for us with voluntary agents, who, of course, are busy during the week. First, the State by the form which it has given to its Education Act, in England at any rate, and I presume it is something similar here, has so far declined the responsibility of giving distinctive Christian or religious teaching of itself, and has virtually left that in the hands of the Christian community, in the hands of the Churches of Christ throughout the land. So that we are by the whole nation actually invited to take up this work, as we never did before. When education was left so much more than it is now to the day-school, the day-school teachers were supposed to teach religion in its dogmatic form, and the Church was able to say that religious instruction was given in the schools; but we cannot be sure of that now. Therefore the responsibility is laid upon the Christian community to care for the instruction of the young. Then as to the best possible way of doing it. Here is another consideration. You are having your children put into schools for five working days of the week, where they are taught by teachers upon whom every care has been expended to train them for their work in the most recent modes of education. These teachers have been taught the science of education; they have been drilled in the art of education, and the whole machinery of the school is subjected to the most minute and careful investigation in order to make it as perfect as possible. As the children are accustomed to order, they know good teaching when they get it. My contention is that if they go to the Sunday-school and do not get good teaching, although they get teaching which is warm, loving, and full of the Spirit of Christ, still, if it is unlike what they get in the day-school in efficiency of method, the children will not come to care for the school so much, and will cease to respect the teacher. Therefore, it seems to me imperative that the best intelligence of our Christian people and our Christian Churches ought to be turned to this point —how we can raise the standard of educational efficiency in our Sunday-schools.

Another point is this—it is confessed on all hands that there is a great lack of continuity between the average age at which children leave the Sunday-school, and the average age at which they are expected to become communicants. They leave the Sunday-school at about fourteen or fifteen. There are many, no doubt, who remain in the senior classes, but the great bulk drop off at that age, and they are not expected to become communicants until they are seventeen or eighteen. You, therefore, have a gap of four or five years, during which the school has lost them, and the Church has not gained them. The school cannot get them, the Church does not know how to win them. They consequently drop into this great gulf. Is that not the experience of all our Churches and Sunday-schools? That is the point to which attention should be called. I shall not say anything beyond a passing word of earnest commendation of the most energetic effort, probably on the largest scale known anywhere, that has been made in Glasgow to solve that problem—by the Foundry Boys' Society. I am happy to believe that great Society, which has enlisted so large an amount of valuable co-operation, has done very much good, especially over the children who have left the Sunday-school. To what extent it has succeeded in retaining the older scholars, and to what extent it has succeeded in handing them over to the Church, and establishing a living connection between them and the Church, I am not aware. But if I am not misinformed, that is a point upon which dissatisfaction is felt. I conclude that your Foundry Boys' System has as yet somehow a missing element. The word which I would venture to say to the men of Glasgow is, If you still keep hoping on, and seeking for it in a determined way, you will find out where that missing element is. If present plans do not succeed, you must try to amend them. We cannot have too many experiments of this sort. We are trying to make them in London. What I say to-night in Glasgow is, that we must go on until we find this solution. It will never do to let them drop away, and cut off four of the most important and formidable years of the life of our young people, during which they are neither the one thing nor the other. If you are to solve the problem, you must study the peculiarities of these years of their life.

It seems to me the attempt to keep them in Bible-classes, in connection with the Sunday-school, is not likely on a large scale to be successful, because, I think, it does not recognise sufficiently that most prominent feature of ladhood and girlhood—the feeling of the emancipation from childhood, the feeling of independence, the desire not to be confounded any longer with little boys and girls, but to be treated as those who already have their feet upon the first step which leads to manhood and womanhood. You must realise all this, or you will fail. Then there is this strong impulse in lads and girls at that age—the love of comradeship, the feeling that when they get beyond being merely boys and girls, when they come to the ages of fifteen and sixteen, they must get other lads and maidens of their own age to cling to. So they band themselves together, sometimes to the scandal of our streets—great hulking lads going about in gangs of a dozen or twenty, unsettling in them all that they had acquired. This is just because nature has put the love of comradeship into their hearts. You must utilise this element of clubbing, and bind them together for good.

There are other things which you must attend to as well. One is, that they are at an age when they are seeking and groping vaguely around for a means of more complete development and education of themselves as human beings. At that age human nature having grown out of childhood is putting out dim feelers all around, seeking nutriment, and the affections are seeking out for fresh objects. The whole nature is awakening to its full heritage. If you are to prepare them for religious development, you must recognise that they have bodies as well as souls; therefore the Church should not leave the carrying on of the education of the apprentice lads and girls merely in the hands of secular agencies or societies which have no connection with the Church of God. Christian men should feel that the education of these young people, to make them complete men and women, in body, mind, and soul, is the work of the Church. If she addresses them from all sides of their complex nature, the Church will guide them and bring them into her fold, and into the fold of Jesus Christ.

COLAR, MYSORE.—Mr. W. A. Redmond writes to us on Sept. 21, stating that refreshing rains had fallen, and they were relieved of the gloomy prospect of famine. Prices of food were high, but it was hoped they would soon fall, to some extent, at least.

WHAT IT DOES NOT MEAN.

It cannot be taken to mean that from all eternity, before man was created, God divided mankind into two classes according to a sovereign purpose determined simply by his own will—the one class to be the especial objects of his love and grace without any reference to anything in or of themselves, especially, without reference to any voluntary disposition they might have toward Him based on the revelation of Himself which He would make in time and to their sense and understanding, e.g., in the Law and the Gospel; the other class to be the objects of his wrath, if not solely, yet inevitably, because they were not included in the operation of his electing love and purpose of grace.

To say that from all eternity God has called an ever-increasing host of human beings into existence, foreseeing, if not ordaining, their fall and guilt in Adam, and then, if not ordaining, left them to eternal damnation for the sin of Adam, which they were not party to, or for the sinful nature which they inherited and the sins which they subsequently committed (not being able to avoid because of the sinful nature which they inherited and out of which no good thing could come), and for rejecting Christ, who never died for them, and was never offered to them in good faith—is to announce a doctrine that is not only abhorrent to the intuitions of justice which God Himself has implanted in the human soul; which is not in the Scriptures; and which I solemnly believe is a blasphemous misrepresentation not only of the grace of God, but of his entire nature. Such a doctrine cannot be true. It violates the word of God on every page of the Scriptures, being contrary to the entire revelation which He has made of Himself in Jesus Christ, in whom all the fulness of his grace and truth is embodied. It renders the tears and entreaties of Christ over lost souls a solemn mockery, and impeaches the sincerity of his tenderest appeals to the hearts and consciences of sinners. It will not do to cry out: "Nay, but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God?" This is to wrest the Scriptures and take the Word of God out of its proper context. It is to assume without warrant that the dogma of particular election is necessarily true, and then to defend it against all who may call it in question by hurling a text of Scripture with the intent to shut off all further search or inquiry into the meaning of the Word of God from the broadest examination of that Word. We do not hesitate to affirm that such a doctrine is contrary not only to the obvious meaning of the Word of God, but contrary to the entire spirit and intent of revelation as that revelation is seen in its clearest and most beautiful light in the face of Jesus Christ.

The doctrine of particular or individual election to salvation, and particular and individual reprobation to damnation, determined solely upon the sovereign will of God, without reference to any disposition in man toward Him, is based upon a false exegesis of the "election of grace." Then the doctrine of limited redemption was devised to avoid logical difficulties. These two doctrines have become wedded in a system of theology which is logical (starting from a false premise) rather than Scriptural, but has wrought untold mischief. The good and grand results ascribed by some to the doctrine of particular election, are due rather to the doctrine of grace, which, fortunately, has ever been preached in connection with that of particular election, and so has saved that false doctrine from working unmixed mischief—for which let us thank God.

WHAT ELECTION DOES MEAN.

It is not my purpose here and at this point to attempt an exhaustive discussion, but to suggest the line of interpretation which I believe to be the true one. Election, in my judgment, is that act of God which from all eternity He purposed in Himself and out of his free love alone, by which He chose that mankind should reach a final and glorious state of salvation, not on account of any inherent righteousness of their own, nor by means of any works of righteousness or self-training of their own, but solely and only through the acts of God's free grace consummated in Christ Jesus on his part, and through faith and voluntary union with Christ on the part of the sinner, being moved thereto by his Word and the co-operative agency and help of the Spirit of God. In other words, it means only, that God has chosen or elected that mankind should be saved through Jesus Christ on principles of grace, and not by any works of righteousness which they might do.

The following verses from the first chapter of Ephesians offer one of the best single commentaries on the matter, and as to the true meaning of election: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love." In this passage Paul teaches us what election is and where it is. It is God's gracious choice of sinners to "every spiritual blessing in heavenly places in Christ," and indicates God's plan of salvation for mankind, and not at all that he has chosen some men to salvation and left others to wrath.

But look for a moment at another Scripture which is most often quoted in support of the false doctrine: "Even so, then at this present time there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then, is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work. What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it" (Rom. xi. 5, 6, 7). Now, does this mean that God had from all eternity picked out a few persons from among the people of Israel whom he had ordained to eternal life "according to election," and saved them in Christ, and cast off all the rest of the Israelites, having first hardened their hearts and blinded their eyes according to his purpose of reprobation, so that they could not be saved even though they sought after it? Certainly not. God had not cast off the ancient people whom he had chosen to be the depositary of his law and the vehicle of his revelation until its completion in Christ, as Paul himself was a witness and proof, since he was an Israelite and was also saved in Christ. The rather it goes to show that Israel as a whole had sought for salvation on the ground of their own works of righteousness apart from Christ, hardening their hearts and blinding their eyes to the grace of God in Him, and had missed the election of grace in Him.

But not all Israel had so rejected Christ, even as not all Israel had bowed the knee to Baal in the days of Elijah the prophet. For now there was a remnant who were included in the present salvation "according to the election of grace," that is, according to God's plan of salvation. The bulk of the Jews were seeking it according to works of righteousness and not as it were by grace. These were they who had rejected Christ and so failed of salvation. This was, and still is, true of Israel as a nation, but there then was, and has always been, a remnant of Jews who have been saved according to election, or according to the plan of salvation by grace. Israel had a zeal for God, a great religious fervour in the outward show of worshipping God, but it was not according to knowledge. They had, while very zealous in their worship of God, entirely missed the apprehension of God's way of salvation in Christ. This is clearly and forcefully brought out in the previous chapter, from the first to the twelfth verses, where the mistake of Israel in seeking salvation according to the works of the law is contrasted with the plan of salvation as revealed in Christ, which was by faith, unto all and upon all who call on or believe in Him.

The doctrine of election, then, in accordance with this view of the matter, is simply and only the doctrine of salvation by grace as opposed to the doctrine of salvation by works, and has nothing whatever to do with an arbitrary choice of certain individuals to salvation for whom provision is made in Christ, to the exclusion of others for whom God has made no such provision, and had no thought or purpose of grace (2 Tim. i. 9, 10). None of the supposed difficulties in Rom. ix. and xi. are inconsistent with this view of the case.

In the September number of Dr. Pentecost's Monthly, Words and Weapons, from which serial we are extracting his views on Election, there is the following paragraph:—

> "We have received a brief and caustic letter from a venerable minister of the Gospel saying that he is much displeased with our Bible-reading on Election. He does not point out wherein we are wrong in our exposition of the Word of God, but simply denounces it as 'rank Arminianism,' and bids us send him no more copies of Words and Weapons. We are sorry that our aged brother is angry, and would suggest that he does not well to be so. He reminds us of the anger of Jonah because he knew that the Lord was 'a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness.' Our brother seems to quarrel with us, because we teach in accordance with God's Word that 'He will have all men to be saved,' and has therefore 'given Jesus Christ to be a ransom for all.' And lest he should hear any more of the good news for all sinners, he orders the paper stopped. Apart from the question at issue, what kind of courtesy is that which will not even so much as hear, or rather read, what a brother has to say on any great topic of truth if he is so unfortunate as not to be in accord with him? We did not know that we were 'a rank Arminian' or any other kind of Arminian; but we are not afraid of names, and so, in spite of this, we shall go on to the best of our ability teaching that 'God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life.' We do not and cannot believe, with God's blessed Word open before us, that God has by an eternal decree cut off any portion of the human race from salvation, making no provision for them in Christ, and then damning them to all eternity for not believing in a Saviour who never died for them and was only offered to them in mockery; and that He did all this only because He was a Sovereign and had a right to do what He pleased. Not only do we not believe it; but, so long as we have breath to speak and pen to write, we shall oppose it as being contrary to the Word of God and a scandal upon the Gospel."

GORDON HALL, GLOBE-ROAD, E.—Dr. Stephenson's latest venture has been safely launched with every prospect of a most successful career. At the opening service he explained a few points as to the purpose of the hall. They wanted it to be a meeting-room in which they should be freer to do whatever might be helpful and beneficial to the neighbourhood than the proprieties of an ordinary place of worship would allow. Then it was Gordon Hall, not to signify that they accepted all that great and good man's opinions, theological or otherwise, nor as expressing any political bias, but in memory of a great unselfish Englishman, who was ready to do, at any cost, his duty to God and his fellow men.—Methodist Times.

DR. PARKER ON THE BIBLE.

HE would not be unjust to his age who charged it as a Bible-neglecting age. The Church itself does not always read the Bible aright. The Bible is read in texts. He would not be too bold a man who affirmed that isolated texts have done more to hinder the progress of truth than any assault that was ever made upon Christianity from the outside. Men should humble themselves in crying penitence before God because they have torn the seamless robe and given it away in rags. The Bible is one; the Bible is a stupendous whole. Could we hear its cry it would be, "Read me; read me all; read me through in every page, line, word, and syllable. O earth, earth, earth! hear the Word of the Lord!"

The Christian should insist that the Church at least should follow no leadership but the Ark of the eternal testimony. Every college should rise up in the morning to do one thing—read the Bible. Every congress and conference should meet to do one thing—read the Bible. Every congregation should come together for one purpose—to read the Bible. This would absorb all the little rods of necromancers and wonder-workers, and would end in such practical mediums of expression as would suit the new life; and, though many mistakes of an external and temporary kind might be made, the outcome would be as the flowing of the river of God.

How can the Bible be read alone? This inquiry points to a sophism which is working great mischief in the Christian Church. A man will say, in some unworthy mood of sullenness or resentment, that he will remain at home and read his Bible. He may remain at home, but he cannot read his Bible in that temper. Compelled to remain at home by stress of circumstances, by infirmity, by ill-health in himself or in others, he may read the Bible alone, and God will treat him as if he were the whole assembly of the blessed, withholding nothing from his loving attention and gentle touch.

But there is a public reading of the Book—a common reading. Noble is the term—the Book of Common Prayer. That phrase is full of sacred import. There is common prayer, there is common reading, there is a public emphasis, there is a contagion of sympathy; there is given to the united perusal of the Bible answers which cannot be given to any solitary recluse who shuts himself away from the Church as if the Church were unworthy of his presence. Would we have the world cleansed, disinfected of all evil literature? Let the Bible be read interestingly, lovingly, with sympathy and with delight. Would we have great thoughts, noble purposes, sublime expectations which put out the little trials of the day? We must let the word of Christ dwell in us richly—an answer to every temptation, a light regularly as the night descends, a spring of water in a thirsty land.

Stand up for the Bible! Do not stand up for it without first reading it and becoming imbued with its spirit. Defend the Bible in the spirit of the Bible, which is a spirit of sovereign power and redeeming love. Punctuate your reading with your tears, and then, when you preach even the terror of the law, it will be to persuade men—fire used, not to burn but to enlighten, not to destroy but to cheer. My hope for the future of history is in the continuous, connected, and massive study of the Holy Scriptures.—Christian Chronicle.

DENYING SELF.

"MY all is on the altar, I'm waiting for the fire"—thus we often sing, and we have to wait and wait, for yet the fire comes not. Year in, year out, the same strain is heard, but the sacrifice remains unconsumed. May not the reason be that there is too much of the sentimental, and too little of the practical, in our ideas of consecration?—too little recognition of the fact that the very root-idea of consecration is the denial of self—the acknowledgment, practical and real, not sentimental or visionary, of the rights of another to dominate our wills, to regulate and rule in our lives?

Might not the sad history of Ananias and Sapphira be studied and prayed over by most of us with advantage? They have not been the only ones in all Church history who professed to give all, while they only gave a part. And while God's judgments against such deceptions may not seem so striking, because we have not eyes to see or hearts to understand, yet if we had eyes and hearts taught of God, might we not, in the blighted, wasted lives of many who once seemed to run well, see the recurrence of God's righteous judgments against all sham and deceit—against all want of sincerity. But we have grown accustomed to the tune, and so we go on with our singing, while the Lord often waits in vain for those actions that speak more musically in his ears than even our sweetest hymns can do.

We sing "my all" is on the altar, when we know that we have reserved houses, lands, wives, children—the best of our possessions, which we have no serious intention of ever devoting to the service of God. We sing "my all," but it only means that whatever can be conveniently spared will be given. Many of us seem to have lost the Scriptural ideal of self-denial altogether. We are sometimes led to think of ourselves as most self-denying—almost as meriting a martyr's crown—because we have not done something that would have been plainly sinful, or because we have done with our might something plainly commanded. Can this be all the Saviour meant by the command to take up the cross daily and follow Him? Surely not! It should be no cross, surely, to a redeemed soul to love to do that which is plainly right, and good, and true, or to avoid and hate that which will inevitably bring sorrow, and shame, and confusion of face. Our Lord surely meant something more than this when He urged on his followers self-denial and cross-bearing.

Here, as elsewhere, our Saviour Himself is our example. He did what He need not have done. He did not claim that which He might have claimed. He sought not his own. It was his own, but He gave up his "rights." This is his ideal of self-denial; this is what He expects from his followers.

Nor need we look far for opportunities of manifesting such denial of self. The world is a field wide enough for the most ambitious, and as needy as it is wide. There are all around us ample opportunities for ministering to its sorrows and to its woes—to go about like our Lord, doing good, seeking and saving the lost. But, to do this effectively, there must be more and more of the Master's spirit, and closer following of his footsteps.

What do we know of giving up our wills, our wishes, our plans, our pleasures, to please the Saviour in the persons of brethren or sisters who may be far from perfect in themselves, but who are nevertheless the dwelling place of Christ's spirit, who waits in them for our service? What do we know of bearing patiently and lovingly with the mistakes and the misunderstandings of those who are nearest to us, and who ought to know us best, but who, through physical or spiritual defect, will see things from a wrong point of view—will misunderstand us? What do we know of refusing to assert ourselves, and, like the Master, not letting our voices be heard—not speaking of rights, where they might be claimed and secured? What do we know, in short, of bearing all things—believing all things—hoping all things—enduring all things? By just so much do we know practically what denial of self means. By all means let us have the song and the sentiment. As we are at present constituted we are helped by both; but, with or without the song, let us have the reality—with or without the sentiment, let us have the thing itself.

Time rolls along, eternity is quickly closing around us, and our opportunites for self-denying service will soon have passed away for ever. Our place in glory will be greatly affected by the way we have shirked, or sought, this Christ-like path while here below. By every consideration, then, present and future, we are reminded of the importance of not merely singing about but of really denying self. "Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord."

CAMBRIAN ORPHANAGE AND HOME.

THE Home for Destitute Boys, 9, Moira-terrace, Splotlands, Cardiff, was opened on the 1st of August, 1884. During the last twelve months fifty-five boys and nine girls passed through the Homes. Nine of the elder lads, after a short residence in the Home, were sent to work in the colleries. A thorough home training is inculcated, a special feature being to make it as far as possible a well-regulated Christian home—a home to which the children may return should they be out of employment or ill. The children are taught all the plain work of a home life, their spiritual needs being considered of the first importance.

There are at least fifteen truly deserving lads, besides many others who are eligible, awaiting admission. Some of the children of the Home voluntarily give up on the first Friday of every month their substantial dinner, to assist in obtaining means for the admission of another inmate.

The Crèche has been of incalculable benefit to the wives of the working classes, children being cared for daily at a charge of 2d for a single child, and 1½d. each for more than one of the same family, with food inclusive. There has been since its commencement in February last, over 343 admissions, and the mothers express their gratitude in no measured terms for the care bestowed upon their infants. We purpose also providing a department for a Children's Protection Society, as an antidote for those little ones whose inhuman protectors compel them to patrol the streets seeking alms. Another department will be that of providing a home for young lads; they will be expected to partly support it themselves, and it will form a good nucleus for supplying employers with reliable boys.

CHRISTIAN UNION HALL, CAWNPORE, INDIA.

—This hall was originally opened by Rev. Dr. Somerville, as a branch of the Y.M.C A., about ten years ago, and it is still conducted on similar lines. It is now also used as a Soldiers' Prayer-room—the building which had been set apart for that purpose in 1867 by the military authories having been sold by Government in 1883. It is also used as a mission room, and natives and Europeans alike are welcomed there. During the present year the hall was placed in the market, and, to prevent its being sold for commercial purposes, those interested in the Lord's work were compelled to buy it. The owner offered it at half-price to the Association, and so made the purchase practicable. The balance now wanted is £200, about £100 having been raised by the members of the Union. The work carried on in this hall is purely evangelistic, and it is a general centre for Christian work in Cawnpore.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we shall give a portrait of Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, with outline sketch of his remarkable career, and report of his address at the recent Clifton Conference.

We learn, with the most sincere regret, that the Orphan Homes, Southwark, under the care of our devoted sister, Miss Charlotte Sharman, are in urgent need of monetary help. It is no easy matter to feed and clothe 250 growing girls from week to week, and we trust many of our readers will feel it a privilege to assist Miss Sharman in this time of her need.

In a communication addressed to the Board of Guardians of the Bromley Union, Sir John Lennard, Chairman of the Kent General Sessions, states that in the Kent County Asylum the use of stimulants has been entirely abolished. The inmates were reported to be far more orderly than before, and an improvement all round was noticeable. As we mentioned last week, the Bromley Guardians are considering whether they should not discontinue the distribution of stimulants to the out-door poor. Sir John does not, however, give them much encouragement from an economical standpoint. He says he "does not anticipate that the Guardians would make a great saving, as medical experience went to show that persons required more to eat without stimulants than they did when they took them."

This is a thesis which is open to grave question; but, if it were true, the Guardians might look at the question from a somewhat broader standpoint. There is no factor more potent in the creation of pauperism than is the drink traffic. Sir John Lennard also would do well to bear in mind that the asylums would have far fewer tenants if our national drink bill were lessened. In one county alone in twelve months 102,694 paupers, and 4706 lunatics owed their lunacy and pauperism directly to intoxicating drink, and the poor and police rates were swollen immensely in consequence. Granting that Sir John's contention is correct, it would be found much cheaper in the end to satisfy healthy hunger rather than unhealthy craving for stimulants.

"Cruel cheapness" continues to engulf its victims. Recently, during the hearing of an action at Glasgow, it transpired that pinafore and shirt makers in that city earn from two to three shillings per week for six days' labour at sewing machines, the day's work covering nine hours! Cheapness has its interested advocates, but there are few people who would be so shameless as to defend wages of less than one halfpenny per hour as proper remuneration for girls of from fifteen to eighteen years of age.

An "employer of labour," who was concerned in the case, stated that "crowds of girls would come for three shillings per week." One cannot help asking where they would come from and where they would go to. Assuming that some of them are without parents, or away from home, it is impossible to avoid the terrible conclusion that cheapness and competition force them either to starve upon fourpence, or, at best, sixpence per day, or to supplement the pittance by other earnings, about which a large section of society declines to exercise its conscience.

The occupation of "Devil's Advocate" does not appear to be confined to the functionary who takes part in the proceedings when a Romish saint is canonised. Recently two of the leading novelists have taken upon themselves the somewhat unsavoury task of depreciating the English novel, and of praising the foreign filth of the realistic and "art for art's sake" school. That one of these writers should find the average English novel, silly and weak as it is, too moral for her taste is not to be wondered at, for her own books, clever though they may be, are not unworthy of companionship with the yellow-backed volumes which she praises; but that the other writer should descend from a well-earned position to defend and praise unhealthy fiction is greatly to be deplored.

A writer under such circumstances incurs a terrible responsibility, for there can be only one result from advocacy of the kind. Here and there a person may be found who can face sewer gas with seeming impunity, but to most people the noxious effluvium is highly deleterious, if not fatal, and it is criminal to lead people out of their way into the sphere of its deadly influence.

Dr. Vaughan, in a noble sermon preached in the Temple Church in June, 1875, upon the subject of Vivisection, introduced, in a very forcible manner, one or two points of view which are generally overlooked in the consideration of the question. Most people look at vivisection from the point of view of the animal operated upon, their objection to the operations being based upon the fact that such operations of necessity involve the infliction of much needless suffering. Dr. Vaughan, although by no means ignoring that essential view, ventured to deal with the subject from a somewhat opposite position.

"If the morality is settled as regards the victim, how stands it as to the operator? Is it for his good that this poor abject life be slowly scooped away without, or even with, a benevolent purpose?" the preacher asked very pertinently, and he went on to urge that the aspect of the whole question depends upon other considerations, something of course turning upon the definiteness of the end made for:—

> "Suffering inflicted for the bare chance that something may come of it, suffering inflicted on peradventure and in the dark, on the speculation that nature may reveal this, that, or anything, you know not and care not what, to a blind and unscrupulous explorer—this is impiety. God who gave your life gave that other, and He gave it not to you but to the other."

Most people will admit that discovery alone is not a sufficient justification for such detestable cruelty as that which was referred to in these columns last week. Science does not supersede morality, and, even if it did, there can be no reasonable defence made of acts of cruelty performed not under the guidance of science, but in search of its very rudiments.

Preaching recently upon the text, "There is more joy in Heaven upon one sinner that doeth penance, than upon ninety-nine just who need not penance," Dr. Croke, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cashel, said:—"Readily accepting what faith teaches, we believe that God punishes sin everlastingly in the next life." And again, "our holy religion represents a good and a merciful God punishing sin everlastingly in the next life."

Some of the hearers must have gone away somewhat puzzled; for, doubtless, many of them had paid money to get the souls of their deceased relatives out of Purgatory, the place described by Cardinal Newman as "the penal waters," dipped in which, the soul lulled, and nursed, and tended by angels, and "sinking deep, deeper, into the dim distance," shall be aided by "Masses on the earth."

A Wesleyan minister writes to The Methodist Times suggesting that, in view of the possible conviction of Mr. Stead and his co-defendants at the Old Bailey, petitions to the Queen and the Home Secretary should be prepared, circulated throughout the country, and extensively signed, requesting the sentence to be remitted. The writer says:—

> "Even if there be no conviction, the labour would not be lost, for it would have shown the Government officials that the Christian portion of the community are on the alert and will not allow persecutions of this kind to be quietly carried on. We in the North are boiling over with indignation at this infamous burlesque of justice."

Mr. William Catlin, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N., writes, strongly urging on heads of missions in large cities to organise cheap or free entertainments for the working classes during the winter, as an antidote to the public-house. He recommends descriptive lectures with dissolving views. Mr. Catlin has had large experience in this matter, and will be glad to give any advice or assistance to those engaged in mission work.

For several weeks past we have been called to witness the agitation going on in the Balkan Peninsula. This means much more than appears. It means the break-up of the Turkish Empire, and the beginning of the end is the break-up of European Turkey. There is reason to expect that Servia and Montenegro will go; then Epirus and Macedonia will break away, and other revolutions will follow. Corrupt Pashas, a discontented army, peoples robbed and spoiled, and a degraded Court, portend violent commotions far and wide. The scheme of prophecy has been held to demand the destruction of Mohammedan authority. This is hastening. The world is ruled in the interests of Christ's kingdom.

The controversy to which we recently referred on the refusal of a ministerial association to admit a young minister at Exmouth to its fellowship has still been carried on in The Nonconformist and Independent. The young minister has set forth his theology. He does not believe in the doctrine of substitution, nor in any justification except a personal righteousness, nor in any divinity of Christ, except in his character, nor does he "fasten his faith on the Bible," which he simply regards as more inspired than other books, which means that the difference is merely one of degree. The gravity of the matter to all Christians is in the two facts—that a minister with such a creed is sent forth with a credential from a college which trains young men for the New Testament ministry, and that pastors in important towns in England have covered this young minister with the influence of their names. The Western Congregationalists have taken a very different course.

A "Quiet Day" is a curious term to be applied to a meeting of the clergy lately in St. Asaph Cathedral where there were services from morning till night; but the idea was a good one, for the services were exclusively for the quickening of the spiritual life of the clergy. We quote a passage from an appropriate address on the occasion:—

> "Preaching, to be successful, must (1) spring from a love of Christ; (2) must be scholar-like, dogmatic, doctrinal, and definite. The preacher must not be a philosopher in search of truth, but a steward charged with a supreme revelation to be handed on untouched and unimpaired. He must get rid of self-consciousness, self-advertisement, and self-promotion."

One of the most profound addresses on Bible interpretation at the Church Congress was delivered by Canon Westcott. The Bible was a living voice speaking to men of all times; its essential foundation lies deep in the unity of human life; relating to the Divine education of the world, it is harmonious in all its parts; the letter of Scripture must be determined like that of any other book, but this done, there will be found a meaning of the prophetic message for every generation. The Bible is one temple filled with the presence of God; not "a last tattered letter from a parent absent in a foreign land," but an ever fresh declaration of his present power.

On Gospel work among men Mr. Everard said:—"Aim at nothing short of heart conversion to God; instead of the Confessional let the clergyman's study be open to every man who needs counsel; clear yourselves of clericalism, and be perfectly natural and free with men." Canon Thynne, speaking of rescue-work, said the drawing-room must be cleansed as well as the street. Mr. Billing urged meetings with women in the afternoon, when they were free from drink, rather than at night. Mr. Foster insisted that the first thing about district work was to get the man, and then the mission-room.

The Guardian of the 14th instant pertinently asks (and the questions bear upon all these October assemblies, and on other Conferences) whether the work is not so much cut and dried beforehand as not to allow adequate room for discussion and collision of mind with mind; and also whether more should not be made of valuable suggestions in papers and speeches. Certainly assemblies that cost so much in mind, time, and money, might be expected to be much more fruitful afterwards than they are.

At the Church Congress many hailed with intense satisfaction the denunciation by Mr. Horsley, a Royal Academician, of the study of the nude in modern art. It was to be traced to the present fashion of infidelity, it fostered in unclothed models a debasing immorality, and in lady artists was nothing short of a madness. Not long ago certain journals were professedly alarmed lest the revelations in The Pall Mall Gazette should promote vice, while a little time before these same journals had only contempt for the protest of a "British Matron" in The Times, against the perpetual intrusion in the Royal Academy of naked figures. Thank God, an eminent artist has at length, in burning words of warning and indignation, denounced what it is strange Christian people have endured.

Mr. Horsley notes: "The curious unanimity with which the various writers, ignoring the use of the good English word 'naked,' adopt expressions of French origin—'nude' and 'undraped,' euphemistic verbiage, evidently intended to partially clothe the naked fact it contains."

This remark is but one more endorsement of old Bengel's wise advice to call a spade a spade. Mr. Horsley adds:—

> "To put the case plainly from a Christian point of view: if pictures or statues of naked women are to be executed, living naked women must be employed as models; but where is the justification in God's sight for those who induce women so to ignore their natural modesty, and quench their sense of true shame as to expose their nakedness before men, and thus destroy all that is pure and lovely in their womanhood? . . . ."

Some of the facts stated in illustration give a very lurid answer to this question.

The following passage has been sneered at by a Society journal; we heartily thank Mr. Horsley for it:—

> "May I not, in all reverence, say that clothedness is a distinct type and feature of our Christian faith: for we worship One who, in the Apocalypt vision, was seen clothed from head to foot, who himself enforced the duty of clothing the naked, and who permitted the record of that touching evidence of returning sanity to the demoniac of the tombs in that he sat at his feet 'clothed and in his right mind'?

It might have been added, that while in Genesis the first man in his best estate was naked, the Son of Man in the Apocalypse appears clothed in a garment down to the foot.

It is not difficult in the light of this discussion to understand the command of God to his people Israel:—

> "When ye are passed over Jordan into the land of Canaan, then ye shall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images" (Num. xxxiii. 51, 52.)

It is very intelligible why the day of the Lord of Hosts shall be upon all "pictures of desire," and "the loftiness of man bowed down in that day, when Jehovah alone shall be exalted" (Isa. ii.).

The Evangelical Alliance have issued their usual invitation for the annual week of united and universal prayer, at the commencement of the year, January 3—10. In their circular the Committee say:—

> "Never was a time, perhaps, when God's people had more need, with prayer and supplication and thanksgiving, to spread forth their hands towards heaven. We live in wonderful days. Men go to and fro, and knowledge increases everywhere. Is it to be said that while the lightning encompasses the earth with its belt of wire, and while men have frequent and almost instantaneous communications with each other in far-off regions of the globe, Christians make but feeble use of that more wonderful power of prayer, by which they communicate with heaven? Hitherto the Divine blessing has rested remarkably upon the universal Week of Prayer. Year after year we receive renewed tokens of increasing interest in these gatherings. The zone of supplication and thanksgiving is ever widening, so that it encompasses more and more the peoples and the countries of the whole earth. God in his mercy grant that our fervent and united prayers may, in the chain of his marvellous providence, prepare the way for the conversion of the nations, for the more speedy manifestation of the kingdom of his dear Son, and for the creation of all things anew in Christ."

Sermons will be preached on January 3 and 10, while the respective topics of prayer and exhortation for the intervening days will be, Praise and Thanksgiving, Humiliation and Confession, the Church and the Family, Home and Foreign Missions, Nations and Governments, the Christian Life.

The meetings of the Baptist Union, at Swansea, have been eminently successful, and it is said, by the special correspondent of a contemporary, that the autumnal Congregational Meetings at Hanley have, in deep feeling and interest, exceeded anything previously witnessed or experienced. We append a few notes on some of the topics discussed at the latter assembly.

Dr. Fairbairn spoke, with powerful effect, on the "New Sacerdotalism" with which Christianity now stands in conflict; which builds faith not in God, but on the Church, and, instead of emphasising truth, emphasises rites and symbols. This must be met by a "New Puritanism" which shall set God against human organisations. But is either "new"? Is it not the old controversy—the traditions of men, instead of unswerving loyalty to the Lord? Well, however, is it that such a subject has had such an expounder.

An important paper drew attention to the very serious lapses going on in Church membership, which were traced among other causes to fashion, drinking customs, and unscriptural marriages. We would add, Should not all churches think more carefully about admitting those who have only received "seed by the wayside?" Another paper discussed wisely the subject of Recreations, and very properly accentuated the importance of selecting these according to the precepts of Scripture. There may, however, be a very grave doubt whether churches should, as was argued, provide recreative pleasures and amusements. It is theirs to cultivate in their members a true spiritual taste.

Dr. Dale made an excellent point when he spoke of preachers too often being earnest when they were not orthodox, and when orthodox not earnest; and Mr. J. G. Rogers struck a true note when he said that, after all discussions, the grand thing wanted was the revival of spiritual godliness in the hearts of the people.

The state of Ireland socially, politically, financially, and religiously, demands the earnest prayers of all Christians. The papers teem with political nostrums for settling or counteracting the disturbances. To many the idea is occurring that an appeal to God rather than to man is the true remedy. The Remembrancer Card of the "Prayer Union for Ireland" is reprinted, and may be obtained at this office (1½d. each, or 4d. per dozen). The members of this Union ought to be numbered by the 100,000, considering the wide-spread suffering, alarm, and loss in Ireland, and the very general interest and sympathy in England.

A correspondent draws attention to the fact that the two men who have gained the highest places in the national esteem during the last half-century—Gordon and Shaftesbury—were eminently distinguished for personal piety and purity of life. This is indeed an encouraging fact, amid many that would tend to discourage the true reformers of the time. In the future, even more than in the past, personal worth, we trust, will count far higher than intellectual capacity where it is not allied to holy living.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY of the Fulton-street Noon Prayer-Meeting was held on Sept. 23. It was largely attended, business men leaving their offices and stores to spend an hour and a half rejoicing over God's goodness as manifested in the history of the prayer-meeting. Professor Simpson, of Edinburgh, was among the audience, and was invited to speak. He thought that stress should be laid upon the union of praise. True Christians were ever ready to praise God, no matter where the windows of heaven were opened, and the Divine blessing was outpoured. Results of the Fulton-street Prayer-Meeting had been realised in Scotland, and Christians there could praise God for its establishment with Christians in America. Mention was made of the very marked work of grace that directly and indirectly followed Messrs. Moody and Sankey's last visit to the University towns of England.

CONFESSING JESUS AS LORD.

YOU have, in a recent issue, a very interesting note regarding a change in the Revised Version of Rom. x. 9: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord." You justly say it "has not been sufficiently noticed." It so happened that that passage fell to be read by me this morning, and not till I saw your note had I observed the change. You go on to say:—

> "From the margin we learn that some ancient authorities give it, 'If thou shalt confess the word with thy mouth that Jesus is Lord.' To confess the Lord Jesus may not to some mean much, but to confess the risen Jesus as Lord in a Divine sense, and to accept with the heart all the new life of loyalty that the belief carries, is a much fuller and more definite statement. And this was 'the word' the Apostles taught."

With reference to the marginal reading, the editor of the Oxford edition of the parallel New Testament, Greek and English, says that "an attempt is made to discriminate the various kinds and degrees of authority which the Revisers ascribe to the readings noticed in the margin." I had the curiosity to turn up the copies of the three oldest manuscripts in existence, the Sinaitic, Vatican, and Alexandrian, and was interested to find that the marginal reading, "confess the word with thy mouth that Jesus is the Lord," is found in the two former and more ancient. The Alexandrian has the reading which the translators of the Authorised Version adopted, and which the Revisers have retained, although changing the rendering as you indicate. (Query: perhaps under the influence of their marginal reading?)

Any of your readers who have seen Dean Burgon's furious onslaught on the Revisers will remember how he denounces them for their marked preference of the two older MSS. If I mistake not, it is not often that they reject a reading in which these two agree, unless under a supposed great preponderance of authority against it. How the case stands in the verse in question I am unable to say. But certain it is that, whether or no it was so written by Paul in this passage, the word which he and his fellow Apostles taught was that "Jesus is Lord." Is the same so emphatically and so constantly taught now in all pulpits, even of "orthodox" denominations? Does this teaching pervade the publications of certain eminent authors reputedly evangelical? Even where the deity of Jesus Christ is not denied there is wanting evidence of its being inwrought into the theological system and spiritual consciousness of these writers. This is betrayed by the absence of the very term "Lord."

Apostles sometimes said "Jesus," sometimes "Christ," sometimes "Jesus Christ;" but many a time also "the Lord Jesus," "the Lord Christ," "the Lord Jesus Christ," or simply "the Lord." Prophets in vision, as David in the 110th Psalm, called Him "Lord." Angels called Him "Lord,"—"Come, see the place where the Lord lay." Do those who claim to be "advanced thinkers" as frequently speak of Him under that designation? We believe not. A whole volume has been written about "Christ," having in it much that is valuable, but never once is the subject of it called "the Lord."

You justly say Evangelical Protestantism cannot hold together without the corner-stone of this vital doctrine. There are those who have no idea that they have left that corner-stone out of their theological "thought" (as the cant phrase goes), who are unconsciously, it may be, on the way to it. And that may perhaps be indicated by such a remarkable dropping of the term of supreme dignity. But is there no other and previous indication? There is, and one very noteworthy—the giving up of a vicarious atonement. Not a few imagine they can hold the divinity (they do not like to say deity) of Christ, while they repudiate the vicarious atonement. It is a great mistake. If it were not to offer a vicarious atonement, the Christ needed not to be Divine. When the one is given up, the necessity for the other disappears. The old adage of the Latin poet holds good:—

and so they cease speaking of Him as "Lord." By and by, their successors or pupils in advanced thought, if not themselves, embrace the correlate of the two distinguishing doctrines of Unitarianism, and renounce the Divinity of Christ.

How striking the warning of a profound and acute theologian not long since in our midst, the late Dr. Candlish:—"Modern teachers in the same line," he says, "think that they may hold the one without the other. But I am mistaken if any incarnation they may thus hold does not slip insensibly, in their handling of it, into some modification, suited to modern turns of thought, of the old vague notion of a certain Divinity being in every man; and in some one man perhaps pre-eminently as the type and model of perfect manhood." Do not present events in the history of our Churches show that this eminent servant of Christ was not mistaken?

MERCATOR.

OUR NATIONAL EDUCATION.

SIR,—The approaching election of the School Board naturally draws general attention to the subject of education, and to the work of the Board in particular.

Much has been said about the enormous cost of these schools; but, if all this money is wisely and rightly applied, if these schools are indeed forming and raising the moral tone and character of the people, then no cost can be too great. For it is only through the medium of their character that the condition of the people can be really improved.

It may, then, be well to glance at the work of the past fifteen years, to ascertain how far the character has been formed and trained in the bulk of those now leaving our schools, and to consider how far we have succeeded, and where and how we have failed, in this all-important task of educating the rising generation.

At the outset we need to remember that knowledge is not of itself education. Though we be "gorged with knowledge" this alone will not make us useful and honourable citizens. The power to solve any number of equations, or to repeat all the successive kings or battles of a nation is useful, and the process of gaining that power has strengthened the memory; but it has done nothing more.

Education, rightly understood, is the fitting the child for the future duties of life, and the one chief point is to instil a high principle, a thorough understanding of "right and wrong;" to teach the value of truth and uprightness, and of real earnestness; that whatever we do we must do with all our might. This part of education is apt to be passed over. It cannot be tested by the examiner in the same way that mere head-knowledge can be, and yet without it no amount of knowledge is of real avail in after life.

In the training of the teachers of these schools, one trembles lest in the rush and strain of grasping all that is necessary for them to obtain their certificates, this all-important part of their future work, the necessity of forming the mind and character of the children, should be entirely forgotten. Are we sufficiently careful to teach them this, and the responsibility that will rest upon them?

In all our business transactions, in our dealings with tradesmen, in our domestic servants, we value and we expect integrity, honesty, and uprightness; we mourn that it is so seldom found, and yet we are content to banish from our schools all teaching of the kind.

Wherever we go, this lack of true honesty is a lamentable feature. The master complains that scarcely one man in ten will do a good day's work unless he is there to watch. It is acknowledged everywhere that a man does twice as much when paid "by the piece" as when engaged by the day. The warehouseman offers a price for which he knows the goods cannot be made, and the poor workman is hence almost compelled to put in "scamped" work. The maid-servant thinks it no crime to be idle the moment her mistress is gone. Almost everywhere we find dishonest work, that is, work carelessly or slowly done, or done without a sense of duty. Employers too often give only the very smallest pay, and in return it is thought no harm to rob them a little.

Then, to look at another feature. Only this last week, a poor man suffering from bronchitis, and thus unable to follow his trade more than half the time, was in difficulties, but his son who lived at home and gave up 5s. out of his weekly 20s. could not see that he was called upon to give more, and allowed his father to apply for charity. A few weeks ago a young servant spent 7s. 6d. in a new hat, when her mother was wanting bread.

Nay, we cannot go amongst the poor at all without realising how very much there is that they need to be taught of the higher kind of knowledge.

So many people fail in life for lack of thoroughness. It would seem that we need to teach all boys and girls some one practical thing thoroughly. Let the girls be taught thoroughly to sew or to cook, or to make baskets, and the boys be taught either carpentering or tailoring, or mat making, it matters not much what, only let them be taught to do that one thing really well, and the amount of thinking and of application that it will necessitate, as well as the power and usefulness it will create in the hands, will be of inestimable value in whatever they may afterwards be required to learn.

One of our noted physicians has told us that in three hours' daily steady application the mind of a child will grasp all that it is able; that remaining for a second three hours at study is of no real mental gain. Then, let the morning hours be given to study, and let the afternoons be devoted to some practical training, which, be it what it may, must be thorough of its kind. Whatever trade or branch of work may be chosen, it would be no difficult matter to make it self-supporting, and it is well to remember that no handicraft can be taught without a great deal of incidental knowledge being acquired.

Another fact to mourn over in those who leave our schools is the dislike of manual work, and its imaginary degradation. We need in some way to teach the nobility of work. We wish by education to create intelligent housemaids and carpenters, and not to raise a community who think it a disgrace to be a carpenter or a housemaid. Knowledge of itself is worthless. I once knew a poor cattle drover, whose only shelter for years was a stable, who had been Second Wrangler, and who could recite Horace by the hour. Knowledge had done nothing for him—being alone.

One marked result of the Board Schools, we have been told, is the much fewer number of committals for fraud, and for this we cannot be too thankful. This may well give us hope for the future. Yet of what avail is it, were there no crimes of fraud, so long as the vices of drunkenness and dissipation are rife in the land; and the lack of industry and filial affection so common?

Let us spare no pains to ascertain that we are teaching our children the truer, higher knowledge, without which "all the ologies" are of no value whatever. Yours faithfully, Q. Q.

THE WORKING GIRLS form a distinct class: they earn their livelihood by manual labour. Occupied fully in the day, their evenings are usually at their own disposal. The question arises, Where do they spend their evenings? What are their amusements, and are they of a healthy character? for amusements they will have, and that of a questionable kind, if counter-attractions of a better kind are not provided. Are there Christian friends and workers who take a special interest in them, and who, by kindness and sympathy, and wise endeavour, do all they can to make them good daughters whilst remaining under the parents' care, and good wives and mothers when they have homes of their own?—Cloudesley Institute Report.

VISITS TO OUR CHILDREN IN CANADIAN HOMES.

AFTER having had the privilege for some years of participating in the blessed work n East London, listening to many tales of grief and woe, sympathising with the sorrowing, and rescuing the orphan and the destitute, it is a real joy to witness what has justly been called the "bright side" in Canada. Those who have only heard of the good homes which have opened up during past years for the little ones, can form but a faint idea of the wonderful change in the ives of the children—the peaceful farmhouse home, instead of the lodging-house with its terrible associations, or the miserable room destitute of food or furniture; the pure, life-giving breezes, bright sunshine and green fields around he homestead, instead of the heavy, impure tmosphere of close streets, crowded thickly ogether in our great city; the song of the birds and the cheery chirp of the grasshopper, ntead of the foul language which pollutes our very surroundings.

Some of these homes we have been privileged o visit, and a short account may help to cheer hose who have aided us by their prayers and by heir gifts.

We started at eight a m. on a lovely morning n August, to visit a few of those who had been brought away from the temptations and sorrows of the old country, and who had been transplanted to this new and good land. The first hing which strikes an English person is the different way in which the country is laid out—he roads were all surveyed before the land was cleared and the farms built, so there are order and method in the way it is done. The roads are usually quite straight, and are situated a mile and a quarter apart, while the farms, with heir waving fields of golden grain, lie between.

We travelled for twelve miles on one of these traight roads, which, if we could have followed ts whole course, would have brought us to the Georgian Bay on the north, and Lake Erie on he south. For a few miles our road lay by a swamp with its wealth of black ash, soft maple-trees, &c. We then passed flourishing fields of lax, some of them already reaped, or rather orn up by the roots, and bound in sheaves, and arge tracts of spring wheat, which would soon be ready for the sickle.

Twelve miles' steady driving brought us to he farm where J. B—— is placed. He was the eldest of eight children. There was no opening o be found in London for this manly, noble boy, and very thankfully did his care-worn mother accept Miss Macpherson's offer to give him a tart in Canada.

In this country the farmers, though many of hem are well educated and refined, are not ashamed to work themselves at the head of their men and we found Mr. R—— busy directing the making of bricks and tiles for draining the land, which he carries on in addition to his farm. He led us to the cosy little farmhouse, which was built off the road a quarter of a mile, where we found his young wife and her sister, busily engaged in cooking the dinner. They apologised for being late with what English people would call a very early midday meal. The fact was they had been wiled away from heir cooking, to practise some new songs on he beautiful full-toned little organ, which stood in the best parlour. Mrs. R—— told us he had been a school-teacher before her marriage; and now there was one in the house on whom her powers of instruction could be lavished, for presently a bonny rosy girl, her face beaming with happiness, ran forward, and throwing her arms round us, exclaimed: "Oh! you're from the Home. I'm getting on first rate." F—— had not got on first-rate in the old country, and those who know something of the awful snares into which young girls are constantly falling in England will rejoice with us that here was another rescued to become a happy and useful woman in Canada.

Then in came J——, grown tall and strong, and sunburnt with honest healthy labour. He said that his brother A—— was only about half a mile from him on the next farm, and that they often met.

After dinner we drove on to A——'s home, where we found him ploughing with his master, who is the brother of J——'s "boss."

Mrs. J. R—— is a bright sunny-faced young lady, one of the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. C——, who took little F. N——. Both master and mistress spoke in exalted terms of A——, saying that they could not possibly have a better boy. He seemed equally fond of them, and quite at home in the house, and one of the family; was so pleased to talk about the dear Hackney Home and the friends there.

We could not stay long at this place, having several others to visit before the day began to wane; so we entered the buggy again, and drove a couple of miles to another pleasant farm, the home of a boy and girl who came out last year. Arriving at Mrs. R——'s, all was quiet, and we thought no one was at home, but presently the dear old lady appeared with little F. B——, dressed in a pretty pink frock. This was the adopted grandchild, aged seven, a motherless child from East London; her gleeful face, rosy and healthy, formed a wonderful contrast to the sad, white, puny little creature whom we well remembered some eighteen months ago at Spitalfields. Mrs. R—— chatted to us of her numerous grown-up family—some far away in Manitoba, others owning farms near, while her own farm was worked by two sons and our own boy E——. Just now they were pulling peas in the field, but the news soon reached E—— that "Home" friends had arrived, so he hastened to the house and gave us a warm welcome. He was one of three brothers who were taken by Miss Macpherson on their being left complete orphans. The poor boys had come to the Training Home on the very day that their father was buried, and their pale faces and sorrowful looks had won deep sympathy from all. Now here was the second boy, ruddy, and jolly, and strong, proud of being able to do so much work on a farm, and bearing a splendid character.

Promising to return for tea, we drove off again a short distance through a lovely stretch of "Bush," to the farm where little A—— is adopted by a warm-hearted Christian woman. The home looked like one of peace and rest, and, as it seemed to nestle down among the green fields, bathed in the warm glow of a Canadian summer afternoon, while the gentle rustle of the Bush trees kept up a continual soft murmur, we thought, "What a sweet place for a child to grow up in!" A—— was only six years old, but tall for her age, and growing very pretty. She told us about her horses, and their names, "Jessie," "Polly," &c., and how she helped to feed them every day. Our thoughts travelled back to the day when A—— was first brought to Miss Macpherson by her widowed mother, and more than an hour was spent in considering how she could best be helped. Very gratefully she gave up this little one that A—— might follow her elder sister and brother, who had already been in Canada some years, and now we heard that the sister had just been here on a week's visit to little A——, and intended coming again whenever she could get a holiday.

The next farm visited was about a mile off in another direction. We saw at a little distance men engaged in the harvest-field, and on arriving at the house were told that our boy was at work there. We, therefore, wended our way to the field, climbing over two or three fences on our way, and came upon J. J—— as he was busy binding sheaves of barley, while his master drove the reaper. He had been left a lone orphan three years previously, and had been brought out soon after and placed with this farmer, who evidently valued him highly, and to whom he was in every respect a son and a steady helper in all farm work.

After visiting another boy, the youngest of the before-mentioned three orphan brothers, who seemed quite at home and happy with a kind-hearted German family, the shades of evening began to gather around us, so we drove on another mile or two to a pleasant homestead, intending to remain the night, where resides an old Scotchman and his wife with several grown-up sons and daughters. They were just leaving off work as we arrived. The nineteen cows had been milked, and heavy loads of wheat and barley had been stored in the large barn, ready for thrashing as soon as the remaining fields should be reaped. The mother led us into the best parlour, well-carpeted and replenished with every comfort, while she sent for little F——, a fatherless boy from East London, who had two years previously been on the brink of ruin through refusing to go to school, and getting with bad companions. He soon came running in, rosy and sunburnt, thoroughly engrossed with his present surroundings, the calves, horses, and the nice new brick house which was gradually rising a little way off, which was to be their new home. He was the pet of the family, and it seemed almost as if he might be in danger of being spoiled, were it not for the wise, careful training of the mother, a truly godly woman. A pleasant social hour was spent with the gathered family, one of the daughters giving us quite a musical entertainment on the organ, whilst her brother accompanied her on the violin, and the evening closed with reading and prayer by the "visitor," Mr. F. A——.

We left the busy town of Stratford early this morning, and, after about two hours' journey by rail, reached the quiet village of ——. We soon arrived at the pretty little country house situated at the top of the hill, surrounded by green fields and fine patches of woodland. In the front is a smooth lawn and broad carriage drive; at the back a prolific vegetable garden, potatoes, tomatoes, marrows and cucumbers, growing and ripening in great abundance, making us wish we could hand over some to the poor people in East London. This is the happy home of three of our girls. The youngest, a bright, merry, curly-headed little girl of seven, with sparkling blue eyes, full of life and vigour, comes forward to greet us, with two little companions, a boy and girl, the children of a wealthy family near by. E—— has been a year in this peaceful home, and she chats very brightly about "our chickens" and "our flowers." Then she brings her copybook to show how nicely she is beginning to write, though only seven years of age—though this is holiday time, she carries on some of her youthful studies at home, under the kind lady's supervision. Then the bankbook is proudly shown, in which is entered one whole dollar to her account, instead of being spent in candies and foolish trifles. Tired at last with play with the little friends, she comes to sit demurely at our side with her worsted work. She is busy grounding a pair of slippers with crimson wool for Mr. ——, and very neatly and carefully the work is done. Whilst sitting together so happily, we look back to the time when this little one was first brought to Miss Macpherson in London, by her only relative, a young aunt in service. Left an orphan at the tender age of five, she had been placed by her aunt all unwittingly in a Romanist orphanage, and we tremble at the thought of what her after-life might have been, had not the payment been so high that the aunt could not keep it up, and after diligent inquiry heard, to her great joy, of our free East-end Home.

Little E—— was very subdued on first being received. She seemed afraid to run about, or even to laugh; but she soon found she was surrounded by those who loved her, and liked to see her merry and happy, so all the bright, natural ways of childhood gradually came back to her. A month after, her aunt called to inquire how she was getting on; she was lost in wonder at the change, repeatedly saying she would not have known E—— to be the same child.

We remember, when quite young, being told by a friend that we ought to have an object in life, and often we puzzled over this exhortation, and wondered as to its meaning. But little E—— and her life here just illustrates our friend's wish for us many years ago. E——, though only seven years old, has an object in life. She is being trained to work for Jesus when she grows up, and she knows it. Her lessons, and the many useful things she is gradually being taught, are all arranged with this end in view, that if God spares her, she shall become a useful "worker."

The next inmate, who still considers the Home of Industry as her first home, is a tall, fine, intelligent girl of twelve. It is only fourteen months since she stood in our business room at the old Home, pleading for admission, her face bathed in tears. Poor little girl! her mother and little baby sister had died four years previously; the wretched father, who had never attempted to support his family, had deserted her, and she was left in the hands of the people with whom they had lodged.

The kind-hearted landlady, who had nursed the mother during her last illness, kept D—— as long as possible, but her husband becoming out of work, and bread being hard to earn, some other home had to be sought for her.

We often hear in Canada of the difficulty in getting good servants, or anyone to help the weary house-mother with her never-ceasing round of work. But in this house there is a refined, ladylike young person, skilled in the art of Canadian cooking, washing, ironing, &c., who was formerly one of our girls. She has been here several years, and, with her savings, has helped to bring out her parents from England, who are now living in a snug little house in a town five miles off, where her father carries on his trade of shoemaking, and rejoices in having all his children well placed out near him. We are glad to say this is not the only case where one of our children has contributed towards the emigration of loved parents. A father, mother, and little brother, accompanied us on the last voyage, to join their son, who came out to Canada with Miss Macpherson twelve years ago, and who is now married and has a comfortable little home. A few days since, he called upon Mr. and Mrs. Merry to consult them about the purchase of a farm, and amused us by telling of his father, who, though getting old and feeble, had insisted on trying his hand at his son's plough.

GOSPEL WORKERS IN BRITTANY.

TO those of your readers who know anything of Brittany—of its being the stronghold of Roman Catholic superstition, ignorance, and, we could almost add, idolatry—we are sure it will not be uninteresting to hear of the evangelistic services lately held at St. Servan, by M. de Mouilpied, of Paris. Fear of the priests, who do not scruple to use their influence with employers of labour, keeps many away from the large and comfortable iron hall which has been built for evangelistic work in this place; therefore, the offer of the mission-boat Mystery by Mr. Cook was gladly accepted for the extra services of the last few weeks. We have to thank God for bringing into these meetings on board the boat, large numbers of men, mostly young men, many of whom listened with deep attention to the glad tidings of the great salvation, so truly and attractively set before them by M. de Mouilpied.

To gain the attention and reach the hearts of these gay young Frenchmen was at first no easy task; but M. de Mouilpied resolved, by the grace of God, to win them, and to win them by love. In this, by God's help, he succeeded; his patience, and affectionate winning way of putting the Gospel before them, secured at last their earnest attention, and we are not without hope that there will be lasting fruit from these boat services.

The evangelist (M Eberhard) is now carrying on the work at St. Malo, and many of our young men are following up the services there. Some of them have willingly accepted the offer of visits to their homes and have also promised to attend the Gospel meetings which are held twice a week in the iron hall at St. Servan. The work in connection with this hall consists of day-school for children, Sunday-school, mothers' meetings, visits to the homes of the people, &c., &c., and for this work help is greatly needed.

The departure of two lady workers, who for the past five years have given their time and support to the mission, is a source of anxiety at this moment. Should any of our readers feel drawn to go over and help to fill the gap which they will leave, such would be warmly welcomed by those who are now carrying on the work, and would, besides, reap a rich blessing by helping to spread the light of the Gospel in one of the darkest corners of France.—Address, Rev. C de P. Gliddon; or Mrs. Fraser (Treasurer), St. Servan, Ille et Vilaine, France.

SISTERS.

A HUDDLED heap of filthy rags,
  A laugh that's scarcely human,
A painted face and vacant eyes,
  Just but a "fallen woman."
A string of oaths which seem too vile
  For mortal lips to utter,
The spectre of our city streets,
  An outcast of the gutter!

And yet I cannot coldly look Upon those sunken features,
Or shrink in shuddering scorn away
  From "such degraded creatures."
She may have learnt to love full well
  The evil life has taught her,
But still, for all her sin and shame,
  She is "my Father's" daughter—

A sister of the self-same race
  As yonder pure Madonna!
A sister though the guilt of man
  Has left such stain upon her!
Although from woman's high estate
  She has so foully fallen,
Yet such as she, by stainless lips,
  To heaven's high halls were callen.

There was a time, long, long ago,
  When saints looked down from heaven,
And said, "Unto the world below
  A little child is given,
Another soul is born to-day,
  To live out life's short story,
A tiny pair of baby feet
  Start on the way to glory!"

Those baby feet! Ah me! Ah me!
  They had but scanty tending;
No angel stood beside the way
  To teach them heavenward wending.
But fiends in human shape stood round,
  With tempting hell-gifts laden,
To lure from virtue's narrow path
  The unsuspecting maiden.

She fell! Throughout the realms of death
  There echoed gloomy laughter;
But to the utmost verge of space
  A silence reigned thereafter!
Her guardian angel's wailing cry
  Through that dread stillness ringing,
Went up past sun and whirling stars,
  And pierced the angels' singing.

It rose right through the pearly gates,
  And up the highways golden,
Until it reached the tranquil courts
  Where tears are ne'er beholden;
And on the gentle face of Him
  Who rules the holy city,
There came a weary, anxious look
  Of tender love and pity.

He spoke. The angels hushed their song,
  And startled seraphs listened,
For, lo! within those eyes Divine
  A shining teardrop glistened.
"My erring child! I gave my life
  To loose the chains that bind her;
And who, of all my blood-bought ones,
  Will go, for Me, to find her?"

My sisters, when the Master speaks Shall Christian women palter?
When his dear hand points out a way,
  Dare we, who love Him, falter?
If He within our grasp has placed
  A sword those links to sever,
Shall we hell's trembling victim leave,
  Unsought, unhelped, forever?

A sister's arm around her thrown,
  May turn from ill behaviour,
And lips that touch the sinner's brow
  May win her for her Saviour.
The bridal robes we prize so high
  Will lose no whit their whiteness,
If those soiled rags, which wrap her form
  Should share their radiant brightness.

It is our work! for we had failed
  To give her youth protection;
Our right! for we alone can plead
  A sister's pure affection;
Our blessed privilege at last,
  Within the courts of heaven,
To lead before "our Father's" throne,
  This daughter, sin-forgiven!

THE BROOKLYN Y.M.C.A.

DEDICATION OF THE NEW BUILDING.

AMONG the philanthropic enterprises of the late Frederick Marquand which he was not permitted to see completed during his lifetime was the erection of a suitable building for the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. After Mr. Marquand's death his legatees, knowing his wishes, set apart a fund of 150,000 dols. for the purpose, provided an equal amount was raised as an endowment fund, the income of which should be used to sustain the Association's work. This condition having been fulfilled through the generosity of the citizens of Brooklyn and large individual gifts, the work was in due time brought to completion, and the Brooklyn Association is now in possession of what is in some respects the finest and best-equipped building of its kind in the world.

The dedication services were held on September 28. The exercises were in the Association Hall, a beautiful auditorium fitted up with all the latest improvements, and having a seating capacity of 1400. Mr. D. W. McWilliams, who had given the work his personal supervision from the beginning, presented the building to the trustees with a brief address. Mr. A. S. Barnes, in a few earnest words, responded in behalf of the trustees. After a dedicatory prayer by the Rev. Dr. A. J. F. Behrends, the address of the evening was made by Rev. Dr. Cuyler. He reviewed the struggles of the Association to secure its present home. He had been a member of the Association for over thirty years, and an earnest believer in its power for usefulness among young men. He congratulated the Association, the young men of Brooklyn, the fathers and mothers of the city and all its public-spirited and Christian citizens, on the completion of this magnificent edifice. It was designed to minister to the social, intellectual, physical, and religious needs of young men. But all these things would be in vain, the speaker concluded, if the benefits of the institution were confined to the membership of the Association. It must reach out its influences through all the city and uplift and help and strengthen young men and bring them to Christ. There are, he said, at a fair estimate, 80,000 young men in Brooklyn, of whom multitudes are standing in need of such privileges as this Association affords, and more than all they stand in need of Christ.

After the Benediction was pronounced the audience were invited to inspect the building. The library, the parlours, the class-rooms, the small lecture-rooms, and various other apartments were visited, all of which are complete in their way and admirably adapted to their several purposes. The gymnasium is one of the finest rooms in the building, 24 feet high, 54 feet wide, and 98 feet deep, and fitted up with all things needful for physical development. The library contains 6000 volumes; the reading-room is large, bright and cheerful, and supplied with the leading papers and magazines. In short, nothing seems to be wanting to enable this Association to perform a great and enduring work among the young men of the City of Churches.—New York Observer.

REV. E. VANORDEN writes from Rio Grande de Sul, Brazil, Sept. 12:—Two negroes made a public profession of their faith in Jesus, one a free young woman, and the other a young man still a slave. Two Brazilian young men have offered themselves to assist me in the work of evangelisation. Some £70 would be needed to support one for one year. Will our friends remember us, and communicate with Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, London?

MRS. BELL AND HER CUSTOMERS.

A TALK ABOUT OUR GIRLS AND HOW TO PROTECT THEM.

"'TIS all very well to say we want more laws for the protection of young girls! My notion is that a girl's father and mother are her best protectors, or ought to be."

So said Mrs. Bell, the shrewd, elderly mistress of the little general shop at the corner of Lamb-street. Two or three women had dropped in to make purchases, and some conversation had arisen on certain matters of deep and terrible import which have been much talked about lately, not only in Lamb-street but all over England. There was a general look of surprise at Mrs. Bell's speech, and one of her customers, a sickly-looking woman with a pale-faced baby in her arms, rejoined, "Surely you'd have laws made to punish the wretches that are wicked enough to lead young creatures into sin and shame!"

"Of course I would, Mrs. Weeks!" was the reply; "the same as there should be laws to punish stealing. Only, if a woman was to send her child to walk down a street known to be full of thieves, with a diamond ring on her finger, and never warned her of the risk she was running, I should say she was playing into their hands. 'Tis opportunity, you know, that makes the thief, and, by what I see around me, parents don't half bestir themselves to protect their children from those who would rob them of a young girl's most precious treasure, her good character."

Mrs. Bell was accustomed to speak her mind very freely to her neighbours, and, as she was a kind-hearted woman, who never pressed for her account when times were bad with them, they were generally ready to listen with patience to her plain speeches. It was Mrs. Plumb, a stout, middle-aged woman, who spoke up in answer to this indictment.

"Law, Mrs. Bell! whatever do you mean, ma'am? I'm sure there isn't a father or mother down our street but would protect their girls from wrong as far as they could. We're not like those dreadful low people you hear of, that would sell their little ones into wickedness—we're all decent, respectable folks here—in a general way."

"And yet I wonder how many girls out of this very street have gone astray only within the last year," said Mrs. Bell.

There was a chorus of "Ah! that's true," from the three women, and several names well known to all present were cited.

"It's dreadful to think of, isn't it?" said Mrs. Green, who was the youngest, neatest, and pleasantest looking of the three. "But how can the parents help it?"

"Why, by looking after them better," was Mrs. Bell's answer. "A girl like your Kate, now, Mrs. Weeks—let's see: she's got another place, hasn't she?"

"Yes, she went to it yesterday; it's up Clevedon-road way somewhere; I don't rightly know the address, but she'll tell me when she comes home next week. It isn't far; the children say they know the street well."

"I suppose you know the mistress's name," said Mrs. Green.

"I declare it's clean gone out of my head! It's a place Mrs. Smith at the fruiterer's shop told her of, and she went and got it for herself."

"There, now! That's just what I mean," said Mrs. Bell. "You let your girl take a place, and you never as much as go there to see whether it's respectable or not! How can you tell what sort of people she may have got amongst?"

Mrs. Weeks looked rather foolish, and answered that since Mrs Smith had recommended the place, she had supposed it would be all right.

Mrs. Bell shook her head. "What does she know of the people, except that they're her customers? And what do you know of Mrs. Smith herself? She's only been in that shop a month, and is quite a stranger to the neighbourhood!"

"That's true enough, ma'am," said Mrs. Weeks, changing her ground, "but poor people can't afford to be too particular."

"That's the way you all talk," was Mrs. Bell's rejoinder, "and I've no patience with it. You're particular enough sometimes. If a girl's mistress gives her a scolding, or keeps her in some night when she thinks she ought to go out, oh, then she can't think of staying in her place. No matter how poor her parents are, home she must come to be a burden on them till she hears of something more to her liking; but if she's in a place where she can never attend public worship on the Sabbath, or where she's surrounded by temptations to evil, she can't possibly afford to leave it on that account. Never mind the danger to her immortal soul so long as she's earning a bit of money—that's the way of the world!"

"Well, there's no dangers of that sort at my Clara's situation," said Mrs. Plumb with a self-complacent air. "I've known her mistress for years, and a better-living woman doesn't breathe."

"That may be," said Mrs. Bell; "but I wonder you let Clara go to a day-place—a mile off, too. Just think of the temptations a child's exposed to, coming home night after night alone through the streets."

"She always gets away at eight," said the mother. "At least," she added, as she caught Mrs. Bell's eye fixed sharply on her, "now and then when they're extra busy they keep her a little later, and as they've been so kind I don't like to say anything about it. I don't mean her to stay there much longer—only till I can hear of a better place for her, and they're not so easy to be had."

"Aren't they?" asked Mrs. Green, thoughtfully. "Because my husband often reads bits out of the papers to me about servants being so scarce nowadays, and how there are so many more places to be had than girls to fill them."

"So there are," said Mrs. Bell. "No steady, willing girl need be out of a respectable situation, when so many get engaged who are neither."

"Miss Cary, our visiting lady, was inquiring only last week for a young girl to go as under-housemaid in a family she knows," remarked Mrs. Green. "Nice Christian gentlefolks, she said, who would train a young creature well in every way. I only wish one of mine was old enough to try it."

"She proposed it to me for Kate," put in Mrs. Weeks, "but the wages were so small, I didn't think it worth sending her after, and her father was of the same mind."

"Just as if money was everything," exclaimed Mrs. Bell. "Why the education she would get in a servant's duties would be worth pounds to her by-and-by. What does she learn in a little 'general' place such as she is in now? I call that being penny wise and pound foolish."

"Miss Cary mentioned it to the other mothers in the street, and they all thought the same as I did," rejoined Mrs. Weeks.

"More fools they!" was Mrs. Bell's uncomplimentary observation. "If you'd been a wise woman, Mrs. Plumb, you'd have seen after it for your Clara, instead of letting her come home night after night at nine, and sometimes ten o'clock, as I've seen her myself, often and often."

"But, dear me, Mrs. Bell," exclaimed Mrs. Plumb, rather impatiently; "girls in our station of life must be sent out at night sometimes. If they're in service they'll be sent on errands, and if they're in business, or at a laundry, they have to come home alone of an evening."

"That's perfectly true," was Mrs. Bell's rejoinder: "and, since it is so, parents ought to be doubly careful in doing all they can to guard them against temptation."

"How do you mean, Mrs. Bell?" asked two or three voices in concert.

"I mean, for one thing, that young girls ought to be trained so to conduct themselves that the streets will be as safe to them by night as by day, or pretty nearly so. The steadiest girl may get insulted now and then; but I have a young friend—a Christian young woman—whose business takes her out at very late hours in the evening, and she tells me that not only has she never had any improper remarks addressed to her, but her presence has always been a protection to any giddier girls who might happen to be with her. My daughters are married now, and have families of their own; but when they were young I always impressed it upon them: 'Behave well at all times, and no one will expect you to do otherwise at any time.'"

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN ROME.

ON Tuesday afternoon last week, at Mildmay Conference Hall, Dr. David Young gave an address on "Medical Mission Work in the Ghetto at Rome." After calling attention to one or two passages of Scripture bearing on the Jewish apostacy and its consequences, the Doctor reviewed his work from its commencement in November last. Beginning in that part of the city known as the Ghetto, a district containing upwards of 6000 Jews, a shower of stones thrown from the windows as he passed along was his first greeting. A dispensary was soon fitted up, to which the people began slowly to come. Two young ladies (whom we understood to be from Mildmay) became co-workers in the mission, visiting the poor in their homes, and ministering to the sick. Gradually the opposition ceased, and the institution began to be valued. Especially was this the case when it was discovered that no end was sought by the workers but the real good of the patients.

About this time a poor, distracted mother brought her sick child, whom the doctors had given up as incurable. Quickly recovering under Dr. Young's treatment, a marked impression was made upon the people, who from that period abandoned all suspicion, and took favourably to the Mission. The prejudice was further overcome through the untiring devotion of the two lady workers, who quite astonished the people by undertaking the work of nursing the sick, especially the sick children.

Dr. Young proceeded to show how interesting it was to witness the effect of the Gospel on some of the hearers. The whole of the Ghetto is now open to the Gospel, and opposition is no longer offered. In conclusion, the worthy Doctor, who is shortly returning to his work, requested the prayers of God's people.

Dr. Burn Thompson, who presided, commended the Mission to the prayers of the audience. Dr. Dickson and Mr. Mathieson offered prayer.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

DURING the past fortnight these brethren have held services at Devonshire Chapel, Stoke Newington, where for twelve months Rev. Edwin Ellis has laboured with great success. The spacious building was crowded to excess when our reporter was present on Saturday week, and he was informed that hundreds probably were unable to gain admission. About two hundred persons have given in their names as having received blessing during the fortnight. In one case a gentleman prayed very earnestly for the conversion of his servant, that she might be saved that evening, and on going into the after-meeting found her there inquiring the way of peace. In another case a girl received a blessing, and then persuaded her governess, a German lady, to come, and she also found the Saviour. The earnest efforts of the evangelists have also been successful in the recovery of backsliders, one or two remarkable cases being cited, in which apt illustrations of the Father's love had been used to quicken and restore.

The next mission is arranged to be held at Abney Congregational Chapel, Church-street.

A CONFERENCE on the Lord's Second Coming was held in the Seamen's Bethel, of the Glasgow Seamen's Evangelistic Mission, 59, Morrison-street, Glasgow, S.S., on Saturday, the 3rd inst. The audience numbered about 300, mostly sailors with their wives and families, and people connected with or interested in the men of the sea. Addresses on the topic of the evening were given by Mr. J. N. Carr, of Carlisle, Mr. John Anderson, of Ardrossan, Revs. A. T. Donald, W. Millar, and J. Johnstone. We are looking up for great blessing as a result of the meeting, which began the usual Saturday evening tea meetings held during the winter months.

THE CLIFTON CONFERENCE.

THE meetings in connection with this well-known autumnal gathering, were opened on Tuesday, October 6, in the Victoria Rooms, Clifton. The friends present were welcomed by Rev. James Ormiston, the convener and chairman. We do not propose on this occasion to give a detailed report of the proceedings of the three days, but rather to indicate the spirit and scope of the addresses by giving a few of the leading thoughts.

The topic on Tuesday morning was "The Apocalyptic Vision," recorded in Rev. i. 10—20. Rev. J. Ormiston said: "In the choice of this subject I was struck with the prominence which it gives to the Lord Jesus Christ as the Head of the churches as well as the Covenant Head of the one Church. We live in a time when many are denying the authority of Jesus Christ in the Church, but during this Conference we shall hear of his power in the churches as well as in the Church.

Rev. F. Whitfield: The vision in Dan. x. is almost exactly similar to that in Rev. x. Daniel was commanded to communicate the revelation made to him, but before doing this he had to behold the same glorious Person whom John saw in Patmos. And observe that the same effect was produced on both. The same hand is laid upon the one when prostrate as on the other, and the same subject is communicated to both alike. Before we can enter upon the consideration of any subject or work for God, we must first of all behold Him. The priestly garment down to the foot which John saw comprehends the work of redemption through the blood of Jesus, the perfectness of the one offering for sin, and the putting away by intercession of the daily defilements of the believer. There is more real power in one spiritual look into the face of Jesus than in all the education of the day or in all the learning of the schools.

Rev. W. Elliott: Patmos, in the time of John, was famed for nothing; it was only John who made it famous. There he was, John the Aged, with a heart full of grief, yet firmly convinced that whatever Cæsar might order, it would be the will of Christ. In the Churches to which John was commissioned to write a message; there were many things which the Lord hated, and do not let us fail to bear in mind that hatred is as holy as love, if only the right thing be hated.

Colonel Molesworth: If we would know of things to come we must not ask politicians, for the Lord Himself has said, "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him." The unveiling of the future is in Christ's own hands. It has been committed unto Him whom the world rejected, to put the world in order.

In the evening the Epistle to the Church in Ephesus (Rev. ii 1—7) and the Epistle to the Church of Smyrna formed the topics of conference.

Rev. Mr. Barnes: Ephesus was the first city from which the Gospel sounded to instruct all the disciples. Bear in mind also how the prophecy of the Lord has been remarkably fulfilled. The candlestick has been removed from Ephesus, and yet it seems as if we had there something like the vision of Ezekiel. You remember how the Holy Spirit seemed to linger over Jerusalem, and over Ephesus too, notwithstanding the grievous errors that entered in.

Captain Key: The Churches both of Ephesus and Smyrna were like little rocks standing up amid the waters around. The messages sent them are strong as regards sanctification or Christian walking. We must be careful, in dealing with all questions concerning holiness, that we are firmly established on the ground of justification through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. When I read these seven Epistles I feel as if I ought to shut the book. There is holiness, and I so vile; but then there is reached forth to us the strengthening of the Lord Jesus Christ.

An address by Mr. George Müller we shall give at some length in our next issue.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

In the afternoon there was a very interesting meeting on behalf of this Society. Lord Cavan, who presided, said he hoped they would hear sufficient to stir up their best desires for the well-being of Ireland. Captain Kearney White was not able to be present, but both he and the Scripture Readers were with them in spirit, and praying for a blessing upon this gathering. The Society had lost an invaluable friend in the decease of Lord Shaftesbury. Our consolation is that God will not leave any work of his unfinished. In Achill the Roman Catholics know nothing even of the Douay Testament, though it is their own translation, and has the authority of the Pope himself. Hence the necessity of such work as that carried on by the Readers of this Society, who go to the homes of the people and give them line upon line of the Word of God. In consequence of the failure of the Munster Bank the Society was in special need of assistance, so that if friends in Clifton had not been in the habit of subscribing, he hoped they would make up for lost time and contribute liberally.

Captain West gave a stirring account of his experiences with his Bible carriage in Ireland.

Rev. Preston Ball said the people were more readily disposed to listen to a layman than to a clergyman. The readers were simple-minded men, with the grace of God in their hearts, and their work was being largely blessed.

Mr. R. C. Morgan said he was very glad to see, by the size of the annual report, nearly double that of the preceding year, that the work was growing, and that new friends were cropping up to sustain their beloved friend, the secretary, in his labours.

An interesting meeting was also held on behalf of the Society at the Queen's Hotel, on Wednesday morning, when its claims were again urged by Mr. Ormiston, Captain West, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Rev. Mr. Walker, Rev. Mr. Martin, of Portsmouth, Rev. T. Davis, of Hull, and Mr. B. Perry.

WEDNESDAY.

In the morning the Epistles to Pergamos and Thyatira formed the subjects of addresses.

Mr. B. Thomas: The sword with two edges was an emblem of the discipline to which the Church would be subjected. Balaam met the angel with the drawn sword. Let all be very careful of poisonous doctrine and of impure books. The thoughts in them may present themselves when we would be most free from them, and may hinder our appreciation of the precious blood of Christ. The "white stone" referred to evidently suggests purity in the midst of defilement. There is also a reference to the onyx stone on the shoulder of the high priest: "My name." The Lord has a name all to Himself, and each believer has a new name, which no one knows but himself.

Rev. Mr. Wallis, on Thyatira, remarked that the meaning of the entire Book of Revelation would be missed unless it was regarded as the Revelation of Jesus Christ; the very Apocalypse of the coming Lord almost come.

DR. BARNARDO'S MEETING.

In the afternoon there was an excellent meeting, under the presidency of Mr. B. Thomas, on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's work. Mr. Thomas having in a few cordial words introduced the speaker,

Dr. Barnardo, without preface, plunged at once into his subject of the rescue and training of destitute children. It was a very difficult thing, he said, for those living in comfortable homes at Clifton to realise the condition of such children in a great city like London, with a population, between the hours of nine in the morning and six in the evening, of not less than six millions. The social problem which met every earnest worker was a very grave one; but one thing was plain, so far as he himself was concerned, that the children, on whose behalf he pleaded, may be saved, and must be saved.

Rev. J. Wilkinson followed with an account of his work among the Jews. With great power and quiet solemnity he described the life of faith in which he had been led, and the answers to prayer which he had received were most encouraging. Mr. Wilkinson's utterances were regarded by some as the gems of the Conference.

In the evening the Epistles to the Churches in Sardis and Philadelphia were the subject of conference. Rev. T. Davis, vicar of Drypool, speaking upon the first, remarked that to all appearances it was a prosperous Church, without, however, doing much on the outside world; and it would generally be found, in the case of Churches and individuals, that they went back when they carried on no controversy with the world around.

Mr. Inskip earnestly directed attention to the words, "these things saith He," and asked whether we were really persuaded that the words are the Lord's, and that John was merely an amanuensis transcribing the words of God Himself.

Mr. James Wright delivered a very solemn address on the Church at Philadelphia, on the words "I come quickly." He said it was a word of good cheer to an almost exhausted Church.

On Thursday morning Rev. James Hawker spoke upon the message to the Church at Laodicea, and in the evening there was a communion service and sermon at the Memorial Church. Rev. J. C. Martin, of the Circus Church, Landport, was the preacher, the text being Isa. xxvi. 19, 20. In the course of it he expressed hearty thanksgiving for the happy days which had been spent in the Conference.

FLOODS IN BENGAL.

DEAR SIR,—All readers of the C.M.S. periodicals will know the name of Krishnagar, for next to Tinnevelly it is the largest Indian Mission in connection with the C.M.S. In a district, about fifty miles long by about fourteen broad and bounded on all sides by rivers, lie forty villages, containing about 6,000 Christians.

By far the larger portion of the district is sown with rice, two crops of which are reaped annually, one in the early part of September, the other in November or December. Both these crops have been entirely destroyed by the floods. The country, for many a mile, is one sheet of water; villages are deserted, people homeless or making their temporary homes in trees. In some places cattle are starving through lack of pasture, and unless timely relief be afforded, there is every prospect of extreme distress. The matter is now being considered by the Government Authorities, and we hope that they will start relief works shortly, but this effort cannot reach the sick, the infirm, and the widow.

Will your readers, in their snug English homes, come forward and help us to aid our suffering fellow-Christians? Could they see, as I now see (for I am travelling in a boat over submerged rice fields), women standing up to their necks in water, plucking half-rotten rice beneath, in the hope of providing a meal for their little ones; could they hear the sorrowful cries of houseless families and witness the desolation around, their hearts would ache, and they would be induced to give help. Aid will be thankfully received by Canon W. Payne, Merton House, Reading; or may be forwarded direct to me. Yours faithfully,

C.M.S. Mission House, J. W. Hall.
Krishnagar, Bengal.

THE CARTER HOME, CLAPHAM.—Many years have passed away since William Carter was called to his rest. The Boys' Home at Clapham is a continuation of part of his work known as "The South London Refuge." It is open for the reception of homeless and destitute lads. Five years ago, when the present premises were secured, only a small number of lads were sheltered under its roof. Since then rapid progress has been made, not only in numbers, but in the methods taken to contribute to their support. The boys themselves have earned the large sum of £600. They are under careful training. The letters received by the master from those who have gone to Canada have greatly rejoiced his heart. The Committee have set apart £200 towards new premises; they intend securing an additional Home, so that the smaller boys may have greater accommodation and advantage. Help towards this deserving object will be received by Dr. Eugene Cronin, Treasurer, Clapham, S.W.

NOTES from the AUSTRALIAN BUSH.—2.

By D. M. LOGAN.

RECENTLY I passed through both Sydney and Melbourne, and had the pleasure of attending a mid-day prayer meeting in Sydney, at which Rev. J. Mountain presided. I also met there Mr. Ardill, of the Blue Ribbon Mission, who seems to be a most energetic Christian worker. Brother Treseder is constantly engaged in the Lord's work, and is in the midst of a loving band. Mr. George Walker, General Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., is as hearty and evangelistic as ever. I called at the Y.M.C.A. rooms in Melbourne, but did not see friend Marsh, who has become a Church of England missioner. I was informed that he is doing good service and having great blessing in his labours.

A GOOD WORK IN THE BUSH.

I spent a Sunday at a station in the Victorian bush, and was much delighted with what I saw. The owner of the station, who lives elsewhere, had engaged a young lady of about 22, as a teacher for the children of the employés. Some time ago she started a Sunday-school for her pupils. This has gradually developed into a religious service for all the people who choose to come. She composed and read addresses to them at first, but soon abandoned the reading, and betook herself to preaching to the people. I had the pleasure of assisting her, and had a good time of it.

EMIGRATION.

I wish I could conscientiously say through your columns to Rev. Styleman Herring that New South Wales is a good field for emigrants. It should be so. The climate is superb, though subject to droughts. The country requires population, but the land laws are not by any means inviting. On paper they appear fairly well, but in reality they are not so good as they may seem; and this seriously retards the progress of the colony. Were liberal land laws enacted and wisely carried out, the colony would be a different country, but little inducement is offered for emigration. Only a few days ago a new Land Act came into operation, and the universal cry of the people is that of dissatisfaction. Its principles are radically wrong, and so constant trouble ensues. One would almost think obstacles were placed in the way of people settling on the land. Strange to say, the minister by whose name (Farnell) this new Act is known, wished to form the Act on a different basis and on more enlightened principles, but was overruled by a majority of votes.

In Sydney on several occasions mass meetings of the unemployed have been held, and that does not look promising for emigration from London.

Mrs. Browne has done a good work in some of our bush townships, and the Blue Ribbon badge is becoming well known. I had the pleasure of presiding at one of her meetings. The hall was crowded, and people trooped up to get the ribbon and take the pledge. Some who had been "terrors" before are living a wonderfully different life.

A LADIES' COLLEGE IN AUSTRALIA.

Your picture of Mr. Moody's Northfield Seminary recalls a visit I paid to the Wesleyan Ladies' College, near Melbourne. Three years ago it was started, and it has been a wonderful success under the presidency of Rev. W. H. Fitchett and his estimable wife. Already a central tower and additional wing are being erected, as the original portion built has been overcrowded. Everything is done on sound Christian principles, and the education is excellent. Girls are to be found there from every Australian colony. Cheerfulness, brightness, and beauty prevail. I took tea with my dear friends at the head of the establishment, along with some fifty or sixty boarders, and several of their teachers. The refectory is a beautiful structure, 53 feet long, 32 broad, and 18 high. The ceiling is a marvel of beauty. The room is well lighted by windows at both ends and panelled mirrors along the sides. Choice oil paintings adorn the walls. To a bushman this was quite overpowering. After tea, the large family seated themselves round the beautiful and well-lighted room, hymn-books were distributed, and we all engaged in the singing of hymns, Bible reading, and prayer. So the Wesleyans are taking care of their girls as well as their boys. However, the scholars are of all denominations, many of them having been settled in the immediate neighbourhood of the college, so as to become day pupils in its classes.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN LONDON.

ISLINGTON.

DEAR SIR,—We have had a time of very great blessing among the children in this neighbourhood. On the evenings of Monday and Tuesday week, Rev. E. Payson Hammond conducted two meetings for children at All Saints' Schools. The room was crowded with children, chiefly of the roughest class. The power of God was wonderfully manifested, and very many of the children gave in their names during the after-meetings, as having decided for Jesus. Mr. Spiers, and other helpers from the Children's Special Service Mission, continued the work during the week, when Mr. Hammond was addressing young men at the Priory.

On Thursday and Friday afternoons, Mr. Hammond was at St. Thomas's Church, where similar results followed. The boys from the Industrial Home in Copenhagen-street (the greater part of which has recently been destroyed by fire), were present at these services, and many of them appear to have decided for Jesus.

"Gems of Praise," Mr. Hammond's hymn-book, is admirably suited to children's mission work.

EDWARD BREWER,
Vicar of St. Thomas's, Islington.

AT MR. SPURGEON'S ORPHANAGE.

On Wednesday last week, Mr. Hammond, accompanied by Deacon William Olney and others, held meetings in the Stockwell Orphanage. There were nearly 500 boys and girls present belonging to the institution. Rev. Vernon Charlesworth, who laboured with Mr. Hammond at Surrey Chapel years ago, welcomed the visitors. A large platform, extending entirely across the end of the hall, had been erected for the meeting. The choir which has been helping Mr. Hammond at Haddon Hall led the song.

At the close of Mr. Hammond's address all remained for conversation and prayer. It was evident that God had brought the simple Gospel truth preached home to many hearts; numbers were melted to tears. There were so few workers that it was impossible to speak personally to all; at times little groups were seen, here and there, engaged in earnest prayer. After awhile the rainbow of hope, upon the countenances of some, was seen through their tears, and before the meeting closed a good number expressed faith in Christ.

After the meeting, along with Mr. Charlesworth, Mr. Hammond visited some of the houses, expressing himself greatly delighted with all he saw. He told the boys that in Leicester he found a young man who was of great assistance to him in many ways, who had been brought up at that orphanage. He prayed that everyone sent out from that institution might live to be an honour to it, as that boy had been. Next day Mr. Hammond again visited the orphanage, when he found many whose faces were sad the day before lightened up with a new-found joy. The meeting in every way was most delightful. One boy handed to Mr. Charlesworth a paper with a long list of names, from which he read the following: "Here are 140 names of those who think they have found Jesus, and I hope there will be 240 soon. I trust all these boys and girls will keep their promises. I am very happy now since I trusted Jesus last night."

This boy then in a few words told how he believed he had given his heart to the Saviour the night before. Mr. Charlesworth's remarks at the close were very interesting.

HADDON HALL, BERMONDSEY.

Since the opening services reported last week, the efforts of Mr. Hammond have been crowned with great blessing. Children from most of the surrounding schools, and children who never attend Sunday-school, have flocked to the meetings. The audiences have been solemnised as by the power of God's Spirit. The workers believe that every service has borne much fruit. Some children who would not yield at the first meetings have decided since.

At the Thursday's meetings perhaps 900 children were present, and very many shut out. At the inquiry-meeting young Christians, who had been converted at the previous meetings, were found in all directions, seeking the salvation of their little friends. A very pleasing feature of the meetings has been the attendance of a choir from Mr. Spurgeon's "Stockwell Orphanage."

W. OLNEY.

We are requested to say that the numbers given by a correspondent last week, as attending Mr. Hammond's meetings at the Priory, were somewhat overstated. Probably about 300, not 500, young men were present on the second evening; on the other evenings the attendance was smaller. We would repeat a request that we have frequently made before, that friends who report Gospel work should be careful not to overstate the facts.

THE EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT.

A CROWDED meeting of shop-assistants and others was held on Tuesday evening, October 13, at Y.M.C.A. Finsbury-park Hall. Mr. J. B. Lakeman (one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Factories), in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., presided during the first part of the evening, and was supported by several of the clergy and principal tradesmen of the district. He made a stirring address, in which he advocated legal enactments to attain the object of the meeting. This, however, was opposed by subsequent speakers, who thought "moral suasion" more effectual; and that to wait for legislation would be a waste of time, as past experience would testify.

Mr. Larking stated, among other things, that a conference of tradesmen had been held the previous day, when it was resolved that earlier closing in all trades was both desirable and practicable, and could be adopted with great advantage to both employers and employed. A local branch of the Early Closing Association was formed, and Mr. Orchard kindly placed the hall at the disposal of the Committee for the purpose of holding their meetings.

Mr. J. E. Jack gave a very spirited and convincing address in favour of the movement, in support of which many other eloquent speeches were delivered, and well received by the appreciative audience.

Mr. Stacy appealed for funds to carry on the work, saying it was through want of interest and support from the assistants themselves that the work of the Association was limited. He suggested assistants giving a penny a week to the Society, with which income they would be enabled to revolutionise the country.

Mr. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., who came into the meeting before its close, said the longer he thought about it the more convinced he was, that early closing was an important matter. He urged those who were employers to do as they would be done by, and said that when the public had learned to look on late shopping as snobbish, the battle of early closing would be nearly won.

On Thursday a meeting of a provisional committee and tradesmen met at the Hall, when Mr. F. Crisp was elected Chairman, Mr. W. Jones Treasurer, and Mr. Haslop Secretary. It was decided that all the tradesmen in the neighbourhood should be canvassed, each trade to have a uniform time of closing.

CHRISTIAN WOMEN IN CONFERENCE.

THE Sixth Annual Conference of the Christian Women's Union was held at the Clapham-road Conference Hall last week. The proceedings, which occupied three days, comprised the consideration of various religious and social topics, and were commenced each morning by a devotional meeting.

WEDNESDAY.

In the much regretted absence of the President, Mrs. Meredith, through illness, an address of cordial welcome was read by Miss Lloyd. She strongly urged the principle of union among Christians for the better and more effective doing of religious work; also the necessity of absolute surrender to God, as a qualification for his service.

The first of the subjects considered had reference to "The Promotion of Woman's Service in Missionary Effort at Home and Abroad." Mrs. Eccles was present to speak on behalf of Morocco, which she declared to be darker than either India or China. It was most difficult to make the people understand the import of Christ's death. Of late, however, there had been very much more success, and it had become increasingly evident that the people are capable of being vastly influenced by love. The Gospel of John and the Acts of the Apostles have been translated into Morocco-Arabic, the only dialect they clearly understand. Several ladies are ready to go out to the work, and lack of funds only is the hindrance.

Mrs. Weitbrecht followed with an interesting sketch of her past labours in India, with which our readers are mostly familiar. What is wanted for India is that Christian influence should be brought to bear upon the Natives by ladies planting themselves among them.

China was represented by Mrs. Wm. Pruen, who described the modes of gaining the ear and confidence of the Chinese by giving medicines, showing kindness to the children, and visiting their homes, &c. The acquisition of the language was dwelt upon by Mrs. Hudson Taylor, who came only to hear, but was requested to speak. Instead of waiting until they could speak the language fluently, let them commence work among the people at the same time, and this would greatly help them. A princess, residing at Pekin, had just been converted, and had come fully out for Christ.

Bible-work in Syria was shown to have made wonderful progress. Miss Poulter showed how prejudices are breaking down, and how the Mahommedans are inclining toward the Christian training provided by our schools. Years ago not one woman in a hundred could read, now thousands can read. A Bible-woman generally follows the establishment of a school. A fine opening presents itself at this time for well-qualified ladies, such as have a facility for learning the language.

The evening meeting was conducted by Miss Mason, who urged entire devotedness to God on all workers. Several subjects of practical interest were introduced. Miss Hosking, from Ramsgate, dilated on "Homes of Rest for Missionaries," showing their need, character, and Scripturalness. Mrs. Fenn, who has had a large experience of work in Spain, gave a most edifying account of what has been accomplished there through the labours of the Mission which she represented. Educated, refined ladies are now wanted. One had presented herself, and would be accepted if the necessary funds were forthcoming. The China Inland Mission was admirably represented by Mrs. Piggot, who labours in the North; Mrs. Randall, who has spent seven years in the South; and by Mrs. Hudson Taylor. The opium curse was alluded to by each of the speakers as a chief hindrance. Many have been brought into the "Refuge," and cured. One lady was so thankful for being emancipated that she put up a sign-board announcing her cure. Christians, who have no sufficient reason for staying at home, were urged to go to the help of these benighted Chinese. No fear about the climate need be entertained, nor yet about any difficulties connected with the language. A brief and bright address was given by Mrs. Fisher concerning her good work in the City, where the girls are beginning to hold prayer-meetings and Bible-readings during the dinner-hour among themselves.

THURSDAY.

The morning was devoted to the consideration of "Rescue Work in connection with Prisoners, and Women and Children in Dangerous Circumstances. Miss Lloyd said two prominent features of Mrs. Meredith's Institution at Nine Elms were regular Gospel teaching and self-support. It was undesirable to mass together evildoers, so that no accommodation was provided for sleeping them. A discussion ensued on the best means of making the Homes attractive. Mrs. Haycraft said the little innocents would increasingly need their aid, and the work of prevention seemed to be most urgent just now. Miss Taylor thought nothing could be more disastrous than binding down the inmates of Homes to work which they detested. If some outdoor employment in the country could be found for penitents, it would be better for their health and morals too. Miss Cavendish, Miss Mason, Mrs. Walker, and other ladies took part in the discussion.

"Preventive Work in connection with the Y.W.C.A." was introduced by Mrs. Darwin Fox, who showed the progress of the work on all sides—evangelistic, educational, temperance, restaurants, emigration, and correspondence. Miss Brabazon said many letters came to her from parents asking for aid in looking after girls coming to London for the first time. Miss Lloyd referred to the ruin brought upon thousands through the love of dress, and urged that this should be discouraged as much as possible.

In the evening, a paper on "Temperance Work in Hospitals and elsewhere," prepared by Miss Ransom, of Hitchin, was read by Miss Cadbury. It was shown that much insanity is attributable to drink. Children should not be allowed to go to public-houses for their parents' beer. The prohibition of intoxicants in hospitals is increasing. Much would be gained if parents were occasionally gathered together, and shown the loss sustained by their children through the money spent in drink.

Another subject included in the programme was "Hospital Nursing and Help for the Sick Poor," which it was hoped would have been opened by Miss Florence Nightingale. Prevented, however, by sickness from attending the Conference, she sent a letter in which she said, "If the attention of women of sound body and sound mind, devoted to doing God's service, in the Saviour's spirit, could be called to making hospital, infirmary, and district nursing a life work and call, for which they must be trained, the astonishing change which it has pleased God to bring about in hospital and infirmary nursing, and nursing by the bedsides of the sick poor at home during the last thirty years, would be increased tenfold. Associations like that at Bloomsbury-square, by sending trained nurses all over the kingdom, would bring order and cleanliness into the worst homes of the sick poor." A paper was read by Mrs. Dacre Craven, which showed that much might be done in mothers' meetings, and by lectures, which the Bloomsbury Society was prepared to provide, if requested.

FRIDAY.

The last day proved in many respects to be the best. The subject for the morning was "The necessity of Christian Women studying Science and Languages for the Promotion of the Lord's Work." Miss Beck read a paper showing that the study of the former was urged by Paul upon Timothy, in order that he might be "throughly furnished." If God's works are honestly studied side by side with his Word, there need be no fear of scepticism resulting. The advantages of acquiring a knowledge of languages would be found in increased clearness of thought and utterance. Miss Petrie, B.A., said there was too much divorce between theological and scientific thought; also between "sacred" and "profane," natural and spiritual, &c. Let all the departments of thought be Christianised. "Positivism" should be met by showing where it fails, and where Christianity meets all the needs of the race. Miss Mason showed that "chastening" in the New Testament means about the same thing as education. Hence the tripartite being of man may be cultivated for Divine purposes. Our girls should be led to develop their mental powers more, and education viewed as a distinct and definite part of our Christian work.

"Handwork for the People," was the next topic, introduced by Miss Samson, who defined its objects and urged its advantages. Miss Petrie spoke of her own special work in this department—viz., the promotion and teaching by correspondence various industries and arts, including pottery-painting, wood-engraving, lace-work, &c. Every student was pledged to devote half an hour each day to the study of the Bible. Further information on this point may be obtained from the secretary, Miss Dymes, 1, Langham-chambers, Langham-place, W.

At three o'clock Miss Soltau read a paper on Bible study, and Miss Headdon afterwards opened up the system of teaching known as the Kindergarten (Child's Garden). In addition to meetings every afternoon on purity (confined exclusively to women), sectional gatherings were arranged for, to afford opportunity for converse on "Labour among the Heathen," "The promotion of Bible-schools," &c.

Three valuable addresses filled up the last evening meeting. Mrs. Evered Poole spoke on "The Moral Training of the Young." Among the evils deplored were bad books, evils associations, the influence of vicious servants, and the low tone of personal piety in the lives of too many professedly Christian parents. Major Poole, who was also present, followed with further good counsel, and prayer was offered for "our families." The closing address was by Miss Mason, on "The Nature and Object of the Union," who invited Christian women to join it. The Conference was marked by a prayerful spirit throughout.

PERILS IN PERSIA.

MANY of our readers will recall the Nestorian, Pastor Jacob, who, with his devoted wife, Moressa, a convert of Fidelia Fiske, visited this country five or six years ago. He is now labouring quietly among Mohammedans in Oroomiah, and the following facts, contained in his last monthly report, and communicated to us by the Secretary of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society, will be read with interest:—

A faithful Christian, a deacon in the small church over which the Pastor presides, was assailed by his cousin, a fanatical Moslem. Not content with reproaches, he stirred up "certain lewd fellows of the baser sort" to break violently into the house of the Christian by night, alarming the inmates. Acting on the advice of friends, he hid himself for a season, till the excitement should pass away. But the persecutor was on the alert, complaining to the Mollahs of his cousin's apostacy from Islam, and accusing him and others before the Governor. A court was held, and all the Christians made a noble confession. To the question whether they ate Christian food, they replied in the affirmative. "Do you wash your mouth after eating?" (thus preventing defilement), the answer was, "No." Then the Prince, turning to the chief lords and the audience, said: "I like these people, because they seem to be true men," and so dismissed them.

The inquiry went no further; and, to the delighted surprise of the Christians themselves, they have since been left unmolested. Will those interested in the evangelisation of Persia pray for that little band of believers who are in jeopardy every hour?

THE GENERAL ELECTION.—A correspondent writes:—Will not your readers endeavour to get such men as S. A. Blackwood, C B., John Macgregor, George Williams, J. B. Wookey, W. T. Stead, and J. C. Horsley, R A., nominated for their constituences? It could be easily managed by a small committee of gentlemen. Call them God-fearing candidates.

AN AFRICAN GIRL'S LETTER.

DEAR SIR,—The following copy of a letter from Miss Emma B. Corning, an African girl, aged fourteen, will perhaps interest your young readers:—

Monrovia, Africa, August 7.

Dear Mr. Willcock,—I was made glad by your letter and the papers you sent. Very few of all the millions of Africa can read or write, so they never receive any mail. I speak the English language, and do my own writing. I have been with Miss Sharp over three years. When I came I did not know any English. I speak three tribal languages. My own "mouth," as we say, is Kroo. Every tribe have their own dialect, and they can be easily distinguished by their looks. My tribe have a broad blue-black mark from the roots of the hair down their foreheads to their nose and chin. The native children do not wear clothes, but beads and leopard teeth around their necks and brass anklets and armlets.

We have bamboo houses, no glass windows, no chairs; benches or forms made by driving sticks in the ground and tying bamboo poles together, and fastened to the sticks. On these we sleep, wrapping ourselves in a cloth. Our floor is just the ground; our roofs are made of leaves. We never set the table, nor use knives and forks nor dishes, as you do. Everybody worships just what they please. What they worship is called Juju, a goat-horn, sheep-tooth, or cow-horn. Some have a stick stuck up before their house, with a rag tied to it. Many put a dish of rice before their Jujus, and if we eat after dark, we throw out some rice for the dead people. We do not know anything about God, nor of Jesus, the Saviour of the world, nor of the resurrection. To hear of all this was good news to me. We were here we knew, and we knew that we must die, but beyond that all was dark. We thought some passed into the bodies of animals or reptiles, and some were reborn in infants. It is a dark, sad life. No Sabbath, no evening prayer for the children, no hymn of praise, no God of love.

Then all the natives believe that there is an evil power constantly ready to do them bodily injury. If one is sick they think they have been witched; then they accuse someone of witching them, and give the accused person tea made from the bark of sassy wood, which is poison. If they vomit it up they are not the witch, if it kills them they have found the witch.

Our cooking is very simple—cassada or rice with fish soup, made very hot with red pepper. We are not very particular what we make soup out of. Among our mission children are those who have eaten snakes, lizards; we have all eaten rats and a large kind of spider. Some have eaten cats, dogs, monkeys, man and elephant meat.

I am the first Kroo girl that has ever learned to read and write, and have any education. We all go to the Methodist church in Monrovia in the morning; then we go to the native town in the afternoon. Miss Sharp preaches and we do the singing. What we get comes from friends in America. God put it into their hearts to send us things. There is plenty of hunger in the land now, but we have lacked nothing. Miss Sharp says that all the children of America and England do not serve God, that many are Godless and wicked. It seems strange that children who know about God, who have always had God's blessed book, and the dear Sabbath days, and so many good and pleasant things, should go astray from God. Don't they know that people who forget God will be turned into hell? I know that there are many good children who try to do something for the blessed Lord Jesus. If the bad children lived among the heathen, and knew how dreary and lonesome life is, where there are no Sabbaths, no God, no books, no prayer, I think they would say, "Oh let me go back to a Christian land, and I will serve God always." From your Kroo friend, Emma B. Corning.

Miss Sharp says in her letter to me: "If any of your friends wish to send books, papers, or anything of the kind, I wish some would send to Charles Foster, John Hall, Marcellus Fields, Peachy Wilson, any or all of these in my care. I give names to them, they never have but one name. Emma's native name is 'Beva,' meaning dog. Emma is a very smart girl." If any of your readers wish to send books, &c., will they kindly address Miss Sharp, missionary, Monrovia, Liberia, West Coast of Africa.

Yours truly,

271, Deansgate, Manchester. Wm. Willcock.

A HIDDEN TEXT.

One word taken from each of the following texts discloses a prayer of the royal Psalmist:—

The Lord is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble.

He brought me up also out of an horrible pit.

Where is God my Maker, who giveth songs in the night?

Man's goings are of the Lord.

In the beginning was the Word.

Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye?

Whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.

Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long.

In my Father's house are many mansions.

Thy footsteps are not known.

Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, that my feet did not slip.

They shall run, and not be weary.

In the answer the references of the foregoing texts must be given. S. J. S.

EMIGRANTS' HOME, BLACKWALL.

THE following extracts are from a letter received from a party of emigrants on their way to Queensland, who were banded together at the Home:—

Malta, September, 1885.

To the Superintendent of the Emigrants' Home, Blackwall.

Dear Sir,—We want to send you word how we are getting on in the Master's cause on board this steamship. Last Wednesday we instituted a prayer meeting to be held every evening on deck; on the evenings of Wednesday and Friday short addresses to be delivered by different brethren. We continue holding our prayer meetings every evening, and who knows what good may result from them? Some three anxious ones at present are the visible results, and we are looking for a great harvest of souls.

We would just take this occasion to return our sincerest thanks to you for the kind, loving advice and hospitality received at the Home. We must say we were pleasingly surprised to see the interest which was paid not only to the temporal wants, but to the spiritual requirements of the emigrants. We shall endeavour to send you word how we get on in Queensland, and some of the results attending our Christian labour on board this ship. We have as many as twenty young men at present, all eager to tell out the story of the Cross. Please pray for us. We will not forget you in your Christian labour at home.

Here follows a long list of signatures.

FIRST THINGS FIRST.—Be first a man of God: after that a banker, or a merchant, or a working-man. I like to see our public men first Christians, then Englishmen, then Conservatives, or Liberals, or Radicals, as their convictions sway them: but in any case let a man be first a man of God. I would to God that our politics, our merchandise, our literature, our art, were all saturated with this idea—"First a Christian." Then the secondary character will rise in excellence and nobility. Science, social laws, trade usages, domestic life, would all be the better for coming under the supremacy of living religion. The fear of God should be the foundation and the topstone of the social edifice. "Christ first," and other things in their due order. Over and above all, let consecration to God shine forth, even as the pillar of fire in the wilderness covered and illuminated the entire camp of Israel.—C. H. Spurgeon.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A Temperance Society has been formed at Brussels.

The jubilee of the Edinburgh Total Abstinence Society will be celebrated next year.

Rev. A. G. Marment has closed a successful Gospel Temperance Mission at Belton.

Geneva, the city of Calvin, is said to have one drink-shop to each seventy of the population.

After January 1, 1886, alcoholic drinks will not be allowed for sale in the Belgian military barracks.

Sheffield.—A Temperance Mission at Albert Hall has been a great success. Several thousands of pledges have been taken.

The National Temperance Federation is issuing an address to the electors in favour of the immediate enactment of Local Option.

Sunday Closing.—The Baptist Union, at its recent meeting at Swansea, passed a vigorous resolution in favour of Sunday closing.

New Zealand.—Native owners of land on which no liquor license has been granted may now have their lands exempted from such licenses.

The Mayor of Sunderland, Mr. Preston, has astonished his Corporation by the announcement that during his year of office he will be a total abstainer.

The Pope has prohibited the further manufacture of beer in the monasteries of the Franciscan monks in Bavaria. It is said this beer is Prince Bismarck's favourite drink.

It is stated the abolition of the Malt-tax in 1880 has increased the illicit manufacture of whisky in Scotland. Prior to 1880, the manufacture of malt required a licence, and the risk of detection is now much reduced.

In The Methodist Times recently it was urged that Wesleyan Temperance work does not receive as much official sympathy and encouragement as it ought. It was said a great Wesleyan Temperance League is greatly needed.

The Scottish Temperance League's New-Year Tract will be written this year, as last, by Mr. James Guthrie, J.P Last year's "Champagne at Night, Real Pain in the Morning," reached a circulation of upwards of a quarter of a million.

Rev. G. S. Reaney recently gave an address to a large number of employés, at one of the leading bookbinder's establishments, Paternoster-row. Other speakers followed, and several pledges were taken. This was the first of a series of such meetings.

An article in The British Workman for October shows a great improvement in the habits of the crews of the North Sea fishing fleets. The mission ships have done a great work; drunkenness has been greatly reduced, and many have been led to Christ.

At Street, Somerset, October 11, Mr. Bright opened a large hall for the use of artisans. Referring to the drink traffic, he said everyone had local option now; they all might refuse to drink. He thought the new Parliament would place licensing power in county councils and municipalities.

An Indian contemporary says:—British officers of our time take a gratifying interest in the well-being and even the amusements of the rank and file. There has been a great improvement in the habits of the men. The canteen is much less extensively patronised, and innocent and healthy amusements are pursued.

An interesting meeting of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Union was held at the Y.M.C.A. Institute on Wednesday week, presided over by Mrs. Hughes, and addressed by Prebendary Grier, Sir Llewelyn Turner, and Mr. John Hilton, of London. The speakers specially commended the Prison Gate Mission work carried on by the ladies of this union.

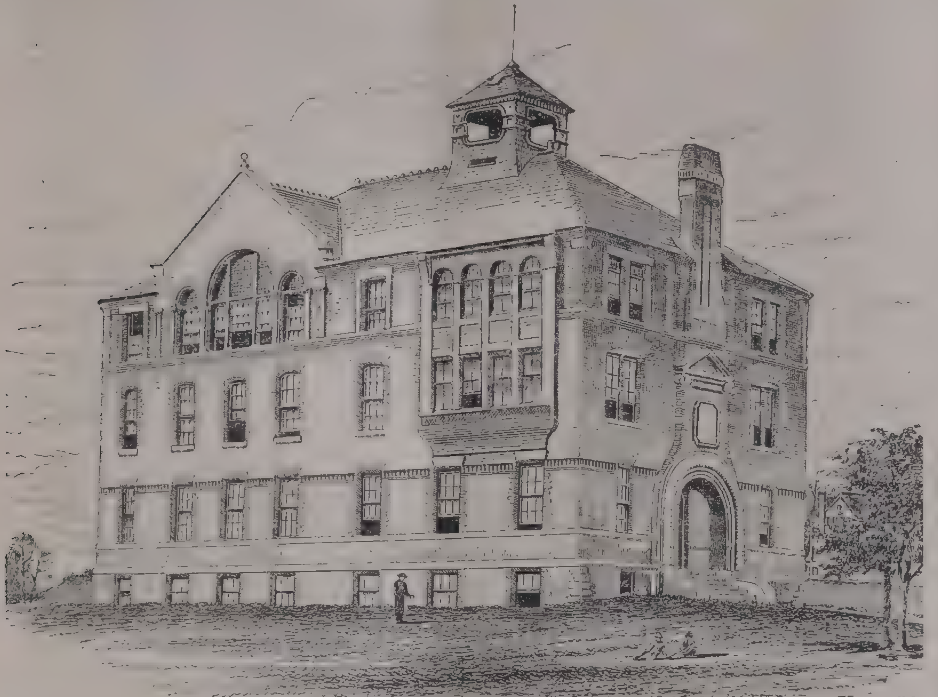
The Temperance Societies in Germany were founded under high auspices. In 1851 the life pledge of the German Catholic fraternity was sanctioned by Papal decree. Frederick William III. ordered information to be obtained respecting the American Temperance Society, and invited Dr. Baird to lecture on the subject in Germany. The first German societies were then formed.

A great social reception was given to Mr. J. B. Gough and Mr. Wm. Noble, in Piedmount Church, Worcester, Mass. on October 1. A local journal describes it as one of the most successful Temperance gatherings ever held in Worcester. Mr. Noble and Mr. Gough delivered earnest addresses on the different aspects of the Temperance question, and various friends present expressed hearty good wishes for the success of Mr. Noble's tour in America and the Australian colonies.

A DAY AT MOUNT HERMON SCHOOL.

By AN ENGLISH VISITOR.

THE labours of Mr. D. L. Moody have been marked by such phenomenal activity, and have touched, at so many points, the spiritual and social life of two hemispheres, that it would be hazardous to prophesy what will be the most enduring monument of his remarkable and unique career. He has himself been heard to say that he considers the founding of the Northfield Seminary for young women, and the Mount Hermon School for young men, to be "the best things he ever did;" and probably he is right. Without making needless comparisons, it is, at any rate, safe to assert that these Christian schools are destined to influence the future of some of the most devoted and consecrated youth of both sexes, not only of America and Great Britain, but of other lands; and through them to swell the currents of religious thought and practical Christianity, the wide world over, to the end of time.



MOUNT HERMON SCHOOL—RECITATION HALL.

Leaving out of view for the present the Seminary for Young Women, which is the older institution of the two, I am anxious to acquaint the Christian public with the brief but promising history of the Mount Hermon School, and, if possible, to secure for it their most earnest and sympathetic consideration. Having successfully established the Girls' Seminary, Mr. Moody purposed in his heart to provide a similar institution for youths and young men. Doubtless he was moved to this by a recollection of the meagre opportunities for self-culture that came to himself in the spring-time of his life; he was determined that other young men whose hearts were fired with a high and earnest resolve, should have a fair chance of making the most of their God-given powers and aspirations. He took steps to interest some Christian friends in the project, and it was not long before one of these, Mr. Hiram Camp, of New Haven, Conn., gifted to the evangelist the sum of $26,000 for the purchase of the necessary land. To quote from a brief statement recently issued in connection with the school:—

"A location was selected with reference to health, to remoteness from crowded neighbourhoods, and to freedom from the adverse influences often found in large villages. It is on the west side of the Connecticut River, opposite Northfield, on high, sloping ground, and commanding an extensive view of river, valley, and mountain. Two good farms lying side by side, and containing more than 400 acres, were purchased, some necessary changes made in the buildings, and in May, 1881, the school was opened. Since then five brick buildings for boarding and lodging have been erected, and a brick schoolhouse three stories high, costing about 30,000 dollars. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars have been expended for land, buildings, and current expenses in the last four years. A building with rooms for two hundred students, and a dining hall and kitchen for the entire school, are now in process of erection."

Such is a brief but succinct outline of the rapid progress that has already been made in carrying out the cherished plans of the evangelist. As I have hinted, the main object of the Mount Hermon School is to educate young men, endowed by God with ample powers of mind and body, and in whose hearts there is a desire to play their part nobly and well in the great arena of human life, but who could not otherwise secure the needful training, whether physical, intellectual, or religious. Amid the many and multifarious agencies in the present day for the instruction of youth, there are few that pretend to educate the whole man, so that he may be thoroughly fitted to enter and to hopefully pursue any of the ordinary walks of life. Mr. Moody rightfully believes, with Joseph Cook, that "in the scheme of the universe there are no half hinges." Man is body, soul, and spirit; if the first and second are nurtured, at the expense of the third, the man will be a distorted and incomplete specimen of the race, and will fail to accomplish the great and glorious destiny to which he is called. If the second and third are developed, while the first is neglected, his will be a stunted growth at the best, and the temple of the soul will be a poor dwelling-place for its wondrous inhabitant. At the Mount Hermon School provision is made for the daily nurture and growth of every capacity bestowed on man by the great and all-wise Creator.

That the plan and purpose of the founder are being faithfully carried out I can, to some extent, personally vouch. A beautiful day last mid-September, spent on the breezy heights of Mount Hermon, will not soon fade from my recollection. Everything in the world of nature conspired to charm the senses, to interest the mind, and to move the heart. The sun shone out from a cloudless sky and bathed in beauty the fair panorama that unfolded itself on every side. As I was driven across the Connecticut Valley by Mr. Sankey, from the Northfield side, in the fresh, crisp morning air, our route lay among verdant meadows, fields of ripe and bursting corn, copses of maple, elm and sumac all being rapidly transfigured into autumnal glory, with the peaceful silver river creeping seawards. The scene was one well fitted to make the pulses quicken with indescribable delight, and to raise the thoughts in holy adoration to Him who has made everything in this world so beautiful after its kind.

When we reached the Recitation Hall, we found the 100 boys and young men with Professor Sawyer (the Principal of the school) and his assistant lady teachers, assembled for morning worship. The boys had been astir for some hours before, some of them being detailed for the household duties pertaining to that part of the day. After a jubilant song of praise (in keeping with the eloquent voices of nature all around) the Principal led his large family in prayer and read a portion of Scripture. One of the lady teachers gave the students an exercise in mental calculation that would have speedily and hoplessly floundered anyone not in training, but which seemed child's play to these young and ardent students. This exercise was cut short to enable Mr. Sankey to give an impromptu professorial lecture on the art of sacred song. His valuable hints about good, square, honest, unpretentious work in this department of Christian service, and his personal reminiscences of early attempts in the field in which he has since become so famous, will no doubt be long remembered, and I trust profited by.

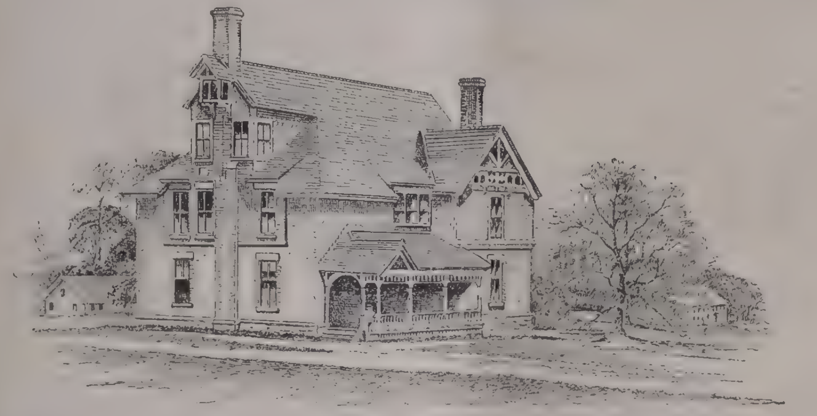
"Recitations," or studies, began immediately after worship, and continued for about four hours. These studies are broken up into "periods" of forty minutes each; they embraced, on this day, Bible Study, Arithmetic, Algebra, English Grammar, Latin, Greek, Physics, Music, Reading, and Astronomy. The first and the last two subjects were taken by Mr. Sawyer, the Principal. I had the privilege of being a pupil pro tem., with no small pleasure and satisfaction to myself. To pass from the consideration of such deep and inscrutable problems as Divine sovereignty and free will (illustrated by the hardening of Pharaoh's heart), to the rules of rhetoric; and then to scale the starry heavens and wander through the mazy labyrinths of astronomical lore, in the half of a single forenoon, was an experience that humdrum mortals might well wish for, but can seldom enjoy. Verily, to the young men at Mount Hermon School the lines have fallen in pleasant places, and they have a goodly heritage. That they are fully sensible of this, it was an easy matter to discover. Those with whom I took occasion to converse throughout the day, needed no prompting to wax eloquent about the enviable circumstances of their lot.

Various classes proceeded during the forenoon simultaneously. A necessarily brief attendance on several showed that the lady members of "the Faculty" possess the art of "teaching the young idea how to shoot" in a very marked degree. Mr. Moody, I may say, has been at much pains to secure qualified and capable teachers; a considerable number of the ladies who direct the studies both at Mount Hermon and the Northfield Seminary are graduates of Wellesley College, one of the foremost halls of emale learning on the American Continent. During the summer months, when he resides under his own roof, Mr. Moody himself makes ne of the Faculty, and his lecture talks to the young men are a source of great attraction and njoyment. Among these hundred scholars on Hermon's Mount, there are no doubt a few dull and stupid ones, but I believe both Mr. Moody and Professor Sawyer are of opinion that, on the whole, they are almost paragons of perfection, not only in deportment and temper, but in aptitude o learn. It may not be amiss to add here hat one large room in the Recitation Hall forms a Library, or rather will do so when the present meagre supply of books is sufficiently enlarged. If some generous friends will take this matter n hand, they will not only beautify the empty bookshelves, but add an important item to the equipment of the school.

Dinner followed the recitations, and thereafter ame the physical exercises of the day. Principal Sawyer kindly drove me over the farm in his buggy, so that I had the opportunity of seeing he varied kinds of manual labour in which the pupils engage. The grain harvesting was over t the time of my visit, but a score or so of he students were busy reaping, binding, and tacking a splendid crop of Indian corn, which is so large and important a factor in the dietary both of man and beast, in these delectable regions. Others were actively employed n the laundry; others were engaged in housework of different kinds; others were cleaning out the school building; and yet others were doing some of the hundred and one odds and ends hat need to be attended to on a large farm. Some of the boys who perform the household duties morning and evening engage in play, if so disposed, during a part of the afternoon. Later on there was the usual evening "milking bee." Some eighty cows are kept on the place, and all f these are milked or otherwise tended by the tudents, who also feed the pigs, attend to the dairy, churn the butter, and so forth. In the winter time, of course, there is comparatively ittle outside work, but I was assured that there s always plenty to do. A very few hired hands are engaged by Mr. Holton, the resident practical farmer; but, otherwise, the entire work of he farm is compassed by these young students. Thus they are prepared, line upon line, and precept upon precept, for the honourable and ancient occupation of tilling the soil, should their leanings subsequently carry them in that direction. Private study comes in the evening. At present all the boys are housed in groups of twenty or less, with two ladies in charge of each handsome dormitory, one of which is represented by the smaller engraving. The new dormitory, which I found to be rapidly approaching completion, will provide accommodation for about two hundred more, under one roof. At a comparatively early hour the students seek the repose that will fit them for the similar engagements of a succeeding day.

I was privileged to spend a portion of the evening at the Professor's house, where he and his estimable wife had gathered the half-score of lady teachers for a season of social intercourse. Mount Hermon appears to me to be exceptionally fortunate in its Principal. Few successful instructors of youth that I have met, have exhibited less of the professional pedagogue than Mr. Sawyer. With a singularly scholarly mind, he evidently combines a range of acquired knowledge that is almost encyclopædic, and a courteous, kindly demeanour, not always found in those who occupy such positions. During those memorable evening hours, surrounded by his lady helpers in this noble work, he led us, in a brilliant, conversational way, into some of the toughest psychological problems of modern times. That we emerged into the clear light of ascertained and undisputed fact, I cannot assert, for the Professor admitted freely that, in considering the marvellous interrelations of spirit and matter, there is a point where human investigation must stop, confess its incapacity and its ignorance, and be content to wonder and adore. As I walked back to Northfield, under the silent stars, the moon shedding her silvery radiance over the lovely and varied landscape, I could not but envy the young men of Mount Hermon, who are receiving, at the comparatively trifling cost of thirty pounds per annum, such a comprehensive and Christian education as will fit them to "play the man and win the fight" in the great battlefields of human thought and work.

Mr. Moody is greatly desirous that, of the two hundred additional young men whom he will soon be ready to receive at the Mount Hermon School, at least one-half should come from Great Britain and the European Continent. It would be matter for congratulation, not only to him, but to the young men themselves, if this should be accomplished. In the overcrowded centres of our British population, at least, there must be many young men, of sixteen years and upwards, who are ambitious to lead a worthy and useful life, and who yet find it very difficult to secure the needful training, or to find scope for their energies in the jostling avenues of industrial life in the Old Country. Let them go forth to these vaster Transatlantic fields, and they will find abundant outlet for all the consecrated talents they possess. The cost is but small, as I have said, and they will soon be able in some part of the great American Continent to carve for themselves an honourable and worthy career. America requires many such men to-day, and she will accord them a hearty welcome. The powers of the world, the flesh, and the devil, are actively at work all over the land, and in the coming struggles between good and evil there will be much need of all who will come to the help of the Lord against the mighty. They are wanted, not merely as evangelists and "Christian workers" so called, but as men of business, men of toil, handicraftsmen —men who will be ready and eager to carry their Christian principles into every department of political, commercial, social, and domestic life. If a phalanx of twice fifty such young men in the Mother Country will cross the ocean, and, after spending three years or so in this "High" School at Mount Hermon, will go out into the States of the Union to live or God and man, Mr. Moody will, indeed, have good reason to believe that the founding of this school was "one of the best things he ever did," by the grace of God.



THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—Through the generous aid of your readers the Committee of this Society were able, for upwards of three months last year, to provide daily breakfasts for 200 destitute men. Numbers professed to find the Saviour at the Gospel services which followed every meal. Many honest and deserving men not only received temporary assistance, but were placed in good situations, in which they have since maintained themselves and their families.

With the advent of cold weather, there is a renewal of the outcry for help, but our hands are tied until the means are forthcoming. Within a few yards of the Society's Mission Halls are lodging-houses from which men are nightly turned adrift to walk the streets for want of fourpence to pay the cost of a bed, and the poor fellows are physically unfit for work on the following day, even if fortunate enough to obtain it. It is true that this Society exists primarily for spiritual effort. The committee, however—sympathising deeply with the distressed and starving crowds, who would gladly work if permitted to do so—feel it incumbent upon them to minister "those things which are requisite and necessary as well for the body as the soul." Who among your readers will enable them to do so?

E. J. MATHER, Secretary.

OBITUARY.

JOHN HAMPDEN FORDHAM.

THE intelligence of the death, on Monday weeks in Scotland, of Mr. John Hampden Fordham, of Phillimore-gardens, W., will be received with profound sorrow by all who knew him. Few laymen with wealth and influence have done more, and with so little ostentation, for the glory of God and the highest welfare of their fellow-men. To many he has been best known for many years as an ardent worker in the cause of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and his removal from a sphere of duty which he really loved, will be much deplored in Queen Victoria-street. He was never weary in promoting the great objects of the Society. He also took a deep and personal interest in the work of the Christian Colportage Society, of which it may be said he was one of the founders. He was an active and liberal member of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's London Committee. A man of sterling evangelical Christian piety, he was ever ready in the service of his Master; to him the advantages of wealth and position were only opportunities for opening his heart and hand in support of the cause of religion and humanity. Mr. Fordham had been in delicate health for some time He married a daughter of the late Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and sister of the present baronet. He leaves a widow and three sons.

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

GREAT MEETING IN EXETER HALL.

THE series of great meetings in the North of England in favour of the Social Purity Crusade was followed by a magnificent gathering in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening last, when a densely packed audience spoke out with hearty enthusiasm and perfect unanimity on this matter. Soon after the doors were opened the hall was filled. At seven o'clock the area was packed, and before the meeting commenced, at half-past seven, so great was the struggle for admission that not even standing-room could be obtained.

Mr. Francis Peek was in the chair, and on the platform were Mrs. Josephine Butler, Prof. Stuart, M.P., Mr. Percy Bunting, Mr. W. T. Stead, Mr. Bramwell Booth, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. Newman Hall, &c. These and other prominent gentlemen were cheered when they came on the platform.

The Chairman called upon Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who had to leave to address a meeting on the same subject in the East of London, to give some account of the progress of the crusade in the North. Mr. Hughes, who was greeted with great cheering, said that during the last twelve days they had visited eleven cities in the North, and Mr. Stead, who had suddenly become a great orator as well as the most brilliant journalist of our time, had spoken every day (except the first Sunday), and sometimes twice. They had travelled 1880 miles, and they had addressed more than thirty-one thousand of the men and women of the North. The most gratifying fact was that no one solitary hand had been held up against the resolutions put to the meetings. He described the immense gatherings that had received them, and said that so crowded were the audiences that many could not gain admittance, and several overflow meetings were held. At Manchester he suddenly got a meeting held at the expense of the United Kingdom Alliance, and he was happy to say that a resolution of sympathy with Mr. Stead and Mr. Booth was unanimously passed. A gigantic meeting was held at Sheffield last night, and how much, he asked, was there said about it in the London papers? If any trumpery twopenny-halfpenny party politician made a foolish speech, there were long reports of it, but here was a most magnificent series of meetings, and, so far as he knew, the morning London journals had not notified that one of them had taken place. He read a few sentences from The Sheffield Independent, which contained a long report of the meeting in that town, describing the meeting as one of the largest ever held in the Albert Hall, many having failed to get admission. The London papers had been humbugging their readers. He got a great many letters from all parts of the country, and he could say that the readers of these papers were becoming profoundly dissatisfied with this want of justice and fair play. They came back from the North of England to say that the heart of England was sound on this question. So was the heart of Scotland, and his friend, Mr. Russell, told him that the heart of Ireland was sound also, and he himself could speak for little Wales. The late Lord Shaftesbury once remarked that the South of England was different from the North of England—that it had no backbone; but he believed that on this question the South had a backbone, and that London was right in the matter. It was an interesting and encouraging fact, that the last time Lord Shaftesbury appeared in public was to speak in favour of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. Should they turn their back on the work? Never. They might put as many of them as they liked into prison. There would be tens of thousands left to carry on the work. Mr. Hughes related an incident which occurred to the Rev. B. Waugh, who, although weak in health, had worked with the energy of a hero and a martyr in this cause. When pushing his way through a crowd of roughs to The Pall Mall Gazette office when the revelations were appearing, a pickpocket came up to him and said, "If you're the cove as done it, I would not rob you for the world. Governor, here's your wipe." The London pickpockets had a nobler sense of justice and purity than the so-called aristocracy. Should Mr. Stead go to prison and to the treadmill? ("No.") No; not to prison, but to Parliament. (Cheers) He does not want to go, but we must make him. (Renewed cheers.) Mrs. Josephine Butler had issued a manifesto to electors, asking them to return only men of pure, just, and virtuous principles at the general election. In proof that there was much need of this, Mr. Waugh was asked by one of the present "honourable" members, when asking him to vote for the clause of the Bill allowing children to give their evidence without taking the oath which they did not understand, "What have I got to do with children? Let their mothers look after them." Then, again, a well-known London minister had had the audacity to say that vice was a necessity. But the degraded, filthy, and blasphemous C. D. Acts were at their last gasp. He ventured to prophesy that the enfranchised democracy of England would crush them for ever. On that platform had stood the great champions of the anti-slavery crusade, the great champions of the Temperance crusade, and that night they stood there to announce another great moral crusade that was advancing from victory to victory. Mr. Hughes was heartily cheered as he left the hall.

The Chairman announced that a declaration had been sent to the Government signed by 2116 clergymen and ministers of all denominations, strongly deprecating "the employment of public funds and Government authority to prosecute the persons who had exposed a great national evil and secured great remedial measures." He stated with regret that he had received a telegram from Mrs. Booth saying that she was too ill to be present that evening; read a letter of apology for absence but also of sympathy from Mr. Spurgeon, and a telegram from the secretary of the Oldham Nonconformist Ministers' Association, notifying that they had just passed a unanimous expression of sympathy with Mr. Stead and Mr. Booth. Referring to the case of Messrs. Stead and Booth, the Chairman said the first Crusade was when the inhabitants of Christendom arrayed themselves under the banner of the Cross to rescue the holy shrine of Palestine from being defiled and trampled under foot by the infidel. This new Crusade was to rally all Christians under the banner of the Cross, to rescue the holy shrine of womanhood from being trampled on and defiled. If Mr. Booth had committed a legal offence, it was such an offence as he would himself commit to-morrow. Only Lloyd's Newspaper and the Society papers dared to impute anything but purity of motive to Mr. Stead. The object of the meeting, however, was not so much to express sympathy with the defendants in the celebrated trial, as to promote the social purity movement.

Professor Stuart, M.P., moved a resolution, expressing sympathy with Mr. Stead and Mr. Booth in the painful circumstances in which they are placed, thanking them for their heroic exertions in promoting the Criminal Law Amendment Act, and rousing public attention to the wrongs of innocent girls; and protesting against the use of Government authority and public money to crush them while no real criminals have been prosecuted. He affirmed his belief that the heart of London was true in regard to this great question, because it consisted for the most part of the common people. Their enemies were merely endeavouring by a prosecution to divert the determination of the common people to a side issue. In 1881, Lord Shaftesbury, speaking on this very question, declared that it would be necessary to lay bare such great cruelties. They had evidence that there had been a growing increase of vice in great towns in forms that ought to be criminal, but which were not, and by the recent revelations a strong, good Act had been secured dealing with the matter. Taking it as a whole, he said nobody could deny that the Criminal Law Amendment Act was due to the editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, and it was a shame that Mr. Stead, who had done so much to protect the daughters of the poor, should be prosecuted and that the real criminals should go free.

Mrs. Josephine Butler, who was greeted with prolonged and enthusiastic cheers, said Mr. Stead went down into the hell of vice, because he was clothed with the armour of manly virtue. All felt sympathy for Mr. Stead and Mr. Booth. She asked sympathy for a poor friend of hers, of whom she told two anecdotes. She had taken into her own room and nursed a girl so bad that she could not have been received into the ordinary wards of a Lock Hospital; had told her of the Saviour's mercy, and the poor sinful woman died in peace. Mrs. Butler added that her friend had gone to a man and wife who kept a brothel, and by the force of love induced them to leave it, and yield themselves to Christ. The name of her friend, who having had much forgiven loved much, was Rebecca Jarrett. Mrs. Butler likened this prosecution to that of John Brown in the United States for helping slaves to escape into a free State. John Brown was hanged, but shortly after that four millions of slaves were emancipated; that was a blessed hanging. They knew the lines of the song—

> "Old John Brown is dead and gone,
> But his soul goes marching on."

And so, if the Government put three or four of them in prison, they need not care, for the soul of this great movement would go marching on.

The resolution was then put and carried with acclamation, not a hand being held up against it.

Mr. Stead, on rising to speak, received a tremendous ovation. The audience rose en masse, waved handkerchiefs and cheered vociferously. Mr. Stead commenced by moving the following resolution: "That this meeting pledges itself to support, by all means in its power, the new crusade against criminal vice and public immorality, and hopes to see the work of the National Vigilance Association extended. It also calls upon the Government to detect and punish those who practise criminal vice and destroy the virtue of young women." Referring to the words of the previous resolution, he declared that there were no "painful circumstances" about the matter. He had just returned from a twelve days' experience of one great triumphal progress, and he never felt prouder in his life. It might be "painful" for them; but, as for him and his fellow-workers, they were full of joy, pride, and exultation, and he was inclined to pass a special vote of thanks to Mr. Poland, the Crown Prosecutor. He had not uttered one disrespectful word against his prosecutors. On the contrary, he had spoken of them everywhere with gratitude, for he had been able to stand up in the presence of his countrymen, even if it were in a police-court, and justify, as far as he was allowed, what he did. He felt grateful and wished to express his gratitude there—and they were not very far from Bow-street—to the magistrate who heard the case. He did him and the cause more good than he wot of, by enabling him to print what he had to say as a suppressed defence. For one man that would read a defence that was not suppressed there were six who would read a suppressed defence. But that was only another proof that the work was not of man's doing, for those who had worked against them had been their best friends, and, although they were inclined, in the words of the Salvation Army, to "hang on behind" the old chariot, it had been sent rolling forward, and no one had rolled it along more rapidly than Mr. Cavendish Bentinck and the Crown Prosecutor. The memorial read by the Chairman contained the statement that the prosecution was intended to crush them. He must say, if that was so, it had falsified the intention of its promoters in a most extraordinary way. The emissaries of evil were only the advertising agents of the good cause. Mr. Stead protested against their only including himself and Mr. Booth in their expressions of sympathy. He had done nothing to deserve sympathy compared with Mrs. Jarrett, who, at the urgent entreaty of Mrs. Butler and himself, had revisited her haunts of infamy and risked her own soul. Then there was Mr. Jacques, who was so anxious to serve the cause that during the last week he had gone over to the Continent and traced English girls who had been carried away to houses of ill-fame; and also Mdme. Coombe, who should receive their sympathy. Referring to some remarks addressed to the reporters, he protested against the audience complain-ng of the silence of the Press. When the novement for the abolition of slavery began n America, the Boston papers were against it, nd they could not expect the London papers to e more virtuous than the excellent papers of Boston. It was a great inspiration for them vho were on their way to the Old Bailey to be ped there with good wishes and God-speed from o many men and women. It would be a great onsolation for them when they lay on their lank beds. If that audience were the jury they vould not go, but he thought if he were sent to aol it might do more good to the cause than nything that had yet happened. The prosecuion already had done enormous good. It had oused the great mass of their countrymen into oble indignation; it had filled multitudes, who ever would have known what the subject was, vith profound compassion, and it had done much o purify the moral life of the country. If he vere convicted and sent to prison he was sure hat the flame kindled in England would not be xtinguished, but would burn more brightly and indle fresh hope and inspire with fresh enthuiasm millions throughout the world. Mr. Stead hen, with great earnestness and feeling, detailed he circumstances that led him to take the ction he did. Let them ask Mrs. Butler and Iiss Ellice Hopkins and others who know, vhether he had exaggerated the truth. As Ir. Samuel Morley, a member of the Mansion Iouse Committee, said in the House of Comnons, the half had not been told. Some people aid that these things were too horrid. Would to od they had been made horrid long ago. They ved a smooth, smug, comfortable life, while irls were going to ruin all round. He conemned the apathy of many ministers and proessing Christians, and said they could hold eetings and declare that he should be hanged this life and damned in the next if they liked, ut let them do something to save the girls. Ir. Stead, having pointed out several amendents that should be still obtained to the Act, ncluded as follows: "This is probably the last me I shall stand up publicly in London till I and up in court, and I wish to say to all you eople here, should it go hard with me, and I ould be silenced for a time behind the walls of entonville, remember and pray for me and ine, as I have tried to work for you and urs." (Shouts of "We will, we will!" "God ess you!" and prolonged cheering.)

Loud cries were raised for Mr. Bramwell ooth. That gentleman, who was warmly eered, briefly addressed the meeting, urging e people to continue the work that had been gun. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. ercy Bunting, Rev. Newman Hall, and Mr. cques.

Rev. NEWMAN HALL said he had only come to ten and learn. The conclusions to which he d come were that he would imitate his friend, r. Spurgeon, in subscribing £5 to the Defence und; that magistrates and the Lord Chamberin should control places for drinking and nusement which encouraged the passions that oduced these crimes; that there ought to be, as e Bishop of London demanded, the same law in spect to street solicitation for men as for women; at, as vague charges had been made which posed innocent persons to suspicion, these ould be protected by the exposure of the really ilty; that if the Government were so zealous attacking the gnat of legal error, they ought, course, to assail the camel of moral guilt; at the wedge of gold and Babylonish garment hich might bring the curse of God on the tion should be dragged to light, whether the nt be of canvas or gold-embroidered silk; and at, in the Parliamentary election, political mpathies should be subordinate to the requireent of a "godly, righteous, and sober life."

The Pall Mall Gazette of Friday, from which e substantially take the foregoing report of the xeter Hall gathering, says, in an Editorial Note, to the "conspiracy of silence":—

"The magnificent meeting in Exeter Hall last ght meets this morning with the customary te at the hands of the morning papers. The mes, Standard, Morning Post, and Daily Teleaph do not mention it at all. A brief and eagre outline of the proceedings is given in The Daily News and Daily Chronicle. The Daily News in its report states that our Chief Director in his speech went over much of the same ground which he traversed in his rejected defence at Bow-street, which was published at the time in The Daily News. As The Daily News did not publish a syllable of the rejected defence, this excuse is characteristic. But now that the London newspapers have taken to suppressing every reference made even by bishops to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, it is not surprising that they should refuse to report the speeches of less reverend men. We publish to-day, for instance, the remarks of the Bishop of Gloucester at his Diocesan Conference—which he sends to us with a letter full of sympathy and encouragement—but, of course, they will share the fate of similar utterances reported in the last few days from Bishop Claughton and the Bishops of Southwell and Lincoln. Our editors have indeed become so marvellously moral nowadays that they even have to reject as unfit for publication the pastorals of bishops."

The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, speaking at Bristol last week, said he had been most strongly requested to speak of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, that now, he thanked God, was a part of the law of the land:—

That this Act was passed in consequence of certain frightful revelations is as plain a matter of fact as that we are now in this chapter-room. No one of common candour can possibly deny this. I do trust that the clergy will now remember more than ever that a terrible responsibility is laid upon us in regard especially of the younger members of our flocks. "Our teaching," as the Bishop of London well says, "should be graver, more earnest, more solemn, than it has ever been before." It is our duty too, to take every possible precaution, when the younger members of our congregations leave their home and their parish, and pass into new and, it may be, perilous surroundings. We in country places know well how the great cities are absorbing not only those of more mature years, but the young and, it may be hoped, in most cases the comparatively innocent; and how those who may have been the subjects of warmest prayers are, year by year, passing from us into the dreadful temptations of the peopled city. This we know, and, knowing it, can we fail to do everything in our power to provide help for them when our eyes can be no longer over them? Surely it is our bounden duty not to let any of our children, wherever it can be possible, pass from our parishes without commending them to the care of the clergyman of the parish where they may be going, and of providing to some extent for their future protection. Further, too, we all may do much in stemming the terrible tide of sensual sin now threatening to sweep away all purity and chastity, by forming vigilance committees to assist the various local authorities in carrying out the salutary Act to which I am alluding. That Act falls, in many respects, far short of what many of us might desire; still it is a great advance upon former legislation, and it is our bounden duty to adopt every means in our power, and to strain every nerve to make it work and be effective. May the God of purity and of love unite us all in this most urgent and most blessed undertaking.

In a leading article last Monday on "The New Chivalry," The Pall Mall Gazette describes the remarkable series of gatherings addressed by Mr. Stead, its Editor. With reference to the essentially religious character of the meetings, the writer says:—

"They are in some respects more like revival services than political demonstrations. They are almost invariably opened by prayer, the appeals throughout are addressed to the conscience and higher nature of the hearers, and it was thoroughly appropriate that the last of the series was closed with the benediction by the Bishop of Southwell. No one who has taken part in these meetings, and been even temporarily in touch with the glowing enthusiasm, the fervid faith, and the intense compassion which possess the audiences, can help feeling that they indicate a very genuine and altogether unexpected revival of a practical Christian spirit in the land, much too wide and deep to be confined to any Church or sect. There is the true ring of a practical democratic chivalry about these meetings. They indicate a new advance in the elevation of one sex, and the acceptance of new standards of moral obligation by the other. It is no small boon to England that on the eve of a general election the masses should be so deeply stirred in favour of an appeal to protect the weak and helpless, and to seek and save those which are lost."

At the Wesleyan Chapel, Stamford-street, after the usual service on Sunday evening last, Rev. George A. Guest delivered a pointed address to a congregation of men only. It was listened to with marked attention, and appeared to produce a deep impression. Mr. Guest's example might be profitably imitated.

REVOCATION of the EDICT OF NANTES.

THROUGH more than four-score years,
[O Nantes, thy name
Had told the Huguenots a tale of joy;
And in the arts of peace they found employ,
Unscorched the while by persecution's flame.

Then hell-born bigotry presumed to claim
Authority from Heaven to annoy,
Impoverish, imprison, or destroy
A people far more meet for praise than blame.

A new Nebuchadnezzar's dire decree
Then bade the saints, whose faith on Christ alone
Reposed, their God-taught confidence disown,
And bow to graven images the knee— [round
Deep thoughts of grief e'er since that day sur-Thy name, O Nantes, which once with joy was crowned. W. SANDFORD.

PREVENTIVE WORK IN IRELAND.

DEAR SIR,—There is at present a Home in Dublin for receiving and protecting young girls, who, from various causes, are found in positions of peril and temptation, but who have not yet entered the ranks of the criminal or the fallen. A large number are found just between these two classes, and such a link was needed.

During two years and a half about 120 girls from the ages of twelve to twenty have been admitted. Most of these have been taken from bad surroundings, or from positions of danger and temptation. After a few months of training many of them are sent to situations as household servants, but not lost sight of; a few have emigrated.

There is in connection with the Home a casual ward, in which girls are received who come to the door friendless and homeless, directed perhaps by a friendly policeman or a lady in the street, in some cases foot-sore with a weary tramp from some distant part of the country, expecting to find a situation on their arrival in Dublin. On inquiry, they are often found to be trustworthy and honest, and are kept till they get a situation or return to their friends. A free registry is also carried on, and in this way many are helped, who might otherwise be found, if not in the poorhouse, in some of the haunts of sin. FANNY M. SIBTHORPE, Hon. Sec.

PROVIDENCE HOUSE, LEICESTER.—As the traveller approaches Leicester from the North the train carries him through a network of streets. On the left stands what not long ago was a dreary-looking, deserted carpenters' shed; now it is a bright and happy home, full of the sounds of industrious toil, and sometimes ringing with religious worship. This change has been wrought by many loving hands, under the direction of Rev. F. B. Meyer. One dismal morning, whilst waiting at Leicester Gaol-gate, he was impressed with the desire to aid the prisoners who were discharged each morning at 9 a.m. From that day to this, each person, stepping from the forbidding portal into the unsympathising world, has been met with a friendly greeting and an invitation to a plentiful and appetising breakfast, during which kind and earnest words are spoken. It would be impossible to tell one-tenth of the thrilling interest of the conversations over those little tables in the Welford Coffee House. Suffice it to say that in hundreds of cases promises have been made of amended lives, family quarrels adjusted, prodigals restored, and pledges of total abstinence taken, which have been justified by the experience of many months.

REFUGES AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

By ONE WHO KNOWS.

SIR,—The statements respecting "Homes and their Management" in a former number of The Christian, are calculated, I imagine, to excite public curiosity regarding them. As the case stands at present, the public verdict must be adverse, and the questions will be asked by many Christian friends: What can be done? Is it not useless to preach the Gospel to the outcast when you cannot do the Gospel by pointing out a way of escape? Indeed, these questions have been asked very frequently; and the very fact that such has been the case, has led to "right about face" in a number of places. Committees have seen that the discipline of a convict establishment is totally unfitted for one where evil should be overcome with good. I have put a few facts together, without embellishment, that you may see what a variety of modes exist for the crushing out of the great social evil.

In a provincial Home is a room kept for all applicants. In this, each woman remains a week, unseen and unspoken to except by the person who supplies her meals. It is a week's solitary confinement, previous to mixing with the other women. The effect of this imprisonment may be judged by the fact that two girls managed to escape by climbing the iron gates, sixteen feet high.

Can anyone wonder that applicants for admission are few, managers listless and cold, funds deficient, and the place badly spoken of outside? The cruelty of the whole proceeding excites one's surprise. Here, a young girl wanting to give up her bad life applies to those she believes to be Christians, and is at once condemned to what must be to her a terrible punishment. The iron enters the poor creature's soul, and, as soon as she can, she gets back to her former life.

But there is, in another provincial Home, a perfect contrast to this. Here, when a poor wretched one asks for help, she at once gets it. She is cleansed, fed, and prayed with; she is met by kind and loving words and actions; the grating of a lock is not heard; she was free to come, she is free to go. The matron makes her case her own; she weeps with them that weep, and, although this dear woman has been many years engaged in the rescue of prodigal daughters, her heart is as soft as ever, for all she does is as for the Lord, so "God makes her heart soft."

At another provincial institution, which some friends were looking over, they were shown that by the books of the establishment the inmates had earned, in twelve months, an average of £32 each. "What reward have they received?" inquired one present. "Reward!" cried the matron; "they have reward enough in being allowed to be here, the hussies." Upon being shown over the house, it was remarked that in one room—a large one—there were beds, without carpet, chair, stool, hook for clothes, text, or picture. At one end was a very large window, the glass of which had been whitened, some panes being of wood. A friend remarked upon this. "Yes," said the matron; "yesterday as I came home from church I saw some of the women looking after the fellows. When I got in I ordered them to whiten the windows, and they broke some; so I have had wood put in, and if that will not do I will try iron." "Ah!" said one of the visitors, "had you not better get rid of the brimstone and take to the treacle?" She replied, "I should like to have you here for a month, and see what you would do."

It will perhaps be seen that the value of this matron consisted in her labour-extracting power. The Committee judged her by the £32 per inmate, not, certainly, by her Christ-like demeanour, words, or actions. Will anyone be surprised that there are women who would rather starve and die than enter such a Bastile?

But, not a thousand miles away is another place, where a good many women may be found, where all is sunny, clean, and good. In the workroom they are stitching away, looking very happy, with tame canaries flying from shoulder to shoulder. We happened to be passing when coals were being taken in at the garden gate, which was unwatched. It was the girls' recreation time after dinner. They were walking and playing about, but none ran away. No, they knew better; the matron of this home is a wise, young, little body, and lovingly carries out the rules of the Committee, the result being that the poor lost ones, coming to the home very, very wretched, learn to love those who really aid them in their terrible task of getting back to a virtuous life.

When a young woman enters this establishment, she is placed in what is called the third class, where she remains six months, receiving sixpence per week to spend or save as she pleases. At the expiration of that time, she passes to the second class and has a shilling per week, remaining thus six months more. At the end of twelve months, she is placed in the first class and receives eighteenpence per week. Having conducted herself well for the eighteen months, she is then removed and treated as a boarder, waiting for a situation, receiving board wages for the work she does. During the time she remains amongst the probationers she has the choice of three dresses and three bonnets, out of a number of patterns. These dresses are hers, the bonnets also. Locks and keys, high cast-iron gates, stringent convict rules, are not needed. The love of Christ in the managers is stronger than they. The unfortunates find in this institution a Home.

In another real Home is another motherly matron, where the following incident occurred. An interesting young girl with a beautiful head of hair went to the matron and said, "Oh, matron, I want you to cut off my hair." "Why," said the matron, "it will disfigure you so; and why need it be done?" "Oh," said the girl, "I have such a terrible temptation to go out again that I shall never be able to remain, as I want to, unless my hair is taken off, and then I must stop in till it grows again." The hair was removed, preserved by the matron, and the girl stayed contented.

The work of a matron is very arduous, often taxing to the utmost all her Christian graces. She has to carry out rules made by well-intentioned, good, Christian men and women, but who, having no real experience such as hers, make great mistakes, as often being too lenient as too severe. A matron, a very efficient woman, said one day to a friend, "I am going to leave." "Indeed! Why?" "Let me tell you," said she. "The other day I detected a man employed here, in robbing the place. I mentioned what I knew to one of the lady visitors, when she directed me at once to send the man away. I did so. The next day, another lady visitor calling, I told her what had been done. She reproved me for sending the man away, and directed me to send for him back. I was obliged to do so. From that moment I seemed to have lost all command in the house, and I have given notice to leave."

Not only do matrons find their authority and influence undermined, but in many cases they are under paid, and their apartments very meagrely furnished. When receiving their quarter's salary, possibly of five pounds, they look at their doctor's bill to be paid out of it, at their fast-decaying wardrobe, at their increasing years, and the probable workhouse, and at all the wear and tear of their difficult soul-trying occupation, and can anyone wonder that they droop under their Christian-inflicted crosses? "Ah!" says a dear friend, "they should have faith." "Yes," says another, "and so should Committees, and pay and lodge them better, if only that they may be properly respected by those over whom they are placed."

I know a model establishment for the rescue of women, which is a credit to the town in which it is found. In this institution there are three matrons. The first receives sixty pounds per annum, the second fifty, and the third forty; so we have here three women of superior abilities, who value their position, and combine to make the establishment a complete success.

I could say something about the teaching of the inmates of Homes, but for the present forbear. The only desire I have in putting these facts on paper is to benefit existing institutions, by letting managers see what may be done by common sense and the Gospel, and what may not be done by clinging to severe old methods. You can form no idea of the discouragements I, in common with other workers, meet with from the managers of institutions. We start to save; very often they, and they only, block the way. We protest, they treat us as lunatics.

In consequence of the very repressive systems carried out in some Homes many Christian friends are running to the opposite extreme, and are sending young women to service before they are ready. This is a growing and serious evil. I condemn it for several important reasons:—(1) It is unjust to the girl herself. (2) It is unjust to the employer, for there may be young persons in the family open to enticement. (3) It is a false move. In no case can a young woman who has been of corrupt habits and conversation, for a short or long period, be broken from these and acquire new habits all at once. Every woman should remain in a Home until, in the estimation of the matron, she is able to work efficiently as a servant, has shown herself reliable as regards truth, honesty, and cleanliness, and is believed to have renounced for ever all her old companions.

By Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU.

I have been thinking a very great deal lately over the improvements that seem so urgently needed in this kind of work. Our present system is costly, and partakes too much of the treatment of criminals. I believe that the influence of pure and holy men on our fallen sisters might prove an immense help. Scarcely any of them have had much knowledge of a father's love or a brother's protecting care, and if, instead of the matrons usually in charge of these Homes, we could have wives and husbands, devoted to the care of these unhappy ones, who would throw round them a true home influence, I think we might expect to see a deeper work of grace wrought in their hearts, accompanied by a radical change of character. Real Holy Spirit work will sometimes accomplish in three weeks what years of ordinary training in a Refuge will fail to do.

I was immensely struck with Rescue work conducted on these lines in a Home in New York, which is managed by a devoted young couple. One floor of the house is reserved for their own use; the remainder is furnished for the reception of friendless girls at any hour of the day or night. There is no locking in, and a girl is free to leave whenever she chooses. I inquired as to the results of this training, and was told that after three or four days of life in the Home, if a girl does not yield her heart to the influence of the Holy Spirit's work, and become a new creature in Christ Jesus, she is unable to stand the pressure of the Gospel message, and leaves. In the great majority of cases, however, true conversion takes place, accompanied by a thorough change of character. I asked how long such girls were retained in the house, and the reply was, "On the average, not more than three weeks." "And then?" "The Lord opens doors for them in all directions. Some are returned to their friends, some go to service. We never have any difficulty in finding suitable occupations for all." The mighty work of God in connection with this Home was deeply interesting, and the fatherly influence of this Christian man, as head of the house, taking family prayers and directing each individual, seemed to me to be the secret of the great blessing.

In the work after midnight on the streets also, this good man and one or two companions are specially owned of God. Respectful salutations, a murmured "God bless you!" a hearty good-night, greeted them from the most abandoned. Many listened for a few moments at quiet corners to loving messages of the Saviour's power. I cannot but think that wise-hearted men of God might occupy much time profitably by going out late at night, two or three together, never singly, to win the lost, and lead them to Christ.

To render such work thoroughly effective, we need small houses, presided over by Godly men and women, to whom those desirous of forsaking their evil life could be handed over.

APPEALS FOR FUNDS.

DEAR SIR,—I wish to record my protest against e views of your readers who are "annoyed beause they find a notification at the end of so many rticles that funds are needed." Most of us reuire to be reminded, even if those very sensitive rethren do not, that the work of the Lord cannot e carried on without funds; and surely there is no me so effective, nor so suitable for this reminder, s just when the story is told of what God hath rought. Seeing these workers are giving their me, their influence, themselves, to the work, they hould have ample opportunity to make known heir wants, so that those wants may be supplied y such of the Lord's stewards as are not able themelves to engage in the hand-to-hand conflict with he powers of darkness.

I trust that you will continue to append each ppeal to the record of work and warfare for the laster.—Yours very truly, D. ROXBURGH.

Edinburgh, October 14.

[Our own view, as we have repeatedly expressed , is that the story of any work with a simple tatement of present need, ought to be sufficient, ithout making dead appeals for help, which ecome painful in their monotony.—ED]

OUR GIPSY AND VAN CHILDREN.

SIR,—At the recent Nottingham Goose Fair I oughly calculated that there were about 120 childen living in over fifty vans and covered carts, and nder old sheets, rags, and street stalls, drawn ither by their parents, donkeys, ponies, fat and an horses, some of which were scarcely fit for the nacker. This heart-aching fact stared me in the ce—that but few of the poor ignorant children ould read or write a line. Connected with one of e highly-gilded shows there were a man—appantly well off, and with plenty of cash in his ocket—wife, and twelve children, not one of whom ould, so I was informed, read the names of the reets.

Previously I attended St. Giles' Fair, Oxford, and scertained, during the dusk and twilight hours, as ell as I was able, that there were over 100 children ving in the eighty vans, carts, and waggons. In e van there were man, woman, and seven sons nd daughters. Nearly all the children were going ithout education except that picked up "on the ad," and among the dregs of society. At the eicester Cheese Fair I found over sixty vans and overed carts used as homes, and in them there ere nearly 100 children growing up without the ducational advantages other working-class children re enjoying. There were, a few nights ago, close my door, in an old ricketty house on wheels, ended with rags, paper, and putty, and ornaented by dirt, two men, one woman, and five sons nd daughters of all ages and sizes, huddling togeer, and only one could read.

Some of the van travellers are respectable, and re anxious to lead good and honest lives, and also do something towards educating their children, ut as yet we have neither helped them—except in few cases—nor has the State taken the poor gipsy nd van children in hand to educate them, as it has one other children.

At the Nottingham Goose Fair, I attended a a-meeting given to 150 showmen and travellers, c., by some ladies and gentlemen, and I explained them the object of the simple, short, easy Bill I m promoting on the lines of the Canal Boats Acts f 1877 and 1884, to bring about an improvement the condition of the adults, and the education of e children, without the aid of policemen; all the avellers, showmen, and so-called gipsies, thooughly and heartily agreed with my plans. It is nough to move a heart of stone to see brightyed, pretty, ragged, dirty, neglected children—y, and men and women too—receiving the beauful picture-books and papers that I have given em, and, with a deep-drawn sigh, they have ften said, "I cannot read, sir; I wish I could." he Government and the country will do well to et in motion, without delay, the influences and gencies that will put 30,000 van, gipsy, and other avelling children and adults, in the way for the lessings of this life and the life to come.—Very ncerely yours, GEO. SMITH, of Coalville.

The Cabin, Crick, Rugby.

P.S.—Daylight must be let in some day upon the eatment the little van slave girls are receiving at e hands of some of the van slave-driving masters nd mistresses.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

SIR,—In my opinion the weak point of Sunday-school teaching is that many of the teachers are not themselves converted, and consequently they are unable to point their scholars to the Saviour. The blind cannot lead the blind in the Sunday-school more than in the Church. We need superintendents and teachers consecrated to God, and filled with his Spirit, or we cannot have the results of Sunday-school teaching that we might have.

"FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME."

DEAR SIR,—I was delighted to see your notice of this book by Pastor Chiniquy. A more thrilling work I have seldom read. It is large, and somewhat costly, but its perusal will amply repay the purchaser. I have known not a little of the Romish system, having lived in Ireland and in America; but to me the revelations made in this publication are both startling and horrible. Were they not made by a man whom I know to be a most holy man, they would be deemed incredible. The book reads like a romance, but it has the advantage of being true, and "truth is stranger than fiction."

Yours truly, W. T. M'CORMICK,
Vicar of St. Matthew's, Brighton.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MRS. HORTON AND MISS PARKER have with much success conducted Purity meetings in various Yorkshire towns.

MR. HENRY VARLEY is in Derby during the present week, addressing the people of that town on subjects relating to personal, social, and national purity.

MISS BREWSTER has concluded a four days' Gospel Temperance Mission at Crediton. The meetings were largely attended, and it is believed that much good has resulted from them.

CLAPHAM.—Young men who can read music are invited to join a Gospel Male Choir, in connection with Miss Spicer-Jay's meetings for men. Intending members should write to Miss Spicer-Jay, Willowdene, Kings-road, Clapham Park, S.W.

CHESTERFIELD.—The quarterly breakfast and conference of the Lodging-house Mission, in connection with the Ragged School, was held on Sunday, October 11. Many of the workers gave interesting and encouraging accounts of work amongst this class of our migratory countrymen.

MILNTHORPE.—Dr. Morris, missioner of the Parochial Mission Society, has held a week's mission services here, which have been well attended, especially by the working classes. Many have been aroused, and consecrated themselves to the Lord. The work has been a deep and heart-searching one.

WIGTON, N B.—A ten days' mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, has been a time of great blessing. Christians of all denominations have come together and worked in the common cause. We thank God for the few who have decided to follow Jesus, and we feel encouraged to go on. J. B.

MR. D. M. DRYSDALE has recommenced for the season his Sunday evening services in Hengler's Circus, Liverpool. At the opening service it is stated that over 6000 persons were present. With his earnest presentation of Gospel truth, and the help of a large band of workers, great things may be looked for during the winter.

GIPSY SMITH, who has conducted a six weeks' mission at South Wimbledon in a tent, recently brought it to a close. Some fifty people have been brought to a clear knowledge of the truth. A room has been secured opposite the Flock Mills. The Countess of Lindsley gave £5 towards the expenses of the mission.

TO CLERGYMEN AND WORKING MEN—Our Vicar has had in operation, in the most sin-stricken street of Penge, for the past six months, a mission-room which was rented from a poor woman who was glad to get the two shillings a week which we pay her, and it is a fact that nearly all who have come into that room are those who would not go to church or chapel because of their clothes and other reasons. The cases (by God's help) brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus are very varied, not a few being fallen women. I may say that we prayed, sometimes by ourselves at first, that God would incline the people to come in, and He has now shown us how He answers prayer. The work has all been in the hands of working men with the exception of one. It is the outcome of a small prayer-meeting which the Vicar used to have once a week for men. This is a hint to clergymen, which I trust will be blessed.

Christ Church, Penge. H. B. P.

PORTSKEWET.—A very interesting series of evangelistic services was conducted in Portskewe Presbyterian schoolroom last week by Mr. Thomas Eyres, hon. secretary of the Children's Evangelistic Mission, London. Mr. Eyres has the rare gift of gaining and holding the attention of children. Children and grown-up people have been deeply impressed by the services, and it is hoped that in some instances a saving change has been effected.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—The Battleaxe, the official organ of the Church Army, will in future be published every week. Rev. F. S Webster, M.A., who has left his curacy at St. Aldate's, Oxford, in order to take charge of the new London Training Home, will act as editor. We may congratulate the Church Army on this step forward, and heartily hope it may be the means of reviving and deepening the spiritual life in many parts of the land. At the Church Congress and at several Diocesan Conferences the working of the Church Army was very fully and most favourably discussed.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—On Sunday, Oct. 11, the members of the Christian Community commenced an effort to gather in the outcasts from the streets of London during the night. Several of the workers parade the streets, and give tickets of admission to their hall in Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, to those whom they find to be in want. In the morning they get a good breakfast, after which a religious service is held. It is purposed to carry on these meetings during the coming winter. Any interested in this work may communicate with the Secretary, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, London, N.

THE STORY OF A PICTURE.—Mr. Gawin Kirkham commenced lecturing for the winter season on his Dutch picture "The Broad and Narrow Way" at "The Welcome," Upper Norwood, on Saturday evening the 10th inst. The room was crowded, and a choir of ladies and gentlemen sang very sweetly some appropriate pieces from "The Christian Choir." This is the sixteenth season this allegorical picture has been used in this country, and the 584th time Mr. Kirkham has expounded it. Those who wish to include the lecture in their winter programme, should write Mr. Kirkham, Open-Air Mission, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C. Copies of the picture may be had at the office of THE CHRISTIAN, price 1s. 3d.

MR. OPIE RODWAY, through a sudden attack of illness, has been obliged this month to relinquish engagements at Penarth and Swansea. He is, we are thankful to learn, better, and has been holding meetings at Maindee, near Newport, Mon. (Rev. Mr. Cook's). Good meetings were held on October 11. God's Spirit moved powerfully in the meeting. Twenty-two penitents stood up and then walked into a separate room. One big, strong man, as he went in, was so deeply moved that he fell down on the floor and cried for mercy. Many before they left found peace in believing. The workers have taken the names and addresses of fifty-one persons, besides the little children, many of whom are deeply concerned.

NEW METHOD OF EVANGELISING.—A party of six gentlemen, delegates to the Y.M.C.A. Conference at Inverness, have recently completed a most interesting evangelistic tour. They left Edinburgh in one of Messrs. Sloan and Son's caravans, built specially with the view of taking holiday excursions. The party state that it is the most profitable and enjoyable holiday they have ever spent. They had a small American organ, and, all of them being musical, they succeeded in gathering large crowds wherever they went. Their object was to get at people in out-of-the-way agricultural districts, where the people have few, if any, opportunities of attending evangelistic meetings. Large open-air and indoor meetings were held in Kinross, Milnathort, Dunkeld, Forres, Nairn, &c., with most encouraging results. A question was asked at the Inverness Conference—"What is the best method of reaching young men in agricultural districts?" The answer was given—"By caravan," and there was a general agreement, from the experience of the party, that there could be no better means devised.—Highland News.

CITY OF LONDON LAY PREACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—Ministers and others arranging meetings in their halls, or wishing for substitutes during their absence, are invited to write to the Secretary of this Association, who will (providing there are members at liberty) send competent persons to conduct their services. Address Hon. Secretary, City of London Lay Preachers' Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

INFLUENCE OF PROTESTANTISM ON SCIENTIFIC CULTURE.

A SCIENTIST who bears an illustrious name, and who himself is eminent among botanists, M. A. de Candolle, published last year a second edition of his curious "Histoire des sciences et des savants depuis deux siècles." This work, whose aim and general tendency is not in favour of religion, contains, nevertheless, many passages which prove the decided influence that the Protestant Church and its ministers have exercised for two centuries on the development of natural and social sciences.

Considering the divers causes which may influence the number, direction and success of those men through whom science has advanced, he says "Non-Christian countries are completely strangers to any scientific movement . . . . All that can be said is that this religion, by a general influence on civilisation, is favourable to science." After quoting some statistics he goes on to say, "Thus there should be on the lists of associates or correspondents of the principal academies about double the number of Catholics to that of Protestants . . . . but on the list of foreign associates of the Paris Academy, from 1666 to our own days, there are eighteen Catholics and eighty Protestants . . . On the list you will not find a single English or Irish Catholic. Austria is not represented there, and, in general, Catholic Germany is almost entirely at fault as compared with Protestant Germany.

In Switzerland, where the two populations are distributed in different cantons, or mixed together in certain of them, and where the Catholics are in the majority, there are fourteen Associates, but not one Catholic. We all, however, in Switzerland breathe the same air, and in all the cantons we have the same Republican Government. . . . Then the difference in the number of learned men must result, in great part, from the effect which religion exercises either in family or school education, or on the morals, ideas and instincts transmitted by heredity." Celibacy of the clergy is therefore not a matter of indifference in looking at the excess of Protestant over Catholic savants. "The simple existence, in Protestant countries, of married ministers, assures the growth year by year of a certain number of educated, respectable persons, who exercise over society a happy influence. . . . Among the many men who during the last two centuries have become illustrious for learning and knowledge, there are a great number who were the sons of Protestant pastors or ministers." The sons of physicians, surgeons and chemists on the same list are only five. And yet the habitual studies and work of these men are much more in the sphere of science than those of pastors, which goes to prove that it is not an affair of heredity only. Evidently it must result from the more regular manner of life, often in the country, and the more careful and moral family influence. In seeking the philosophy of the scientific superiority of Protestant over Catholic populations, M. de Candolle says, "The essentially authoritative method of the Catholic clergy diminishes curiosity and arguments, timidity of mind, whilst the more experimental method of Protestant pastors acts in a contrary manner."

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SPAIN.—A school of quite a new character was opened at Seville, Oct. 1. The noble art of tormenting and killing bulls will there be taught! A Madrid journal satirically asks if that is one of the fruits of the new law respecting Public Instruction.

THE GERMAN CHRISTIAN LITERATURE SOCIETY has just held its autumn meeting in Berlin. The object is to distribute Christian journals and sermons in factories, hospitals, public-houses, the streets, &c. There were last year 100.000 subscribers to the Sunday sermon, and 100,000 papers had been left in public-houses.

ST. SERVAN, FRANCE.—Mrs. Fraser writes from this place:—"We had a three weeks' visit from M. Elie Vernier this summer, and his prayers and ministrations were greatly blessed in stirring up believers and arousing some to become inquirers. He is one of the most vigorous out-and-out Christians I think I ever met, and his beaming, happy face made a great impression on our poor people, who still talk of him with pleasure."

MRS. PRINSEP, writing from the Hotel du Petit Louvre, Marseilles, France, states that she has been circulating Testaments and Gospel leaflets among the electors during recent elections. She has received the Testaments through Mrs. Robertson's Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, but she asks for help in defraying the cost of the leaflets. Mrs. Prinsep purposes visiting Palestine in order to place copies of the Old Testament in the hands of some of the many Jews there who do not possess it.

ZURICH.—Although, as Mr. Cheyne Brady pointed out the other day, the tendency of much of the preaching in the Swiss Reformed Church is towards Rationalism, yet it is a matter of thankfulness to know that when the Gospel is faithfully preached it attracts in Switzerland as elsewhere. One Sunday, at nine o'clock in the morning, in the pouring rain, nearly 2000 people found their way to the Neumünster Church, about two miles from the city, to listen to the much-beloved Pastor Ritter, who addressed a powerful, earnest, and faithful appeal to his congregation upon "Redeeming the time, because the days are evil." On fine Sundays there is scarcely standing-room for the congregation, so eagerly do the people crowd to listen to the preaching of the Gospel.

INDIAN SLAVERY.—Very few are aware of the fact that a secret system of slavery is going on in our midst, under the cover of popular ignorance and popular apathy. It is a notorious fact, to which attention has been many times called by individual cases, that the present class of native "unfortunates" in Calcutta is partly recruited by the sale of little girls, sometimes by their parents, to women of ill-repute. The number of minors kept in the houses of ill-fame of this city, and being trained up as professional public women, is quite large. The present law provides a remedy for this evil. It has made penal the obtaining of girls under age for criminal purposes, and with a little exertion many may be rescued from their present lot. But where is the Home to receive them? The doors of Society are shut against their back. The question of opening homes of refuge for this class of girls is a vast question, requiring at the very outset the raising of a large fund—for which, alas!—public opinion does not yet seem to be ripe.—Indian Messenger. [This is a hopeless and unbelieving way of looking at the horror here described. God might well complain that He is left out of the calculation.—Ed.]

KENDAL Y M.C.A.—During the past year the membership of this association has increased, the religious meetings have been largely attended, and the interest in the Bible-classes has been well maintained.

DESTITUTION IN EAST LONDON.—Rev. W. E. Hurndall, 16, Cottage-grove, Bow, E., pastor of Harley-street Congregational Church, writes:—"The great depression in trade has thrown many out of work, and prevented those already out from obtaining employment. A pinching summer threatens to be followed by a very bitter winter. Our six missionaries and 120 weekly visitors, who call upon 5,000 families, are coming in contact with a rapidly-increasing amount of distress. I am anxious to recommence at once our soup-kitchen work, breakfasts for destitute children, dinners for dock labourers, and other winter agencies, but I cannot do this until more help reaches me. I shall also be exceedingly glad to receive gifts of clothing, new and old, tea, coffee, rice, oatmeal, and other groceries.

Y.M.C.A. IN IRELAND.

THE Belfast Association has issued a most attractive programme for the winter session. Foreign missions are receiving much attention. At the opening meeting of the session at Cookstown, reports were submitted which showed that this Association was in a flourishing condition. The energetic branch at Rathmines, which looks after the spiritual wants of the young men in this suburb of Dublin, held its opening meeting on Friday week. During the following week evangelistic meetings were held in the skating rink by Rev. T. L. Johnson, coloured missionary, and Mr. McCann. The meetings were well attended, and numbers professed to find the Saviour.

SOLDIERS' HOME, WINCHESTER.

DURING the last seven years "The Soldiers' Home," Winchester, has been the birthplace of many souls, both among soldiers and civilians. The evangelistic work has greatly increased, the Lord having opened doors which Miss Perks dared not refuse to enter. The mission has now nine stations, besides The Soldiers' Home. At Eastleigh, and at Netley, there are mission halls, and at the other places there are mission-rooms. Besides the Sunday services, there are on week days classes for men, women, and children at the different stations.

Miss Perks has a most devoted helper in her sister, who spares no pains in training the converts who have musical ability to take part in the work of the Gospel Choir. Having recently spent three weeks with the Misses Perks, I can testify to the importance of their work, and the reality of the blessing which rests upon it. I would appeal for practical sympathy with those devoted, persevering labourers. Katherine F. Haire.

ROBERT MOFFAT.—The portrait of this veteran missionary, given in our last issue, was engraved from a copyright photograph taken by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, Baker-street, W.

UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE.—The annual meetings at Manchester last week were largely attended. In the resolutions and speeches it was held that effective Temperance legislation should have a foremost place. Electors were urged to vote only for men who would support Local Option.

Y.W.C.A., HACKNEY AND CLAPTON.—A social evening was recently spent at Seymour House, to inaugurate the winter's work. Upwards of eighty members and friends were present. A week later a public meeting was held in the Hackney Town Hall, when addresses were given by Mr. George Williams, and several neighbouring clergymen and friends.

GERMAN GOVERNESSES.—It is proposed to hold a series of drawing-room meetings in London on behalf of work among this class. The first will be at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, next Saturday, October 24, at 3 p.m. Our London readers are asked to draw the attention of any German governesses or maids, as well as of Swiss, speaking German, among their acquaintance, to this meeting.

THE MEDICAL AID SOCIETY (2, East India-avenue, E.C.) endeavours to provide necessitous gentlewomen with surgical and medical attendance in time of sickness, free of charge. The last report says, "Dissipated fortunes, forsaken wives, ruined homes, helpless widows and children, all show that much of the misery which this Society seeks to alleviate is attributable to the gentlemen of England." During the year 1700 medical attendances have been registered.

The New Crusade—Vigilance Work Indeed!

Dear Christian Friends,

The demands for help in rescuing Little Children from the gravest perils have of late been unprecedented in number and in intensity of distress.

From all parts of the Kingdom communications by telegram and letter are received almost daily; and up to this we have not refused aid in one single case of any urgency.

Our winter's work has therefore commenced early, and is already seriously pressing upon us from every quarter, while 1,400 other children in the Homes need daily care and support. Through the goodness of God our Preventive and Rescue organization, perfected by many years' experience, enables me now to hold out helping hands to almost every phase of real child misery or danger.

But I am compelled, although reluctantly, to tell you that, for many weeks past, we have experienced the keenest pressure, and not a little trial of faith, owing to the very serious falling off of funds during the autumn recess.

Economise as we will, we cannot diminish our expenditure below the point of £100 per day. Our receipts for nine weeks have not unfrequently been under £30 per day.

I have no doubt our Heavenly Father has had some wise purpose in thus testing the faith of His servants. Perhaps, also, one reason for this recent experience may have been that such a statement of our needs might thereby come to many hearts as a trumpet-call for generous aid in this most important enterprise.

Very gratefully indeed will the contributions of God's people be received and acknowledged if addressed to the Treasurer, William Fowler, Esq., M.P.; or to

Your Fellow-servant among homeless and perishing Children,

"This is a book to recommend. It is useful as calling attention to a large class of our fellow-countrymen whose manners, customs, and interests are less known to us than those of the Zulus. A great deal has been done during the last few years to ameliorate their position, and Mr. Ballantyne has an interesting appendix on the subject. The book strikes a blot in our social life. The Dutch 'coper,' which carries fiery Schnapps and worse among the trawlers, has had all its own way for years, and the Mission boats have up-hill work to perform."—The Saturday Review.

"The story has all the excellencies which mark Mr. Ballantyne's books."—The Scotsman.

"Mr. Ballantyne writes with a purpose, viz., to point out the evils of the 'copers,' or floating grog-shops, which accompany our trawling fleets all the year round; and to advocate the claims of the Mission, which is doing its best to counteract their influence among our twelve thousand hardy mariners whose literal 'home is on the deep.'"—The Athenæum.

"'The Young Trawler' has many of the best characteristics of its well-known author. It abounds in humor, and it is rich in pathos. It deserves careful perusal, and will profit as well as please both young and old. The thrilling incidents are not creations of the imagination, but are facts gathered during a personal visit to the deep-sea trawling fleets."

The Family Churchman.

"Mr. Ballantyne has excelled himself. He gives a graphic description of the toils and privations undergone by the North Sea fishers, and of the temptations of the vile 'coper,' as well as of the good work done among them by the Mission vessels."—The Record.

"The book is interesting in its description of life in the fishing fleets."—St. James's Gazette.

"Mr. Ballantyne's flowing pen has never produced a book more worthy of his literary skill, or more likely to do real public service. . . . Many will read it for the graphic portraiture of life at sea; many more we trust will welcome it as a faithful record of well-done work for the highest good of a deserving class of the community."—The Christian.

"Characterised by the highest moral tone, and, better still, by a spirit of love and loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ."—Word and Work.

"We do not hesitate to say that all who read this book—and we have no doubt many thousands will soon do so—must become deeply impressed by the striking incidents narrated and the facts adduced."

The Edinburgh Courant.

"It directs public attention to a class which has great claims upon our sympathy."—Manchester Guardian.

HURSDAY, OCTOBER 22.—GENESIS VII.

.—"Come thou and all thy house into the ark." 'The preceding chapter accounts for a period of) years. At the beginning of that period (vi. 3) d had declared his will to destroy mankind by a od, unless they profited by the time still given em for repentance. Noah is ordered to prepare ark, the building of which may have occupied e greater part of this season of respite. He is d at the very first that he and his sons are to go o the ark," &c.—Sp. Com. The common notion at Noah tried to persuade those around him to e refuge in the ark, has no support in Scripture. e was "a preacher of righteousness" (2 Pet. ii. and when there was no repentance, though he long-suffering of God waited," judgment fol-ved. From this judgment he and his sons and eir wives were alone excepted. With him, and th them alone (for his sake), God's covenant s made (vi. 18). If the universality of this dgment of "all flesh" be considered a difficulty, must remember the remarkable and unex-apled mercy conferred upon this generation by e Lord Himself, between his death and resurrec-on, alluded to in 1 Peter iii. 19.

2.—"Of every clean beast thou shalt take," &c.—It is not improbable that the distinction even of e names 'clean and unclean' had been fully tablished by custom, long before it was recognised d ratified by the Law."—Sp. Com.

23.—"Noah only remained alive, and they that re with him in the ark."—The typical teaching Noah's preservation, as alluded to in 1 Pet. iii. —22, points to the person and work of the Lord sus as typified by Noah and the ark. As Noah d those that were with him were borne up aloft safety above the waters of judgment, so Christ d those that are in Him are, by his death and surrection, carried above the sphere of judgment. ence the saving element in baptism is "the peal of a good conscience toward God through the surrection of Jesus Christ, who is gone into heaven."

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 23.—GENESIS VIII.

4.—"The mountains of Ararat."—"The belief at this is the mountain range now commonly lled Mount Ararat . . . . rests on a very un-rtain foundation. Far more probable is the inion that Ararat was the ancient name of rmenia itself, or rather of the southern portion of rmenia."—Sp. Com. "In the seventh month, on e seventeenth day of the month."—On the sup-sition that the year of the Flood began with Tisri, e commencement of the Jewish civil year. "We ve (says the "Speaker's Commentary") the ry remarkable coincidences that on the 17th day Abib (the seventh month), the ark rested on ount Ararat—on the 17th day of Abib the raelites passed over the Red Sea—on the 17th day Abib Christ our Lord rose again from the dead."

7.—"And he sent forth a raven," &c. 8.—Also he hath sent forth a dove," &c.—"The mis-on of these spies, the raven and the dove, express e experience of the saint in the contrary workings the flesh and Spirit which contend in him. The ven never returns. The earth may be still un-urged, but the unclean nature can take up with . The 'present evil world' will do well enough r fallen, degraded man. Noah will not trust her, t sends out a clean creature after her; and fferent indeed are the tidings which she bears. he dove returns instinctively. There was no rest r her in a place still under judgment of God and purged."—J. G. B.

21.—"And the Lord smelled a sweet savour" R.V.)—"Literally, 'the savour of satisfaction or electation.'"—Sp. Com. "For the imagination of an's heart is evil from his youth."—This was the ason, in ch. vi. 5, why God's anger was moved to stroy man from the face of the earth. Here, der the sweet savour of the accepted sacrifice, it comes the reason for his showing pity and sparing nful man, in spite of the incorrigible evil of his llen nature.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24.—GENESIS IX.

1.—"And God blessed Noah and his sons," &c. —"Noah, now become the second head of the uman family, receives a blessing, the former art of which is but a repetition of the blessing first ronounced on Adam (chap. i. 28)."—Sp. Com.

4.—"But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat."—A preparation for the significance to be attached to blood in relation to sacrifice, so fully developed afterwards in the Levitical law (see Lev. xvii.).

6.—"Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."—Before the Flood man was not permitted to avenge the blood of his fellow, hence Cain was not allowed to be slain. But when man's violence and wickedness had so corrupted the earth as to bring down upon it God's vengeance, He now grants man for his own protection the institution of government or magistracy, as to which St. Paul says (Rom. xiii. 4), "He beareth not the sword in vain, for he is a minister of God, an avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil" (R.V.).

13.—"I do set my bow in the cloud."—"Lit., 'I have set my bow.' It would be doing no violence to the text to believe that the rainbow had been already a familiar sight, but that it was newly constituted the sign or token of a covenant."—Sp. Com.

21.—"And he drank of the wine and was drunken."—In allusion to the efforts to palliate Noah's sin, by ascribing it to his supposed ignorance of the effects of wine, "The Speaker's Commentary" says, "We may well follow the wisdom of Calvin, and say 'Learning all this in uncertainty, let us learn from Noah's intemperance how foul and detestable a vice drunkenness is.'"

27.—"God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem."—The enlargement of Japheth points to the widespread territory of the descendants of Japheth, "reaching from India and Persia in the East to the remotest boundaries of Europe in the West, and now spreading over America and Australia." As to the latter part, many interpreters, Jewish and Christian, understand "He (i.e. God) shall dwell among the descendants of Shem" which has been fulfilled in Jewish history, but chiefly in the Incarnation. Others take it of Gentile admission to Jewish privileges.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 25.—GENESIS X.

1.—"Now these are the generations of the sons of Noah."—"It is admitted on all hands that there exists no more interesting record, ethnological and geographical, independently of its Scriptural authority." — Sp. Com. There are seventy names mentioned as descendants of the sons of Noah, not including their three names. This is the foundation of a Rabbinical notion that the Gentiles consist of seventy nations, and Olshausen and others think that our Lord, in appointing the seventy (Luke x. 1) in addition to the twelve (the number of Israel), hinted by anticipation at the call of the Gentiles.

8.—"Nimrod."—"The name itself, 'we will revolt,' points to some violent resistance to God. It is so characteristic that it can only have been given him by his contemporaries, and thus have become a proper name. Nimrod the hunter became a tyrant, a powerful hunter of men. This course of life gave occasion to the proverb, 'Like Nimrod, a mighty hunter against the Lord,' which immortalised not his skill in hunting beasts, but the success of his hunting of men in the establishment of an imperial kingdom by tyranny and power. But if this be the meaning of the proverb, 'before the Lord,' or 'in the face of Jehovah,' can only mean 'in defiance of Jehovah,' as Josephus and the Targums understand it."—Delitzsch.

10.—"The beginning of his kingdom was Babel." —"The well-known city of Babylon on the Euphrates, which from the time of Nimrod downwards, has been the symbol of the power of the world in its hostility to God."—Ibid.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26.—GENESIS XI.

1.—"And the whole earth was of one language," &c.—"The general opinion of the Jews and ancient Christians was that this language was Hebrew. The names of the most ancient places and persons mentioned in Scripture being Hebrew seems to countenance this belief."—Sp. Com.

4.—"A tower whose top may reach unto heaven." —"That is, 'a very high tower,' just as the cities of the Canaanites were said to be 'great and walled up to heaven' (Deut. i. 28, ix. 1). Many have identified this tower with the temple of Belus, which the mound called Birs Nimrod is generally supposed to be. Josephus gives as the motive for building the tower of Babel that the builders feared another deluge, and hoped that the tower would be high enough to save them from its waters; Nimrod, the leader in the scheme, boasting that he could so defy the vengeance of God."—Ibid.

8.—"So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth."—The original command to Noah and his sons was to "replenish the earth" (ix. 1), which involved spreading abroad. The Babel effort to "make us a name lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth," was in direct defiance of this command. It was a concentration of man's efforts and energy in order to withstand God's purpose. Something like this appears in the history of Christendom. God's command is, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." But before long, Christian effort is concentrated upon building an ecclesiastical city and making itself a name, but God calls the city "Babylon the Great" Rev. xvii. 5. "Whenever God has a corporate witness on the earth, Satan has a Babylon to mar and corrupt that witness. When God connects his name with a city on the earth, then Babylon takes the form of a city; and when God connects his name with the Church, then Babylon takes the form of a corrupt religious system called the great harlot, the mother of abominations."—C. H. M.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27.—GENESIS XII.

1.—"Now the Lord had said," &c.—By comparing this narrative with Stephen's speech (Acts vii.) we gather that as God's original call (here given) included Abram's coming out "from his father's house," he did not at first fully obey it, inasmuch as his father accompanied him. Hence the delay at Haran till his father's death.

"Get thee out of thy country," &c.—"Noah left the ark under commission to keep the world in order as judge and ruler. It was not strangership on it, but citizenship in it, and government of it, that was (then) the Divine thought. But a second apostasy was witnessed in the midst of Noah's descendants. In process of time they affected independency in the earth, casting off the fear of God, and seeking to do for themselves without Him. . . . Abraham is called out from this apostate scene."—J. G. Bellett.

3.—"In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."—"That which was the special blessing to Abram's race, has also, springing from that race, become the universal blessing to mankind. Of him 'as concerning the flesh Christ came.'"—Sp. Com.

7.—"There builded he an altar unto the Lord, who appeared unto him."—"In Ur of the Chaldees, God had said, 'a land which I will show thee.' Now he says, 'a land which I will give thee.' And let it be observed that here 'the Lord appeared.' Before this He had 'called' and 'spoken' to Adam, and Cain, and Noah, and Abram; but we never hear of his 'appearing' till now; for it is to the spirit of faith, above all others, that the Lord shows Himself; for faith brings man into trial, and trial needs special revelations, and these are not withheld."—A. Jukes.

10.—"Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there."—"The rest of this chapter is the history of his personal want of faith. Pressed by circumstances, he does not consult God, finds himself in the presence of the world, where he seeks help and refuge, and denies his true relationship with his wife . . . is cherished by the world, which God at last judges, sending Abram again out from it."—J. N. Darby.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28.—GEN. XIII.

1.—"And Abram went up out of Egypt."—"This we may know, that if nature rule us, nature will expose us. Even the man of the earth, Pharaoh of Egypt, puts Abraham to shame; and his journey, instead of being onward in the witness of his tent and in the joy of his altar, was that of a wearied foot because it was that of a rebuking heart. He has to do his first works, to retrace his steps and regain his standing."—J. G. B.

2.—"And Abram was very rich."—"He had grown rich in Egypt. He has now to experience some of the dangers and evils of prosperity."—Sp. Com.

8.—"And Abram said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee."—"Lot now becomes the occasion of trial to Abraham, as the famine had lately been. But faith in Abraham triumphs, I may say, to admiration. The very style in which he gives this trial its answer seems to say that he will return fourfold to the life of faith, for that which nature had so lately, as it were, taken away from it. Lot may choose, and leave Abraham what portion he please. The well-watered plains may be his; Abraham can trust the Lord of the country, though he lose them."—J. G. B.

14.—"Lift up now thine eyes."—"Lot had 'lifted up his eyes,' moved by his own will and lust, and sees the plain of Jordan, well watered—why should he not enjoy it? God makes Abraham lift up his eyes and shows him all the extent of the promise, and with the promise tells him to walk through it all, to realise in this experience and knowledge all the extent of the promise made."—J. N. D.

Subscription does not imply approval of all the means adopted by Mr. Stead and his friends, nor any opinion on the merits of the case now before the Court, but only a desire to see fair play, and that those persons who have been instrumental in securing a great reform of the law and of public opinion, and who have been actuated by the most virtuous motives, should not be crushed for want of money. The prosecution is being conducted with all the resources of the Treasury; the necessary expenses of the defence will be very large, and are estimated at over £5000. But even this expenditure cannot be regretted if, as is confidently expected, the trial shall have the effect of giving greater impulse to the present moral movement. Subscriptions may be sent to the Treasurers, care of P. W. BUNTING, Esq., 11, Old-square, Lincoln's-inn, W.C.

THE NORWICH VICTORIA HALL MISSION.—On Monday, October 12, we held our usual Harvest Festival, to which we had invited our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac, of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff-highway. After a pleasant and well-attended tea-party, Rev. W. A. MacAllan (Presbyterian) presided over an enthusiastic public meeting, when Mr. and Mrs. Isaac gave a most interesting account of the work amongst sailors of all nationalities, who from time to time visit the port of London. At the close thank-offerings for an abundant harvest were collected for the funds of the Strangers' Rest.

-RIENDLESS AND FALLEN. THE REFUGE SYSTEM.

The candid manner in which the Rev. J. E. Linnell expressed his views in THE CHRISTIAN of the 8th inst., on the fuge System, followed as it was by the experiences of others, must be helpful to the good work which so many have at heart. rmerly poor outcast women were left, to a great extent, to perish, even by Christians; but since 1851 there has been a very eering development of earnest effort TO "SEEK AND SAVE."

It is not too much to say that many of the reclaimed, having washed their robes and made them white in e Blood of the Lamb, are now before the Throne; and in the Church on earth there are also many who have not only en morally reclaimed, but truly converted by the Grace of God in Christ Jesus. The definite aim of the ristian should be to follow on the lines of the great Apostolic Evangelist, and preach "Repentance towards God and Faith vards our Lord Jesus Christ."

The admission to Homes is free—"without money and without price." But there are special Homes to meet aternal cases, where payment is required, and I doubt not but that the Managers of such places can give satisfactory sons for the arrangements they have been led to make.

Now while admission to Homes and Refuges is free, it is only right that Christians should know the exact state of the e so far as this Institution is concerned:

ONE THOUSAND AND TWO applications for admission have been made to me since January last, viz., OUNTRY GIRLS AND ORPHANS, and every suitable case has been taken up to the utmost capacity of the HOMES OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE.

At the meeting of the Committee on the 14th inst. it was announced that the Bank account was overdrawn— 313. BUT STILL NO RESTRICTION IS placed upon the work. HE WHO HAS SUSTAINED the work for many years will still enable, and dispose, the hearts of His servants to contribute what is necessary for THE MAINTEN-NCE OF THE HOMES and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE; and more, I believe that He will help, ere long, the omplishment of accepted plans to increase the Homes for young Friendless girls of Good Character, that they may be protected m moral peril.

Donations, so much needed, may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY.—As the result of years of open-air services by Christians of various denominations, a large, attractive, and unsectarian Mission Room has been built in the Struet, Brecon, South Wales. It stands right in the centre of a spiritually destitute locality, where incitements to evil abound. The opening services were accompanied by sights and sounds that made the hearts of Christians ache, and a few weeks ago a poor woman was picked up dead at the very doorstep of the Mission-room as the result of a drunken quarrel. The man who awaits his trial on a charge of manslaughter has since signed and kept the pledge; and from the lodging-houses of tramps, and the homes of drunkenness and poverty, we have been cheered by many signs that our work is of God. The room is used by the Y.M.C.A. The Christian friends of the town have given and collected well, but the place is poor, and there still remains a debt of about £50. Once this is off our shoulders there will only be the ground rent of 20s. a year to meet.

Who will help to keep the Royal Flag waving in this little outpost of the King?

Help will be gladly received and thankfully acknowledged by the Treasurer,

D. Devoir Thomas, Castle-street, Brecon.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, by two years' curriculum. Ladies so desirous may attend midwifery alone. Dr. Griffith, Hon. Sec. Treasurer, G. J. Green Esq., L. and C. Bank, 3, Victoria-street, S.W. Next session commences Sept. 17.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

CASES of a YOUNG WOMAN and HER FATHER.

The name of the female patient is Elizabeth Packham, of 11, Christchurch-road, Streatham Hill.

She came to me first in the early part of last year, and saw me at intervals during a period of five months. All her family were weak at the Chest. She had complained for four years of pains in the chest and side. Cough, worse at intervals, shortness of breath, and at the time I name she was losing flesh and strength.

Following my advice fully she gradually improved, and after the five months was able to discontinue. Taking cold about Christmas some of her old symptoms returned in much less degree, but on resuming my medicine she soon got right again.

On the 9th June she came on behalf of her father, Mr. Packham, of Rusper, near Horsham, and having stated his case was supplied with medicine and advice for him. In her last letter, August 19, she says:—"I am happy to inform you my father is much better in every way. He had taken to his bed when he began your treatment, but soon got better. I thank you for all your kindness. . . . As regards myself I am now quite well."

Bunter's Nervine.

Is admitted by Dentists and the Medical Profession to be

The BEST KNOWN CURE for TOOTHACHE.

Gives permanent relief by painless constriction of the nerve in decayed teeth, forms a complete stopping, and prevents extraction.

From J. F. C. M'Farlane, Esq., Albion Hotel, Liverpool, Feb., 1884.
"On my passage from New York to this country a few days ago, I suffered intense pain from a decayed tooth. My first act on landing was to proceed to a chemist's stores, where I was advised to try 'BUNTER'S NERVINE.' The effect was most magical. The first application gave instant relief. Nearly a week has elapsed, and no return of pain. This to me, in the transactions of large business matters, has been the greatest comfort. Gratitude induces me to make this known to you before I return to America, when I shall certainly take a supply in case of an attack on return voyage."

"I have tried 'BUNTER'S NERVINE,' writes E. Smith, Esq., Surgeon, Sherston, near Cirencester, "in many cases of severe Toothache, and in every instance permanent relief has been obtained."

From the Rev. Aubrey C. Price, B.A., late Fellow of New College, Oxford, Minister of Immanuel Church, West Brixton, S.W., Aug. 20, 1885.
"Owing to extensive decay in two double teeth, I suffered for days excruciating pain. I was recommended to try 'BUNTER'S NERVINE.' I did so. To my joy, the pain quickly and entirely ceased. I have since repeatedly derived the greatest possible relief in severe neuralgic headache from four to five drops of 'BUNTER'S NERVINE,' taken upon a lump of white sugar."

"I consider," writes Dr. J. Hounsell, Bridport, Dorsetshire "'BUNTER'S NERVINE' a specific for Toothache. Very severe cases under my care have found instantaneous and permanent relief. I therefore recommend its use to the Profession and the Public as INVALUABLE."

BUNTER'S NERVINE, of all Chemists, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.

Bunter's Dentine

Having used "Bunter's Nervine," which causes the painless destruction of the Sensitive or Dental Nerve, the next consideration of the patient is, having lost the pain called the Toothache, to fill up the decayed cavity of the tooth with a permanent stopping.

BUNTER'S DENTINE

Is one of the best stoppings on account of its simplicity and durability. It contains no metal or injurious ingredient. Any patient can easily prepare and place it in the cavity of the tooth in a soft state, and in a few hours it becomes a hard and white enamel, forming, as it were, a part of the original tooth.

BUNTER'S DENTINE

Will be found most valuable for incipient decay in children's first teeth, in which the mother can be the operator, covering up the nerve and preventing the cold air from setting up inflammation, which so often occurs to teeth neglected, and where the valuable services of a dentist may not be obtainable.

"BUNTER'S DENTINE" is sold by all Chemists at 1s. 6d. per Packet, or sent post free on receipt of 18 Postage Stamps by MR. GEORGE MÜLLER.

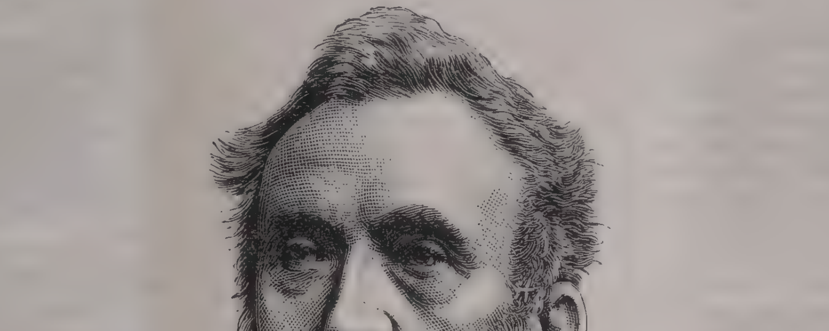
IF there should ever come to be written, by an inspired penman, a list of those who, in New Testament times, have lived and triumphed by faith as did the heroes and heroines of Judaic history recorded in Heb. xi., surely the name of George Müller will occupy no mean place in the wondrous catalogue. His life and work for the last sixty years afford one of the most irrefragable proofs that could be conceived, of the reality of the religion that is inspired by a simple faith in the Word of God, and the revelation of his grace through Jesus Christ—a proof infinitely more convincing than tomes of controversial literature.



Mr. Müller is, by nativity, a German, having been born at Kroppenstadt, Prussia, in September, 1805. He has, therefore, completed his eightieth year. After a somewhat reckless youth, he was soundly converted to God at a prayer-meeting in Halle, at the age of twenty. Says Mrs. Müller,* "He entered the house unconverted, far from God, and miserable; he left it a rejoicing Christian." With the new heart there came speedily a new and active life. He strongly desired to become a missionary — a wish that was not gratified, however, till late in life, when, at the age of seventy, he commenced those preaching tours in different parts of the world which have been the means of spiritual reviving to multitudes. With the view of undertaking Gospel work among the Jews, Mr. Müller came to London in 1829, and pursued his studies; but God had another sphere of work in store for him. Through Christian associations formed in Devonshire, whither he had gone to seek bodily health, he became pastor of a church in Teignmouth. He appears at this time to have formed conscientious objections to the receipt of any stated salary, thinking that the true attitude of the faithful servant was a simple dependence on God alone to supply temporal needs, without any human guarantee. "Since that time, now fifty-six years ago, though possessing no property whatever of his own, he has never received any salary, either as pastor of a large church in Bristol, or as Director of the great Institution which he was permitted afterwards to found; nor does he, under any circumstances that may arise, ever take money from the funds of the institution to supply his own temporal wants, nor even to defray his travelling expenses in the Lord's service, as some suppose; but, whether in England or in other countries, is as wholly dependent upon the Lord now, for everything he needs, as when he first entered on this path of faith."

After two and a half years' work at Teignmouth Mr. Müller was led of God to remove to Bristol, where he began the ministry of the word, in conjunction with a godly Scotchman, Mr. Henry Craik, whose acquaintance he had made at the former place. He and Mr. Craik laboured together in the Gospel happily and successfully, till the latter was called to his rest in 1866. Mr. Müller did not confine his exertions to the field of pastoral service. In 1834 he founded the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad, which has since then accomplished a marvellous amount of work in the establishment of Christian schools, the circulation of religious literature, and the furthering of missionary operations.

In the following year was begun the work among orphans with which the name of George Müller is, and will in coming generations be, chiefly associated. From very small beginnings this institution has steadily grown to its present gigantic proportions, involving an expenditure for buildings and for the support of the orphans of many hundred thousand pounds. All this money has been contributed to the institution without one solitary direct appeal having been made to any human being. The founder laid it down at the beginning, as an axiomatic principle not to be departed from, that the tale of the needs of his work should be told into the ear of God only, as those needs arose. It is true that Mr. Müller has regularly published annual reports of the Orphan Homes, and the other branches of his many-sided work; but he truly says that these are but simple statements of past experience and accounts of stewardship rendered, and not in any sense appeals for help. Without at all reflecting on other methods, or even seeming to assume that Mr. Müller's plan is the only one that ought to be followed, in connection with the support of Christian institutions, it is very manifest that God has clearly set the seal of his approbation on these methods, and honoured the simple, child-like trust and confidence of his servant. That trust has many a time been tried to the last degree, but it has never ultimately been put to shame. We believe we are stating the truth when we say that the thousands of children under Mr. Müller's care, these many years, have never lacked a meal; though it is equally true that there have been times not a few when, as one meal was being prepared, no one knew where the next was to come from.

One of the cardinal doctrines of the work has been that no debt should, under any circumstances, be incurred, and this principle, we understand, has been religiously adhered to. In short, the story of the Ashley Down Orphan Homes is far more truly wonderful than any romantic web of fiction than the brain of mortal man or woman has ever spun.

Space would more than fail us to speak of the preaching tours and missionary labours of the veteran servant of God that have chiefly filled up his time during the last ten years. They are, however, recorded with much circumstantiality and simple grace of diction, by Mrs. Müller, and published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co., of Berners-street. In that volume appears the photograph of Mr. Müller, from which our portrait is taken. The same firm have issued, in three volumes, a "Narrative of some of the Lord's dealings with George Müller." From the publishers of this paper can be had an exceedingly interesting detailed account of the history of "The Bristol Orphan Homes," by Mr. W. E. Tayler. We pray that the bow of our much-esteemed and venerated brother may long abide in strength, and that he may be spared to show to the world that the best way of lengthening out a useful life is to believe implicitly in a heavenly Father's love, and trust in his unceasing care.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH.

By Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER.

It is now nearly 1800 years since this short Epistle was sent to the Angel of the Church at Ephesus; yet we are all individually interested in what was written to that Church, for it is written, "He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith to the Churches." Therefore I am called to hear, because I have ears; and you are called to hear, because you have ears.

In the first place, when we read the Epistle addressed to the Angel of the Church at Ephesus, I consider that by "angel" we have to understand that he was a servant of the Most High, particularly caring for the spiritual well-being of the Church at Ephesus. The word translated "angel," both in Greek and Hebrew, means "messenger," and this individual is called a messenger, because he had to convey God's message to the Church. But while this is the literal meaning, with great comfort it applies also to those who serve generally the Lord Jesus Christ. He says, with regard to the Angel of the Church at Ephesus, that he is in the hands of the Lord Jesus Christ, to be watched over, to be upheld, to be cared for, to be in safety; and this we should particularly apply to ourselves, if in any little measure we seek to serve the Lord. He is our helper, he is our keeper, and we are in safety only in his hands. Let us see to it, therefore, we do not practically say: I can do without the Lord Jesus Christ. That is the sign of danger, when we seek to get away from Him.

We have further to notice that the Lord Jesus Christ walked among the candlesticks; and, though churches are no more to be found with the same measure of Gospel light as 1800 years ago, nevertheless we may still say, for our hearts' encouragement, that the Lord Jesus lives. How is it with us? What are our trials, what are our difficulties? for the Lord Jesus is looking on to see how it is with us, and how we behave ourselves. Yes, He is in the midst of his people. We do not deserve it. Our sins have been so many, our departures from the truth have been so great, that the Church deserves no longer that the Lord Jesus should be in her midst to care for her. The Israelites sinned frequently, and provoked the Most High many times; yet the cloudy and fiery pillar was not taken away during the whole forty years. So it is now; the Holy Spirit is still in our midst; the blessed Jesus, in the Person of the Holy Spirit, is ready to do us good. If we find that we need anything, let us come to Him; only let us see that we walk under the eye of the Lord Jesus Christ. He sees everything that goes on, and hears everything that takes place in our midst. How important, then, when we meet for worship, for meditation on the Scriptures, to see to it that there is no formality, and that we do not grieve the heart of the precious Lord Jesus Christ, who has come among us that He may refresh us, and that we may have joy, and not sorrow.

With regard to the message to the Angel, we have to notice this, of deep practical importance. Before a single word of reproof is spoken, all that which is good and right in the man of God is first noticed. And this shows us how the Lord Jesus Christ acts with regard to his saints. He does not despise all that they do, because this is wrong or because that is not quite right; but He sees what is right as to the spirit in which they act. He takes notice of all. He commends to the utmost what He can commend; but, at the same time, He does not connive at evil and He does not pass it by. And so it is with you and me. Any little thing that He can approve He delights to approve; but at the same time let us keep this before us that the Lord Jesus is not the minister of sin, cannot call good that which is evil, cannot approve of that which is contrary to his mind. And, therefore, after that He has approved of this thing and that thing and the other thing, He comes out with this—"I have against thee that thou hast left thy first love." It pains his heart to say it, but it must be said, though it grieves his heart to the utmost.

This is the practical point for every one of us individually. How is it with regard to the three years, the seven years, the twenty years, the forty years, the sixty years since we were first brought to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ? How is it with us in comparison with that day when first, by God's grace, our eyes were opened to see our lost and ruined condition, and, for the first time, we were able to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and by faith in Him had obtained forgiveness, and stood before Him as just ones—that is, were justified before God, though vile, guilty, hell-deserving sinners in ourselves? How is it with us in comparison with that day? Is Christ to us what He was then? Is the word of his grace as precious as it was then? Do we love Him as we did then? Do the affections go out towards Him as was the case then? Or are we cold, heartless, formal? Oh! let us ask ourselves these questions. They are practical questions. We are here assembled together to obtain blessing for our souls, and it is well that there should be searching of heart among us with regard to this. And should any of us have to say:—My love is not what it was then; I do not care for the salvation of my fellow-sinners as I did then; I am not so prayerful; I do not delight in the Scriptures and in meditation as was once the case. If so, let us deeply humble ourselves, let us make confession—for here, in the case we are considering, the man of God is called to repent; he has to come back to his first state.

And for our comfort let us remember that there is a possibility of this being done; for, if not, our precious Lord Jesus Christ would not have called upon the Angel to humble himself, and turn from his ways back into the state in which he was before. And, therefore, let us honestly confess before the Lord our sins, and cry to Him for help, and that He will give us strength to turn from our evil ways and to come back to the state in which we were at first. The possibility remains, and Jesus is ready to lend the helping hand. Let us expect great things from Him, remembering his word, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink." In our spiritual hunger and thirst let us come to Him, and we shall find how ready that Blessed One is to do us good. If we were all to act in this manner, there would be joy in heaven, as there would be joy if sinners were converted.

And are there any here who know nothing of this first love? Then let me tell you, you know nothing of real joy, real peace. Wherever you may have been seeking them, amid the vanities and pleasures of this evil world, you have not found joy, and never will. All you will meet with, is disappointment, and a guilty conscience. Therefore, come to Jesus. Pass sentence on yourselves, and accept what God so readily gives for Christ's sake.

At the Clifton Conference last year I particularly commended to beloved Christian friends a book, the title of which is "The Secret History of Romanism," by Dawson Massie (Hamilton & Adams, 2s. 6d.). I have read the book. All the documents from which the statements are taken, are step by step given, and I would press on those, who wish to be informed on the evil of Romanism, to make themselves acquainted with it. This book was then out of print, but has been republished since.

THE NEED OF VILLAGE WORK.

In The Christian of October 8 we find the following statement: "The villages and hamlets of England number about eleven thousand. Very many of them, I fear, are still without the light of the glorious Gospel." I regret to have to say that my small experience fully bears this out. During the last two months a friend and myself have been seeking to carry the simple "truth as it is in Jesus" into some of England's needy districts. In a village in Surrey we heard the testimony of an old man, who had been a Christian for some time, to the sad fact that for ten years he had been groping about in the dark because there was no one to lead him to Christ. "You know," he added, "the Gospel is not preached here."

So earnest was the longing in one little hamlet for Gospel truth that inquiries were made by the people, before the service closed, as to whether there could not be more meetings. As we were leaving the neighbourhood in two days, and could not come again, a Christian working man, who was present from a distance, undertook to carry on the meetings thus commenced, so we hope God has blessing still in store for this needy place.

CURRAGH SOLDIERS' HOME. — Many letters from soldiers, who have left the post, are given in a little report of this Home. All are very grateful for the spiritual and social benefits they receive. Some have "established prayer meetings on going to new stations where there was neither institute nor home." The evangelistic services have been much blessed. The Temperance pledge has been taken by 150 soldiers.

MRS. BELL AND HER CUSTOMERS.

TALK ABOUT OUR GIRLS AND HOW TO PROTECT THEM.

(Concluded from our last.)

" 'A GIRL's good character is her best possession,' I used to tell them, 'and if she lets t be seen that she holds it as such herself, it's not likely anyone will try to rob her of it, for hey can see 'twill be but lost labour." The young should be warned, too, and that while hey are young, of the perils they are liable to meet; mothers should explain to them in a kind, erious way how easy the first downward steps are, and what terrible consequences come of little hings that they think only harmless fun and frolic—larking with boys in the street, or loud aughing and talking out-of-doors, or waiting about at corners. But that's generally the last hing a mother thinks of doing. If she catches ne of her girls up to any such games she drives her in, boxes her ears, and calls her a good-for-nothing young hussy, and thinks she's done all her duty, whereas she has only made the child ancy her harsh and severe, and determine to do he same thing again when her mother's back's urned. Since working-class girls must to a ertain extent run these risks, then working-lass mothers should spare no pains to fore-arm hem, as far as possible, but they surely needn't et them go out after dark more than is abso-utely necessary. It surprises me to see how areless some mothers are, even those who seem o be decent, God-fearing women themselves, in etting their daughters go strolling about in the vening with other girls who are often none of he steadiest. There's your sister, Mrs. Green, only last Thursday night I went over by the rain to see my brother, and was rather late oming home; in fact, it was past eleven when we got into the station here, and who should I ee loitering outside it with two or three more but her Margaret! Her mother, who had eemingly come out to look for her, appeared, nd took her off just as I arrived, but from what heard her say to the child, she seemed more oncerned not to let the other people in the house know how late she came in, than to impress on her what a wrong thing she was doing. After ll the trouble she had about Bessie, too, I should have thought it would have been a warning to her!"

"Our Elizabeth always did spoil her children," aid Mrs. Green.

"And girls are so headstrong nowadays," aid Mrs. Plumb; "they will have their fling, no matter what you say to them. If they take t in their heads to go out, it's no use to try and keep them in."

"But, dear me! it's not for young girls in heir teens to decide what they'll do or not do," aid Mrs. Bell, decisively. "It's for them to act according as their mothers bid them, not as hey take it into their own silly heads."

Mrs. Plumb and Mrs. Weeks both laughed outright. "Ought to! I daresay," rejoined the atter; "but who's to make them do what they ought?"

"Who? Why their mothers, of course," was Mrs. Bell's answer. "And if they won't mind heir mothers, then the fathers should exert their authority. But they ought to be trained to obedience from the beginning, and kept to it."

"Easier said than done," was Mrs. Plumb's comment.

"Tell me this, now," said Mrs. Bell, in her energetic way; "do you suppose poor folks' children are born with worse natures than gentle-folks' children?"

"I should think not, indeed," was the answer she received from her three customers simulta-neously.

"Well, then, how is it that while our little monkeys think they're to act independent as soon as they get to be thirteen or fourteen, young ladies are kept under control till they're grown up, and long after that. Why, even Miss Cary often speaks of her mother not allowing her to do this or that. Young ladies have their faults, of course, just the same as poor girls; but their parents do succeed in keeping them within bounds and submissive to rules, and, as a consequence, they're saved from many of the dangers that beset a working-class girl."

"There's truth enough in that," Mrs. Weeks assented. "I know when I was housemaid at Mrs. Herbert's, round in the square, our young ladies never crossed the door without leave, not while they were in their teens, even in the day-time, and as for going out at night Miss Emily, when she was two-and-twenty, was never allowed to be out alone after it was the least bit dusk, unless it might be just across the square to see her cousins. They used to grumble at their mamma sometimes for being so particular, but they had to do as she wished—never dreamed of anything else."

"And you should make your girls do the same," said Mrs. Bell, "instead of treating them as the woman did who said when her children were good she gave them all their own way. They should learn from the first that they're not to do everything they take in their heads to do, even if it's not actually wrong. There's plenty of things not wrong in themselves that yet lead to wrong, and foul wrong too."

"That reminds me," said Mrs. Green, "of what the lady said that came to take our mothers' meeting yesterday. She spoke particularly about the training of children, and she said she had often wondered how it was that so many really nice, well-disposed, respectably brought up girls should fall into bad courses, and she'd come to the conclusion that it was, partly at any rate, because they were never taught self-restraint when they were little."

"Whatever did she mean by that?" asked Mrs. Plumb, while Mrs. Bell nodded approval.

"I wondered at first," said Mrs. Green, "but she went on to tell us. She said many mothers seem to think that children may be allowed to do whatever they like, in some instances, such as spending all their pennies—no matter how many they get—on sweets and such rubbish. Now, a little of what we like, she told us, is all very well, but if we go in for it always we shall lose all power of self-restraint, and by and by be quite unable to withstand the temptation if we happen to like something wrong. She'd often felt grieved, she said, to hear her Sunday scholars answer when she advised them against any foolish habit, 'Oh! but I like it, teacher,' as if that was quite reason enough, and she thought even children might be got into the habit of asking before they gratify their impulses, not merely, 'Is this wicked?' but 'Is it the best thing for me to do?' The great thing is, she went on, to use them to it from the first, and where that hasn't been done, the mother should exercise control over them till they learn to control themselves. That was what she said, and a good deal of it went home to me, for my Rose gets a penny every day from our landlady for running her errands, and off she goes to the sweet-shop as soon as ever she receives it. But I mean to forbid that in future. She shall have a box and save up most of what she gets, and at Christmas she shall take it out and buy herself a nice book or anything else she chooses that's sensible."

"Well, gentlefolks may be stricter in some matters than we are, but there's other things they're not at all particular about," remarked Mrs. Plumb, with rather a triumphant air. "I was reading in the newspaper, last night, that no matter how gay a young man in the upper classes may be, ladies and gentlemen will invite him to their houses, and encourage him to pay attention to their daughters just the same as if he was the best character living."

"Those who do so ought to be ashamed of themselves," said Mrs. Bell; "but I don't think many of us in Lamb-street have the right to cast a stone at them. You know what a fast-living young fellow Jim Ricketts is. Well, only yesterday I saw two of our neighbours here—creditable men and fathers of families—going along laughing and joking with him as free and easy as you please, and the wife of one of them came out to her door when they reached it and spoke to him quite friendly—indeed, I think she invited him in. And that's no solitary instance. But, dear me! there are the children going home from school; you mothers will want to be off to get their tea."

"We've had plenty of good advice of one sort and another this afternoon," remarked Mrs. Weeks as they left the shop, "but we mayn't find it so easy to follow it."

"Doing right is never over easy," said Mrs. Bell; "but, if you're really in earnest about, it you'll get help from above. If you mothers would only dedicate yourselves and your children to the Lord, then you'd have his Almighty strength to support your poor, weak efforts, and his loving smile to cheer you on amid all the difficulties and hindrances."

"That's just what the lady told us to do," said Mrs. Green, lingering behind the other women, "and," she added in a serious tone, "God helping me, I mean to try it."

A CONFERENCE ON RESCUE WORK.

THE second autumnal Conference of Christian friends engaged in preventive and rescue work of young women and girls was held on Monday week in Lower Exeter Hall. The Conference was called by Mr. Edward W. Thomas and the committee of the institution with which his name is so widely known. At the morning and afternoon meetings only ladies were present, and Mrs. Francis A. Bevan presided over both these Conferences. Among those who took part in them were: Mrs. Webb-Peploe, Mrs. Wm. Fowler, Mrs. Malan, Mrs. Bishop, Mrs. George Williams, Mrs. Bayly, with representatives from the Mildmay Park Deaconess' Home, the Girls' Friendly Society, and the Metropolitan Association. In the morning, after some time had been spent in prayer, a paper was read, dealing with the perils of young people arising from disregard of parental authority, love of independence, idleness, self-sufficiency, love of company and finery, and neglect of Scriptural preceptive teaching. In the afternoon the topic was the duty of Christians distinctly to recognise that "marriage is honourable in all," the words of the Apostle being applied to young women of the poorer class as well as to those of higher social position.

At the evening meeting, presided over by Mr. F. A. Bevan, there was a good attendance. Mr. Bevan hoped the meeting would prove rich in suggestions from those who had long been engaged in the work of rescuing the perishing, that by the free interchange of opinions on the part of experienced workers they might be able to compare notes as to the best methods to be pursued—they might be greatly strengthened for fresh efforts in the same direction.

The first speaker was Mr. Weylland, of the London City Mission, who depicted the field of work presented by London haunts of sin and sorrow, showing the terrible surroundings amidst which so many young girls and women live. He recommended that all who were rescued and placed in Homes should remain long enough to overcome the terrible craving for intoxicating liquor.

Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, of the Female Mission, addressed himself to the topic of seeking and saving in the streets of our great city. He was cordial in his praise of women's work in certain districts which they had privately and unostentatiously taken up, and every heart in the Conference went with him when he went so far as to demand that there should be help and encouragement given to every fallen woman who wishes to abandon her evil life.

Mr. A. W. Ireton sketched the work of the Midnight Meeting movement from its first gathering in the West-end, when seventeen poor women were rescued, down to the present time. He powerfully showed that it was the bounden duty of Christian people to take the Gospel to those who, in their hardened and lost condition, would not come to the Gospel.

The closing address was given by Mr. W. Batchelor, of the Church of England Temperance Society, who showed that even in such gloomy places as police cells the work of seeking and saving might be successfully carried on. Some time was spent in conference upon the leading topics on which the speakers had given addresses.

MR. JOHN CHAPMAN has been going over pretty nearly the same ground he went last year, visiting Derby, Nottingham, Stockton-on-Tees, and other places. He has had again the joy of seeing many souls led out of darkness into light.

DUST ON THE KNEES.

A CHRISTIAN minister, leaving a house where he had been praying, noticed dust on his knees, which he speedily brushed away; but it was nothing to be ashamed of—it was his commendation, that he had been comforting and helping some sorrowful, sick or dying one.

Men who are thoughtless and indifferent at other times, when they are afflicted and in great pain, will want the help of the man with dust on his knees. One day a minister was hastily sent for to visit a man who was suffering much bodily pain, and still deeper anguish of mind. He had often heard the Gospel preached, had felt deep convictions, and shed many tears. He had often resolved to give himself to God, but as often his vows had been broken, and he had been led away by ungodly companions. Now in sickness he was greatly alarmed; he feared he was lost, and wished for the help of the Christian minister. The minister came and told him of the love of God to poor perishing sinners, and offered prayer for his salvation. He exclaimed, "Oh, what a sinner I have been; my sins helped to crucify Jesus, to drive the nails through his hands and feet, and to plunge the spear into his side." He was told that the way of salvation is by Jesus, and urged to "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Again prayer was offered for him; hope dawned upon his mind; he said, "I believe I shall not rise from this bed without pardon." Soon after he was led to believe in Jesus, and appropriate to himself the merits of his death; and then with joy he exclaimed, "Oh, what sins I had, bundles of sins, loads of sins, wagon-loads of sin, but they are all gone, Jesus has taken all away." Dust on the knees had helped him to salvation.

"Is there anyone who can pray?" asked a poor man who had fallen from the train on to the rails, and was fearfully crushed. As his companions gathered around him he gasped again, "Is there anyone who can pray? Oh, pray for me!" All faces turned away from the ghastly scene. A Christian engineer, a man who had often prayed in dusty places, and who had many times appeared with dust on his knees, came forward and offered a most touching prayer. All the men doffed their hats and bowed their knees, while many a tear fell down their faces. A minister was sent for, but before he came the spirit of the man had passed away. How beautiful must that pious engineer, and the men who gathered around him with dust on their knees, have appeared in the eyes of God and angels.

A man seeking work in a place of business was summarily refused, as he could produce no credentials nor recommendations. As he sadly left the place, one of the proprietors, noticing dust on his knees, inquired the cause. The young man confessed that before he started out in search of work he had gone to God upon his knees, asking that his guiding and directing hand might be upon him. The proprietor was not a religious man, but he remembered that he once had an employer who was accustomed to have dust on his knees. He decided to engage the man without further credentials, and found him through many years a faithful servant.

When a man comes from his chamber in the morning with dust on his knees; when a man leaves his vestry for the pulpit with the same mark; when he comes from the suffering and the dying with this token, it is a sign of high privilege—the privilege of going to the throne of grace. It is a mark of faithful service; it is a token that he who bears it is higher than the highest, mightier than the mightiest, one of the lights of the world, and a blessing among men. Such men are wanted in greater numbers, as a breakwater against the tide of sin which is ever breaking in upon us, and to stand in the gap before the sun that the plague may be stayed.

Tunbridge Wells. E. BALLEY.

THE SIXTH VIAL.

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared."

THE drying up of a river is a gradual process. The river may be passable before all the water is quite gone. So, if the drying up of the River Euphrates refers to the waning of the Crescent, and the continued decrease of Turkish power and territory, so the obstacles that stand in the way of the fulfilment of God's promises may be gone while Turkey has nominal hold of the land of the Jews.

The downfall of ancient Babylon was accomplished by the drying up of the bed of the River Euphrates. The besieging army constructed a new channel, for the waters of the Euphrates, turned the stream off from the city, and so dried up its old bed. The conquering army got possession by marching along the old bed of the river that they had drained. The incident is laid hold of by the prophet in the Book of Revelation to show that "the drying up of the river" is clearing the way for that hour when "Great Babylon" shall come in "remembrance before God." It is during the time of the Sixth Vial that it is said, "Behold, I come as a thief." We see the reiterated proofs of God's hand in the demolition of Turkish power. One province after another, one territory after another, is wrenched from the Sultan's grasp in spite of every alliance and every treaty. The Great Powers combine to secure the integrity of that Empire, only to show how utterly unable they are to hinder the fulfilment of God's Word.

Surely no age has been so often warned as this age has! Every fresh movement in the East makes the purpose more distinct, and the impending crisis more inevitable. The world is suddenly startled by each step in the incessant decline of Turkish power; men are struck for a moment by the inexplicable repetition of the same drying up of the river, then they fall back, and think it has come to nothing. No doubt there may be a little calm between the very last warning and the final act, so that there may be more danger in the moment when it seems calm than when the warning is ringing in our ears.

The world's day of probation is timed to the fraction of a second. One time ran out (14 generations) from the time of Abraham to David; another, from David to the Captivity; another time, from the Captivity to the birth of Christ. Our time is the last of this dispensation; and how far gone it, indeed, must be! We are near the time of the first resurrection; there is expectation in the air, and sudden surprises are looked for now, and felt to be the characteristic of the age we live in. "The time of the dead is at hand that they should be judged." Their long, silent sleep is fast drawing to its close. We are nearing the break of eternal day: "The kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of God and of his Christ." There will no longer be Bismarcks, and German Emperors, and Czars of Russia, but the Lord will reign from pole to pole.

In this stirring age the active interference of God is becoming most solemnly apparent. Statesmen are but his servants, whether they intend to be so or not. The evidence of a secret guiding hand grows stronger with every event. The power that is so actively working works with a hidden hand. The approaching footstep of the Judge grows louder and more unmistakable. The path by which Turkey goes down (and so clears the road for the restoration of the Jews to their own land) and the power that shall give the finishing blow, are all predetermined. Just because Turkey holds Palestine, and the time is at hand for the restoration of the Jews, is Turkey suffering these Divine judgments. Palestine is situated (with a view to the position it is to hold in the Millennium) just at the corner of three continents, and the Mediterranean Sea was formed to make a way for Western nations to reach its shores.

Soon the mystery of God shall be finished, and "He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people and the veil that is spread over all nations." What is that veil? We are surrounded by much that is unrevealed to sense. We have no capacity by which to recognise the presence of much that exists around us. Part is visible and part is unseen. The things that are seen are temporal, the things that are unseen are eternal. Not absent because they are unseen, but present. Is the glory of God a long way off? Is there not an impenetrable vail hiding the glory that shines all around us? Is the glory of God confined to some locality? Is it not shining in all its brightness all around us? We go out into the dark night and look at the sky, and we think how dull and dark the universe is. What a dingy scene, the little stars just sufficient to make the darkness visible.

But for the vail surely we should see it in another fashion, and the glory of God must be flashing and shining all through the vast spaces of the universe. The moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously. "The Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and thy God thy glory."

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE AT KENDAL.

A GOSPEL mission has been held under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, aided by Christians of all denominations. Mr. J. M. Scroggie's labours commenced on Oct. 4, and, during the fortnight of his stay, St. George's Hall, seating some 1200 persons, has been filled almost nightly. The great attention of the audiences and the solemn stillness pervading the assemblies were tokens of the Holy Spirit's presence. We do not speak of numbers but we believe many have come to the Saviour, while Christians have been quickened to work and backsliders have been reclaimed. The after-meetings have been greatly blessed, and many instances have come to light showing that the Gospel message has been simply received during the preaching of the word. We are sure that many remain still under deep conviction and we ask prayer that the work may go on. F. W.

SCRIPTURE READERS FOR IRELAND.—In a recent sermon in Dublin on behalf of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, Rev. Dr. Neligan said there were now only fifty odd Readers employed, whereas there ought to be at least five hundred of them scattered throughout the island. Rev. G. H. Garrett, referring to the same excellent institution, said that while staying in the mountains of Donegal he found that the Reader was welcomed in ever house in the parish.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKMAN.

"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth"—2 TIM. ii. 15.

THE word here translated, workman, means a Day Labourer. Three qualifications are necessary: (1) Approved unto God; (2) Not ashamed; (3) Skilful in work. The command is, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." The labourer must first be a son — and this is the approval required. Knowing his position as a son, he can leave the results of his labours to the Father, and at the same time realise a personal interest in the vineyard as having a proprietorship in prospect. No idea of bargain comes in between the Father and son, the service is a service of love proceeding from sonship. Very different was the service rendered by the hired labourers—they agreed for a penny a day—and at the close of the day found fault with their own bargain. Those hired later in the day made no bargain, but trusted to the good faith of him who employed them, they were satisfied with the gifts of his grace. Then again, a labourer must work all day till evening. The Great Labourer said: "I must work the works of Him that sent Me while it is day" (John ix. 4). The life-day is all too short to accomplish the work before us. How faithfully and wonderfully the Lord Jesus fulfilled his work. He was approved unto God; for, at the beginning and close of his ministry, there came the voice, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Then the night-time closed in on Him—the night of death—the dark shadows of human malice, Divine wrath, the curse of the law, and the power of the enemy closed around, and He said, "It is finished."

Our day for labour is drawing to a close. Presently will be heard the voice of the Lord of the vineyard: "Call the labourers, and give them their hire." The work must be examined, and then the question for each will arise, "Have I cause to be ashamed?" The work to which we have been called is the "work of faith and labour of love." Work, to be approved, must proceed from faith, and from nothing else, and the demand made on the world by the Church of God is a just one: "Show me thy faith by thy works." How much of so-called Church work in the present day is faith work, proceeding from simple trust in his words, and from the firm belief that He will shortly come again? It was this simple but stupendous faith that ever nerved the Apostle Paul for his life-work. No toil was too great for him, no suffering too heavy, for he knew that the purposes of God would be accomplished in spite of all the opposition and difficulty thrown in the way. So at the end of his work he could say: "I am not ashamed, for I know whom I have believed."

The examination that God will make of our work is a matter little thought of by the great majority of Christians, and yet how plainly is it taught. "Every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall disclose it, because it shall be revealed by fire," &c. (1 Cor. iii. 13—15); see also Rev. xxii. 12, Col. ii. 18. Not only the work, but the motives that prompted the work (1 Cor. iv. 5), and, further, every man's character will be made manifest at that time. "We must all be made manifest before the judgment-seat of Christ" (2 Cor. v. 10). How will work, heart, character, look in the pure holiness of Christ's judgment-seat? Insignificant service will shine out then, whilst so much that has been applauded and approved here will be consumed in the fire then. The cup of cold water, the alabaster box of ointment, the two mites will be richly rewarded.

If, then, we would not be ashamed, let us take heed to the injunctions of Rom. xiii. 12, "Cast off the works of darkness"; (Eph. v. 11)—"Have no fellowship with them"; (Heb. ix. 14)—"Purge your conscience from dead works"—remembering, "If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged" (1 Cor. xi. 31). Bearing these principles in mind, we can better understand the results of the Lord's examination into the condition of his people, as revealed in the seven letters to the seven churches in Asia, recorded in Rev. ii. and iii. "His eyes are as a flame of fire." No mere surface work will pass his scrutiny. To the Church at Ephesus, He points out that all the outward activity and energy had been unsustained by the true heart of love, and therefore the work was worthless. Mechanical Christian work will bring no reward. His exhortation was, "Do the first works."

To the Church at Smyrna, the Lord points out that trial had been the accompaniment of work. He strengthens their faith, and teaches us the lesson that if faithfulness in service entails persecution, we are to persevere, for He Himself endured the cross despising its shame.

To the Church in Pergamos, He alludes to the home life, and discovers a measure of impurity lurking in the midst of much faithful work. Unless the Lord can approve our private life, He cannot bless our public ministry and service.

To the Church in Thyatira, He points out that Church work was a marked feature, but that intermingled with it was the activity of sin. There had been failure to deal with those who had been notoriously sinful in practice. The service needed purging from the unfruitful works of darkness, and in his closing exhortation He urges them to hold fast that which they have already.

To the Church in Sardis, He shows that profession of faith and correct statement of truth had been unaccompanied by the power of the Spirit in activity, "I have found no works of thine fulfilled before God." Correctness of creed satisfies too many; no mere lip-service will please the Master; the life and character must be formed by the word of God. How startling will be the appearing of our Lord, presently, to the professing Church, secure in her own estimation, and therefore sound asleep.

To the Church in Philadelphia, He commands faithful, active service, in spite of weaknesses through the opposition and persecution of the world. The Lord highly prized such work, it was the fruit of patience and faith in his promises, so He renews the blessed promise: "Behold I come quickly . . . I will keep thee from the hour of temptation." The weak state of the Church, and the overpowering presence of the enemy, is never to make us deny his name.

To the Church of Laodicea, He shows that nothing has been done for the Head of the Church, nothing suffered, nothing endured, no testimony raised, no sin dealt with. Self-satisfaction, ease, wealth, and unconsciousness of the true state of things both within and without, characterised them. "I have need of nothing," is the too common expression around us to-day. It seems hopeless to try and arouse the Church as a body, and so the Lord says, "If any man hear my voice I will open the door and will come in to him, and sup with him." A heart full of the Lord Jesus is the only power for active work, for living work, and in these days we cannot fail to observe how God is raising up individuals who are made centres of light and blessing. In all these churches the Lord has shown us the meaning of his words, I know thy works.

Skilful in work is the third feature of the approved labourer, "rightly dividing the word of truth." We have no power to think right (2 Cor. iii. 5). The Spirit must indite the thoughts. We have no power to speak right (1 Cor. ii. 13). The Spirit must give the words of the message—when thoughts and words are Spirit-taught, we shall minister the Spirit Himself (Gal. iii. 5). Orthodox statement unaccompanied by the Holy Spirit will produce no result—such work will be dead work. G. SOLTAU.

"OUR STORY OF PROGRESS."

SUCH is the title of a little book before us, which tells the interesting story of Miss Robinson's work among soldiers and sailors during recent years. A brief preface says: "This little book is written as a sequel to the story of Ten Years' Work." The surprise of the soldiers when the good work began was expressed by a Royal Artilleryman, who said, "You are the first respectable woman who has spoken to me for eight years." Those days, however, have long since passed. One thing noticeable is that while the men formerly preferred classes and meetings among themselves, they now freely mix with civilians.

A full account is given of the various branches of the Institution, and how they have one by one sprung into existence. Readers will also learn how much is done on behalf of the soldiers' wives and families. "Orphans are maintained, girls fitted out for service, constant employment in needlework provided for soldiers' and sailors' wives, and thousands of garments given or sold at very low prices to needy families. The people are visited, the sick relieved, and food, lodging or other help afforded when required." An accompanying report, having special reference to the past year, says: "Never were we more happy as a household than now. An important and growing branch of our work is 'The Soldiers' and Sailors' Wives' Aid,' which for some years has been affiliated to the London Society for the Promotion of Female Welfare. The beautiful needlework of the women we employ is sold at their depôt, 47, Weymouth-street, Portland-place, W., and at their yearly sale of work in the Albert Hall." The donations and subscriptions for the year amounted to over £3,000.

The Sailors' Welcome, at Portsea, continues to be very successful. "More than 44,000 beds were let to single men last year. It is delightful to see how they can enjoy themselves without drink. The performances of men just back from sea are somewhat amazing. Here a man with plenty of money orders six eggs at once, just for a beginning; then six more. Another eats a good meal of hot meat, vegetables and pastry, and then orders it all over again." The demon drink, alas! does its work, and the poor victims find their way to the Welcome. Not long ago a man under the influence of drink tried to hang himself in his cabin; he was cut down just in time to save his life. About £1200 is needed to clear off the building debt, after which there will be no further anxiety as to finance, the house being self-supporting.

The Alexandria (Egypt) Branch of the Institution also has its report. The story of its progress is, indeed, an interesting one. Those who have sons in the army or navy must appreciate the great value of these Institutions.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.—The annual report states that the colporteurs' sales have exceeded those of the past year, and of any year, by several hundred pounds, though accomplished by 18 fewer colporteurs, reaching, with sales to book agents, the sum of nearly £9000. Eleven new districts have been started, 78 men have been employed, 90 districts have been supplied with books, and more than 40,000 Bibles and Testaments sold. Upwards of 1500 towns and villages are regularly visited by the colporteurs, and nearly 25,000 magazines are sold every month. Several communications are inserted, speaking of the great good achieved in rural districts by the men through visitation, &c. Rev. Cordon Jones is the Secretary; address, Metropolitan Tabernacle.

DR. PENTECOST ON ELECTION.—3.

WHAT SAITH THE SCRIPTURE?

WE have before said that the doctrine that certain persons were from all eternity elected to salvation by the sovereign decree of God, for whom only provision in Christ is made and efficient grace given, while others are left without mercy solely because God did not choose to save them, is contradicted by all the plainest and most obvious meaning of the Scriptures which bear upon God's purpose of grace towards sinners. We cite a few of the more marked ones. We hold that obscure Scriptures must always be interpreted in the light of transparent ones. The larger declarations always include and determine the meaning of the smaller ones, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16). How hard it is to cut this glorious declaration of Christ down to proportions which will enable it to fit that Procrustean bed of doctrine known among theologians and men generally as "election."

I cannot forbear to introduce an anecdote to illustrate the absurdity of this attempt. A certain distinguished and honoured teacher of theology, an advocate of the doctrine of limited redemption and particular election, was once upon a time examining a graduating class in which there was a particularly brilliant student; one in whom the good doctor took great pride. The examination took place in presence of a large number of eminent ministers and laymen. At the close of the examination the doctor, rubbing his hands with satisfaction, turned to his favourite student and said to him, "Now, Mr. A., will you be kind enough to give briefly and succinctly as you can a statement of the Princeton Theology?" In answer, the young theologian made a statement of the doctrine of grace as interpreted in the light of limited redemption and particular election, giving concisely the good doctor's line of argument and proof texts. The doctor was delighted, and rubbing his hands yet more briskly and looking at his guests with the light of triumph in his eyes, further addressed his favourite student: "And now, Mr. A., will you kindly tell us what Dr. T. teaches his students?" Dr. T. was the head of a rival school of theology who rejected the doctrine of limited redemption and particular election. "Oh, yes," replied the young man, "Dr. T. teaches that 'God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'" Whereupon our good doctor excused the young man from further catechism and abruptly dismissed the class. It is reported that not a few of the visitors saw the point. I think that my hearers see it also, and will find it difficult to interpret the meaning of John iii. 16 in the light ot "particular election."

Again, "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; who will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time" (1 Tim. ii. 8—6). To interpret this declaration so as to make it mean that God's elect are to be found among all classes of men, especially among kings and those in authority, is to torture the Scriptures and read into them that which is contrary to all truth. It was designed rather to teach that God's grace was a matter of universal application, and that, therefore, even kings and those in authority were to be prayed for, though they were or might be found conspiring against the truth and persecuting the Church of God. "For he (Jesus) by the grace of God, tasted death for every man" (Heb. ii. 9). Who will dare say that this declaration does not mean just what it says in all its grand and beautiful simplicity? "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared, teaching us," &c. (Titus ii. 11). What shifts are they driven to who are compelled to torture this passage into meaning that the grace of God that bringeth salvation to some men (the elect) hath appeared to all men. That is, that while all men are made to witness the salvation which is in Christ, He only brought it to some men. This also is to wrest the Scriptures.

If God's election is simply and only the synonym of his purpose of grace in Christ, then we can understand and rejoice in this magnificent declaration in connection with the ministry of reconciliation which was committed to Paul: "God was in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them. . . . For He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 19—21). Here is a preacher who himself belonged to the elect nation, preaching the Gospel to the "outcast" sinners of the Gentiles, who, in times past, were not God's people, and were hated and despised by every Jew as the "non-elect," speaking of himself and them under the common pronoun "we," because he saw clearly that they both stood related to God in his common purpose of salvation according to the "election of grace." Paul understood the difference between the election of the Hebrew race for a special purpose and the "election of grace," which included all men who believed or should hereafter believe on Christ through the preaching of the Gospel. I cannot but feel sorry for the man who must go preaching the Gospel with these texts in his mouth, and at the same time a conviction in his mind (I cannot think such a conviction ever lodged itself in the heart of any Christian) that they are the sheerest mockery to many if not to the most of his hearers, for the reason that God never intended the Gospel for them, and only commanded it to be preached that He might have a justification (?) for their damnation. This is no less a mockery because the particular souls who are to be saved or damned "according to the election of grace" (?) are unknown to the preacher.

WHO THEN ARE THE ELECT?

We have seen that election, so far as it refers to God's act or choice, relates not to certain individuals at all, but to his gracious purpose of salvation toward all men through and in Christ. It is proper at this point that we should make inquiry as to who the elect are according to this purpose of grace.

(a) Not all men, for the reason that all men are not saved. They only are the elect who are saved, and they are elect only when they are saved, not before. God had chosen that men shall be saved in Christ, "through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." It is his gracious will that "all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth," but his purpose of grace, or plan of salvation, is confined to salvation through Christ, and so includes only those who fall in with this purpose by faith in Him.

(b) Not those who from all eternity have been ordained to salvation by a sovereign irrevocable decree of God, but who have not yet been efficiently called by an irresistible action of the Spirit of God. Because it is clear that no man is ever spoken of as elect until he has taken his place and standing in Christ, in whom only the election stands and that by his own free act, moved thereto by the Word and Spirit of God, given alike to all men to whom the Gospel is preached. Therefore the Jews, or the great mass of them, though they personally belonged to the elect nation, missed the election of God to salvation because they sought it not by grace, but as it were, by their own righteousness, through a fancied obedience to the law, both moral and ceremonial, as we have before seen (Rom. x. 1—3; xi. 5—7).

(c) "The elect," then, in the general New Testament sense of the word, are synonymous with the saved (Matt. xxiv. 22, 24, 31; Mark xiii. 20, 22; Luke xviii. Rom. viii. 33, &c.). No man is elect until he has chosen God's choice for him; as it has been well said: "Those who choose the Divine choice are Divinely chosen. Those who reject the Divine choice for them are Divinely rejected." God's election of the sinner falls to the ground so far as all unbelievers are concerned, wanting their choice of Christ to make their election good. As if one who had been elected to Congress or Parliament should decline the election, such an election would be of no avail. They then are elect whose attitude toward God corresponds to God's attitude toward them. This is most solemn truth, and it behoves all men well to consider it, who are careless of their salvation, dreaming that God's election means practically that no man has any responsibility in the matter until he has been irresistibly called to a knowledge of his election by the Spirit of God. God's election is made from before the foundation of the world in Christ, and it includes all men everywhere, whereof they are informed by the Gospel. Man's election is secure in time, and only in that moment in time when he abandons all righteousness of his own and chooses life and salvation in Christ.

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS IN LONDON.

THE work among these men has grown so rapidly that almost every day, to my great sorrow, I have to send some away for want of room. At times we have had to lodge as many as fifteen or twenty in neighbouring coffee-houses, while they came here for food. The experience of past years has taught me much about matters connected with this work; and, having secured valuable assistance, I feel confident that the business part of the new Home we are anxious to build will be managed in such a way as to make it self-supporting. It has been impossible for me to find premises large enough, and otherwise suitable, within easy reach of the docks. I have, therefore, made up my mind to try, by the Lord's help, to raise sufficient means for the erection of a new building, built and fitted up for the purpose.

The Lord has sent me a dear friend in Lord Blantyre, who has not only promised £1000 towards the new building, but is giving me valuable advice as to designs. A suitable site can be obtained at a fair ground rent, but the buildings, &c., will cost about £7000; until the money is subscribed the lease cannot be taken up, and the work commenced. The new Home is intended to accommodate from 130 to 150 men, and to have proper accommodation for mission work, and some garden ground for games. It is of the greatest importance to have such a place, where the sailors, during their holidays ashore, can enjoy themselves with healthy innocent recreations within the walls of the Home away from the perils and temptations of the streets and the allurements of the gin-palaces. My greatest trouble now is to keep many of the men indoors when they have just arrived, and are thirsting for recreation. What is offered them outside too often poisons both soul and body.

Will any dear friends help me by receiving and distributing collecting cards? These, and the last little book about the work, will be sent to any friends writing for the same.

Yours truly, Agnes Hedenström.

ON SANCTIFICATION.

By Prof. ARCHER BUTLER.

1 John i. 8.

WHATEVER may be the measure of sanctification which God bestows upon his children in this world, we can scarcely conceive its highest state unaccompanied by a longing for a state yet higher, clearly conceived, and sought with a personal consciousness (so far) of imperfection, and an ardent desire to still escape that remainder of earthliness that embarrasses the ascent. In fact, the belief of Christian perfectibility seems inapplicable to individual practice from the very nature of Christian holiness. Were a perfect man to exist, he himself would be the last to know it, for the highest stage of advancement is the lowest descent in humility. As long as this humility is necessary to the fulness of the Christian character, it would seem that it is of the essence of the constant growth in grace, however encouraged by holy joy and inward testimony, to see itself lowlier as God exalts it higher. It is as one who stands by the margin of a lake and gazes on his own image close beneath him; conceive this contemplation of himself borne gradually aloft towards the heavens, and the image which he still beholds as he soars will deepen in proportion as he rises.

Besides this operation of humility, it must be remembered that the spiritual life, if it be a progressive life, involves a progressively increasing knowledge of God. Now, though the spirit of man assuredly must brighten in purity as thus in faith and love it approaches the great source of all holiness, it must also appreciate far more accurately the force of the contrast between itself and its mighty model; nay, its very adoration, apprehending, as all affection does, more profoundly the excellencies of its object, must impress upon it its own comparative nothingness, and thus, as it becomes relatively more perfect, it may be said to feel itself absolutely less so. In truth, it is only piety, and piety fervent and exalted, that can really feel how immeasurably far it is from perfect holiness. There are distances so great, that all calculation of distance is neglected or impossible. We cannot tell how far is the nearest fixed star, and we know that the mass of mankind would conjecture it a few miles at most; could we approach nearer, we should, for the first time, learn how far we were. Surely it is so with our religious estimates of approximation to the light and glory of God. The earth-born crowd afar, if they think at all of the matter, never dream themselves so darkly, so remotely exiled; it is only he who struggles nearer, and much nearer, who begins at length to perceive the true amount of the distance.

I doubt not but it is the very genius of that Divine love which is the bond of perfectness, to be lovingly dissatisfied with its own inadequacy, and such a worshipper, in his best hours, will feel that, though love be the fulfilling of the law, his love is itself imperfect, deficient in degree, and deficient in constancy, and that in this life, it can at best be only the germ of that charity which, "never failing" is to form the moving principle of the life of eternity.

SOUTH LONDON MISSION.—A meeting of Christian workers connected with this Mission was held at the Victoria Hall, Lancaster-street, Borough-road, on Tuesday evening, October 20. Messrs. Rowland E. Ashton, Pluck, Cornell, Groves, Arnold, Sewell, and others addressed the meeting, speaking encouragingly of the different branches of the work.

"TREASURES OF DARKNESS."

Isaiah xlv. 3.

WHAT strength and comfort do these three precious words convey to the tried and perplexed child of God, revealing that hidden riches underlie God's secret and mysterious dealings. We shut up many of our plants, away from sun and light, in dark places, that they may strike deeper and take firmer root, and hereafter yield us far more abundant and enduring blossoms and fruit. "Light is sown" (Psalm xcvii. 11). A Christian lady said, "That implies a present burial and a sure resurrection in God's good time."

What a strong, opposing current the electric light has to pass through ere it can produce its effulgent brilliancy: in like manner many of God's children have to pass through times of sore temptation and darkness ere latent virtues can be brought into active exercise. See, for instance, John the Baptist in prison. What trials of faith he must have there endured, shut up in a loathsome dungeon, he who had served God from his birth, now cut off from all the joys and sweets of life, under sore and painful discipline and with no release till death. In all such seasons, when Satan tosses us recklessly about, let us look up and take courage; for all his opposition will only serve to remove from us the chaff that clings to the precious grain ere it is safely gathered into the garner of God.

I visited a mother after the death of her sweet little girl. She said, "My heart well nigh bursts when I consider, if I had only used other means, possibly my darling child might have lived." When shall we learn to look beyond the "ifs," to Him who overrules all to work out his own wise decrees? How much self-torture we should be spared, if we only trusted that our steps are directed by God, and called to mind that good saying, "If you trust, you do not worry; if you worry, you do not trust."

Many fancy themselves forsaken because "they walk in darkness" (Isa. l. 10). I knew one who wrote hard things and bitter against herself because she had no light; but it was her time of discipline and wrought out for her indeed "treasures of darkness." Never have I in any other life witnessed such abundant fruit of meekness, gentleness, and humility, till she issued from the furnace as "silver refined;" yea, more, even as "fine gold," to the glory of his workmanship who led her through paths of darkness into his own marvellous light. "Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face: now we know in part; but then shall we know even as also we are known." I. M.

SONNET.

"His servants shall serve Him."

HIS servants serve Him. Happy, happy they!
The perfect service of a perfect Lord,
With duty and desire in full accord,
Is Heaven indeed; 'tis rapture to obey
When love constrains, unwearedly, alway.
Alas! in seeming service, often now,
To some veiled form of self we basely bow;
Some worldly motive dims the heavenly ray,
And thus the prize of service true we miss:
'Tis perfect sunshine that makes perfect day.
In heaven, the radiant, all-inclusive bliss,
The brightest glory of their crown is this—
They from their Lord's loved precepts never
Him with exulting joy his servants serve. [swerve;

FEMALE MISSION TO THE FALLEN.—The twenty-seventh report says: "New and better premises have been secured at North Kensington for the Home, and the work has been marvellously blessed of God. Many rescued ones are testifying to the change wrought in them. A week's mission was held in one of the worst parts of the neighbourhood, by which some of the most degraded were reached." Little girls, too, who were found in danger, have been placed in schools, under the new Act. Altogether about three hundred have been placed in various Homes during the past year. Those not fit for hard work are sent to the Home for dressmakers. Communications should be made to Mr. Maddison, the Secretary, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

CHRISTIANS AND POLITICS.

WE have great pleasure in publishing the following letter, which has been addressed to Mrs. Josephine Butler:—

Dear Mrs. Butler,—There is one point which I have not yet heard touched upon in such of the meetings for the promotion of social purity as I have attended or read about. To me it seems a most vital question.

Stirring appeals have been made to the electors both for the Municipal and Parliamentary elections, not without effect. The people are, I believe, really alive to their duty, and are desirous, honestly desirous, to elect pure and good men. Many of them are seeking to obtain pledges from the candidates as to their intentions on questions of social purity.

But all their desire to do right, and all the labour you and your fellow-workers have bestowed, in rousing their consciences; all that Messrs. Stead and Booth, and Rebecca Jarrett, have endured and done, will be utterly thrown away, unless pure and honest men will come forward as candidates. Candidates who will act fearlessly, independently of party trammels—that is the pressing need of the hour.

To illustrate my meaning, I, as a householder, would gladly vote in the municipal elections on the right side. For a considerable time I was not aware how and when the elections were to take place. After many inquiries I found that there are practically no elections in my parish or ward, because there is no contest. Unless some one comes forward to contest a seat the actual members of the Board of Guardians or Vestry proceed to re-elect themselves. No one else apparently comes forward. I have lived here three years and a quarter and have not once been called upon to vote for anyone, either on Vestry, School Board, or Board of Guardians.

A friend of mine, a householder in the North of London, connected with rescue work, is most anxious to use his vote aright in the coming Parliamentary elections. He has asked definitely the intentions of both the Conservative and the Liberal candidates. One gave him an evasive answer, the other a denial. He does not feel that either is the fitting man, but unless some one else comes forward what is he to do? It is of no use interrogating candidates unless you can bring up some one to supply their place.

I do long that the Christian men of this country, the spiritual men, who can see God above all distinctions of party, and are not afraid to do right, should rise to the occasion, and come forward offering themselves to stand in the gap. I do not believe that in the present state of affairs the electors would allow pecuniary burdens to fall on those whom they knew to be loyal men, but poor in this world's goods. We have too long divorced things temporal from things spiritual. It is time that our Christian men should sacrifice themselves on the altar of their country. Of course it is a sacrifice. It is much pleasanter to sit on a Church Committee than a Parliamentary Committee. It is much more delightful to address an open-air meeting, and know souls are being saved, than to sit night after night in debates about bits of national business. But if our Christian men will be willing for this sacrifice, and offer themselves to God to be used in the government of the nation, as freely, as unreservedly, as they have offered themselves to Him to be used in the organisation of evangelistic movements, then God's name shall again be honoured in our land, ay, and in other lands, and England will be saved from what else must surely come to pass—revolution or anarchy.—Yours in the Lord, Charlotte C. Murray.

Y.W.C.A., SIDCUP.—It has been the privilege of this branch to have another time of refreshing. Special meetings have been addressed by Miss Ellis, of Chelsea, and other friends. This branch was started three years ago, and sixty-three members have been associated with it. Mrs. Billett, Westwood, Sidcup, will heartily welcome any to the Bible-readings, on Lord's-day, at 3 p.m., and the Tuesday evening meetings at 8.

A THRILLING MORAVIAN STORY.

LAST Thursday afternoon a meeting on behalf of these missions was held in the rooms of the Y.W.C.A., 17, Old Cavendish-street, Major Fawkes presiding. Addresses were given by Rev. A. G. Hettasch, Moravian missionary from Genadendal, South Africa, Colonel Wardell, R.A., Captain Fawkes, R.A., and Rev. J Henry.

The three officers related what they had seen of the work of the Moravian missionaries in South Africa and the West Indies, during service with their respective regiments. They had excellent opportunities of witnessing the character of the work done at the mission stations. They knew some of the missionaries personally, attended and took part in their services, and, indeed, Colonel Wardell stated that almost the last work he did in Barbadoes was to preside at the annual missionary meeting of the brethren. The testimony which these Christian officers bore to the zealous and self-denying labours of the Moravian brethren was intensely interesting.

THE BEGINNING OF THE GOSPEL.

Mr. Hettasch, a venerable missionary, who has laboured unremittingly for twenty-seven years amongst the Hottentots in Cape Colony, drew forth the sympathy of all present by his wonderful account of the Lord's dealings through his servants. A century ago, George Schmidt, the first missionary (Moravian) to the Hottentots, was called to his rest. Part of his preparation for the pioneering work in South Africa was a six years' imprisonment in Bohemia, for the truth's sake. He landed at the Cape in July, 1737. About eighty miles from Cape Town he entered a valley called Bavian's Kloof (Baboon's Glen), where he preached the Gospel by word and example. On the spot where he preached his first sermon he planted a pear-tree. After several years of much hardship, he saw a small flock of fifty souls gathered around him, and among them were seven baptized adults. Soon open enmity and persecution broke out, and George Schmidt was compelled to leave the country. Before doing so, he gathered his little flock together, and addressed them from Acts xx., Paul's farewell words to the Ephesian elders. He gave his New Testament and pear-tree to one of the baptized; he saw his beloved Hottentots no more on earth. The Dutch Government prohibited the continuation of the mission among the natives.

FRUIT AFTER MANY DAYS.

Some fifty years passed away, and, in 1792, on Christmas Eve, three men were walking from the river Zondereind up to the Baboon's Kloof, to the spot where George Schmidt's hut stood. They rejoiced to find Schmidt's pear-tree. Soon the Hottentots were seen coming from the neighbouring kraals to salute the new teachers. Among them was an old woman, who brought out a book which had been carefully wrapped up in a sheepskin, and began to read to the missionaries, to their great surprise. This old woman, named Lena, was one of the Hottentots baptized by George Schmidt, and the book was the New Testament he had left behind him. (Here Mr. Hettasch removed the lid of a box made from Schmidt's pear-tree, and exhibited the New Testament to those present). This blessed book had been a silent missionary for fifty years. Much fruit of its ministrations was manifest. The year after the missionaries arrived they baptized seven adults, after five years they commenced to build a church, which could seat 1000 people, and after ten years' labours 1200 Hottentots were dwelling around them.

In 1806 the name of the place was changed from Bavian's Kloof to Genadendal (Vale of Grace). Nearly 100 years have passed away since the three missionaries renewed the work at this the first station in South Africa, and what is there to be seen to-day? A model village with 600 houses and 3000 inhabitants. The carpenters, tailors, shoemakers, blacksmiths, and other workmen have been taught in the Moravian schools, and have been instructed in their various pursuits by the missionaries. No intoxicants are allowed to be sold in the village.

It may be asked what have the Christian natives done towards the support of their own mission station? For about sixty years the station has been entirely self-supporting. A new school has been erected at the cost of £800, and four-fifths of this sum was paid by the Genadendal people. This school takes the highest place in the colony in the Government examinations.

A revival took place in the school in August last. Many of the scholars, especially in the three first classes, became anxious about their souls and began to weep while in school. The teachers were obliged to suspend the teaching, and the dear little ones were pointed to the Saviour. Many, indeed, professed to receive Him into their hearts. It was cheering to notice batches of children, from 30 to 40, meeting together in the open air for singing and prayer. This good work continues.

THE CORDS MUST BE LENGTHENED.

The church, nearly 100 years old, is much too small for the congregation. Although only seated for 1000 sometimes 1200 are crowded in, and on Easter Sunday last 400 had to be turned away as there was no accommodation for them. A new church to seat 2000 people is much wanted. The sum of £450 has been raised for the new building, but a large amount is still required. Not only have the natives been able to support their own station, but occasionally they have rendered substantial help to other missions. When there was great distress in St. Kitts, the Genadendal Christians sent their brethren a contribution of £53.

A GREAT CALAMITY.

A calamity has approached which threatens to destroy the people bodily and spiritually. They can no longer find employment in the surrounding country. The colony itself is in a wretched state. It has a population of 800,000 whites and 600,000 coloured people. The colony has a debt of £23,000,000, and there is scarcely any money. The consequence is, the coloured people, especially men and young girls, have to wander over the whole colony in search of work. The greater part of them are away from their homes and families; they are separated from the house of God and their pastor's care. Countless miseries have arisen. Vice is increasing, and it threatens to demoralise—yea, and to ruin—the whole village, to spoil the work of more than one hundred years. Family life is broken up. The influence of the fathers over the education of their children is lost, women and children are thrown into poverty and want. Husbands and fathers break their holy vows and forget their duty to support their wives and children. The condition of the poor women, children, and old people, is desperate.

The hearts of the missionaries are bleeding when they view this awful state of things. They tried to work against the evil. A Hottentot brother, a faithful child of God, is travelling three or four times a year along the line from Genadendal to Kimberley, where many are working. He visits the people, reading the word of God to them and admonishing them and praying with them. He brings back with him money and letters to the families at home. There are about 600 of the people at present in Cape Town, and their state also is deplorable. A missionary and his wife and six faithful native helpers from Genadendal are seeking out the lost and ministering to them. A church and school are greatly needed in Cape Town.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

The great question is, How are the workers to provide for the wants of the starving people? A new industry is proposed whereby the people may obtain sustenance at home and at their stations. After a cautious and thorough inquiry, it has been resolved to start the cultivation and pressing of the castor oil plant. The oil is greatly used in the colony for machinery, especially for the railways. The Government are anxious that this work should be introduced, and have promised to purchase the oil at a good price The missionaries are also going to start silkworm rearing, and for this purpose a wind-motor or water-pump for irrigation purposes, to aid in the cultivation of the mulberry tree, is needful Many things are necessary in connectio with the new work, for which Mr. Hettasch estimates from £400 to £500 will be required He sails on the 28th inst., encouraged by the hope that he will be supported in his arduous undertaking. Help will be most gratefully received by Rev. James Henry, Secretary of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions, 29 Ely-place, London, E.C.

THESE MANY YEARS.

> "And thou sha't remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilder-ness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know wha was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no."—Deut. viii. 2.

THESE many years! What lessons they unfold
Of grace and guidance through the wilder
From the same God that Israel of old [ness
In the Shekinah glory did possess;
How faithful He, through all my griefs, and fears
And constant murmurings, these many years!

God of the Covenant! From first to last,
From when I stood within the sprinkled door,
And o'er my guilt the avenging angel passed,
Thy better angel has gone on before;
And nought but goodness all the way appears,
Unmerited and free, these many years!

Thy presence wrought a pathway through the sea;
Thy presence made the bitter waters sweet:
And daily have thy hands prepared for me
Sweet precious morsels—lying at my feet:
'Twas but to stoop and taste the grace tha cheers, [years
And start refreshed through all, these many

What time I thirsted, and earth's streams wer dry; [gone
What time I wandered, and my hope wa
Thy hand has brought a pure and full supply,
And, by a loving pressure, lured me on:
How oft that hand hath wiped away my tears,
And written "Pardoned!" all these many years

And what of discipline thy love ordained
Fell ever gently on this heart of mine;
Around its briers was my spirit trained
To bring forth fruits of righteousness divine;
Wisdom in every check, and love appears
In every stroke throughout these many years!

Lord, what I might have been, my spirit knows Rebellious, petulant, and apt to stray:
Lord, what I am, in spite of flesh and foes,
I owe to grace that kept me in the way:
Thine be the glory! Merit disappears,
As back I look upon these many years.

Thine be the glory! Thou shalt have the praise
For all thy dealings, to my latest breath;
A daily Ebenezer will I raise,
And sing Salvation through the vale of death—
To where the palm, the golden harp appear,
There to rehearse thy love through endless years

EV. WM. ARTHUR ON PRESENT TOPICS.

THE PURITY CRUSADE.

HE following important letter from the venerable Wm. Arthur to Rev. H. Price ughes was read at the great meeting in Exeter all, on October 15 :—

Glenelg, Clapham-common, S.W.

My dear Hughes,—Frequently as I have to gret my inability to join in public assemblies, ldom is my regret so strong as in respect of the eeting of to-morrow evening. In common with ultitudes of quiet people, accustomed to defer authority and trust our public men, I have tiently waited for some sign of redeeming the omises given that steps should be taken to ing to justice criminals against the family, hose crimes had been partly exposed. No ch sign has appeared, and long delay tempts tience to turn to indignation.

Till judge and jury have spoken on the Armong case, it is not for me to say anything on merits; but if it was supposed that the osecution of Mr. Stead and Mr. Booth would vert expectation of public justice being moved ainst men who will never print their own oceedings, the reverse will be its result. It is aded that the prosecution of those gentlemen s necessary, because, in the language of The ectator, even mock crimes must be put down. then, public authority is bound to put down n mock crimes, in what position is that State ose public authority prosecutes mock criminals d screens real ones? Let the offenders who orm against themselves and against nobody e suffer whatever penalty the law appoints for f-accusing mock criminals. But if the authoes who cannot allow Mr. Stead and Mr. Booth escape let it appear that they can allow real minals to pass unchallenged, they will cause men who are watching by their hearths to , "The people's money and the Queen's hority are being employed to protect crime d put down exposure." The impression that s so is already well nigh driven home, and if y clinch it, they will have a reckoning with outraged family-feeling of the country such they seem not to anticipate.

Yours affectionately, Wm. Arthur.

THE HOUSEHOLDER'S PARLIAMENT.

t would be a grand thing if every elector in three kingdoms were to get and carefully d Mr. Arthur's new pamphlet on this subject, t published by Messrs. Bemrose & Sons. 1d. We nestly counsel our readers to further its cirtion in every possible way. We make some racts :—

"Every householder in the country has now ore him the question: Whom shall I choose nake laws for me and my house?

"Among the results of our new legislation it bvious that one of the most operative will be increased momentum acquired by the House Commons as an educating force in the nation. proportion to the number added to the electors be the additional readers of debates. If, n, you send up a noble man, animated by e and just Christian principles, you will aim ighteousness and peace, when you and your dren follow his speeches or votes your spirit be improved. If you, on the contrary, send one who will appeal to low motives, to red, animosity, evil surmising, your spirit be embittered. If you send up one who out office will oppose anything in order to get in, in office will advance what he condemned in er to keep in, your own manhood will be ered. If you send up one who will please licans, play-actors, and editors of easy ality, your family will so far breathe in ted air.

". . . . Let your candidates know that no rake ll make laws for the households of England. them know that men of the Baker Pasha np are never to sit in the seat of the lawgiver. them know that we are not going to have Benches of Justice one day boards for the ing of public-houses, and another day boards for the sheltering of the procuress. Let them know that we are not going to have our police employed in protecting traders in crime against society, and in crushing those who expose the crimes. Let them know that a Householder's Parliament must be one that will elevate and purify the family life of the land, from that of families now so ill-housed that decency is a physical impossibility, to families exalted, and yet so debased as to carry fresh corruption from satin saloons to the slums.

"The commission you are about to confer is a grand one. Of human powers the highest is the power of making a law. Of all law-makers he holds power in the noblest form whose Aye or No may pass or stop a law directly affecting the tens of millions of this United Kingdom, and indirectly the hundreds of millions of our dependencies. He whose Aye or No can influence for weal or woe, for better or worse, for peace or war, such a multitude of the creatures of God, can henceforth be no less than the chosen of many fathers: then let him be himself a choice man.

"In what spirit should we go to the choice of men to make laws for us and our children? First of all, in a spirit of thankfulness and love to God. By his good hand this nation has been wonderfully led. During the reign of Queen Victoria, population, territory, and wealth, churches, schools, and good works have notably increased, while crime, pauperism, and disloyalty have diminished. All our faults confessed, no nation enjoys such a heritage as that left by our fathers, and augmented beyond parallel in our own day by their sons. Let us go to the poll also with loyalty to the Queen. Let us go also in love and charity with our neighbours. Let neither party names frighten you, nor party cries excite your animosity. To make this great liberty inviolable, the Constitution now surrounds the act of voting with silence and seclusion. The elector acts alone with no eye over him but that of the King of kings. He puts his hand to paper, and that paper will never be traced back to him till the day of the opening of all records.

"The moment is a real crisis in the family life of the country, and it depends on the action of the householders in this juncture whether our general character shall rise or sink. Differing on measures, let us be one in aim :—Glory to God and peace among men. On the members returned it will depend whether efforts to give to every family a decent home and a fair opportunity shall be sped forward or thwarted; whether food and clothing shall or shall not be as cheap as the free markets of the world can afford; whether the sailor shall go to sea in a safe ship, and the private soldier and working officer have a fair apportionment of the military expenditure for their benefit; whether the bright brain lately born in a cot of scanty loaves shall have the chance of rendering all the service to the community of which it is capable, or shall be clogged with repugnant ignorance, and perhaps fret the nation with discontent.

"It will depend on the men returned whether publicans shall be able to boast that they bid one ministry go and another come, or whether the people shall have power to say to the public-house: "So far and no farther!" to say if they please, "Not here at all." It will depend on them whether the Blessed Day of Rest shall be held sacred, and shall continue to shed around it the benefits of reasonable hours, and half-holidays, and other days of respite; or whether, by opening museums, theatres, and all that follows, sixteen hours a day and no Sunday, which is now the lot of tramway servants, shall become the lot of many, and Sunday work become the lot of all except those who can afford Sunday play. It will depend on them whether we shall have bench, bar, and police, conspiring to screen certain criminals and encourage the trade in crime; or, shall have them doing their duty. It will depend on them whether newspapers will tell the news when it tends to divert improper men, and not tell the news when it tends to expose crime against the family committed by men of high life. It will depend on them whether England shall treat other nations as we would be treated, or shall rail at and excite them to war. It will depend on them whether leaders shall feel that in shaping either measures or policy they must count on a sharp check from their own supporters if they forget high moral principle. It will depend on them, in one word, whether the Householder's Parliament shall bring in brighter days or darker ones for our family life, and, by consequence, for the future of the nation.

EVENTS IN SPAIN.

PROTESTANTS AND THE CHOLERA.

IN the October number of his Quarterly, Pastor Fliedner, of Madrid, says :—

It is a pleasure to see how these our brethren showed themselves so composed and courageous at the time of the earthquake, as well as during the far more severe trial of the cholera. We were able to send special help to Granada, Almeria, Saragossa, and other places. In Saragossa, the wife and faithful helpmeet of Pastor Sabio died of the disease. The general panic throughout the country, which was provoked by the Government through its frantic policy of last year, when it set up a sanitary cordon round the whole of Spain, passes all description. Persons coming from infected districts were prevented with fire-arms from entering the villages, as though they were wild beasts. Thousands fled like cowards; friends and neighbours of many years standing were abandoned faithlessly. So we esteem it our duty to proclaim publicly how our Protestant Christians showed themselves composed and ready to help, confident as children who know that they are safely kept in the hand of their heavenly Father, whilst thousands thronged to buy the oil of the lamp of the miracle-working virgin of Ping, till the sacristan who sold it fell himself a victim to the plague.

THE DECREE OF PIDAL.

Since the return of the Bourbons, no more violent attack has been made on the freedom of instruction than by the decree of the Ultramontane minister, Pidal, which was signed by the king on August 18, and designedly published on the 25th, in the midst of the popular excitement caused by the cholera and the conflict with Germany. It puts innumerable hindrances in the way of all private institutions, while at the same time, all the convents and ecclesiastical institutions are declared free from all these burdens. The design is to do away with all lay institutions, even the Catholic ones, and to bring all instruction into subjection to the clergy.

In reference to the Protestants, the 17th article says :—"If the founder or director of the free school declares that he will not submit to ecclesiastical inspection, the civil and university authorities will take care that the parents be made acquainted with this declaration; and besides this, the same authorities have the right of inspection, in order that the limits of constitutional tolerance in religious matters may not be transgressed." That means in plain English, that the Mayor is to cite the parents, tell them to what a terrible school their children go, and frighten them from sending them by all means in their power. Besides this, the religious instruction is to be watched in order that no word may be spoken against the Roman Catholic religion and its abuses. It is really the formal reintroduction of the Inquisition.

A TALK ON JERUSALEM.—Miss von Finkelstein addressed the children at the Gifford Mission Hall last Sunday afternoon, on "Life in Jerusalem." The felicity with which this lady presents modern life in the Holy Land, illuminates with fresh light many passages of the New and Old Testaments.

REV. SAM. JONES has been conducting a camp-meeting at Cartersville, Ga., where he lives. He preached against the men who are evading the Prohibition Law in Cartersville, and one Sunday morning his stable was blown up by dynamite. If he is the kind of man we take him to be, his zeal will be intensified. But everywhere, east, west, north, south, the supporters of the rum-traffic will stop at nothing in its defence. Rioting, barn-burning, and mobs are the ordinary weapons, and they will not shrink from assassination in obstinate cases. Such a traffic should have no friends.—N. W. Christian Advocate.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

THERE was a crowded meeting in Exeter Lower Hall on Wednesday evening last week to hear reports of seaside services held in various watering-places during the past summer.

Mr. T. B. Bishop made a statement showing that services were held at between fifty and sixty places, and all were attended with great blessing. The picture-leaflets, translated into thirty or forty languages, had been circulated by lady workers, and carried by the children into remote regions. Many places had been neglected for want of labourers, and prayer was asked that God would raise up more.

Rev. A. Stuart, of Holloway, who presided, gave an address, which recognised the increased interest in the conversion of children which now exists, and which he believed was largely due to the Children's Special Service Mission. He also thoroughly believed in the Scripture Union, as providing means for their spiritual growth. Among the indirect blessings flowing from the work is the furnishing of a scope for the energies of our young Christians. Many adults are reached as well as children.

Brief and lively reports followed from gentlemen who had conducted services during the summer. Mr. Douglas Hamilton spoke for the good done on the sands at Rhyl, where the unbroken unity manifested among the ministers formed a happy and notable feature.

Mr. E. T. M. Dennes told of the mission at Saltburn and Redcar. Lamplight services were held at night, to which many persons came who would not come by day. A special meeting was held for boys, several of whom were brought to Christ, and have become bright and earnest Christians. At this place the work was continued for a time by Mr. Green, who recited several instances in which children and adults were brought to God.

Mr. Josiah Spiers rapidly traced the history and progress of the mission, dating from Mr. Hammond's visit to this county in 1867. Let them resolve that a hundred watering-places shall be occupied next summer. Meanwhile, let their teaching be Scriptural, and free from "goodyism."

Mr. Arrowsmith hoped something would be done among boys during the Christmas holidays, through drawing-room meetings, wherever offered by ladies. At Llandudno, and the surrounding places, twenty-three friends from Oxford and Cambridge had worked with him in the summer. A most interesting work was done among adults. A long letter was read, written by one whom curiosity had led to attend one of the services where he was awakened and saved.

We have received a detailed account of the services held at Bridlington Quay, from which we make some extracts:—

This year has been a very bright and happy one, and fraught with much blessing. "I am hearing of hardly anything else than blessing amongst the girls," was a remark lately made. The same could, no doubt, be said of the boys. And some, no longer children, were brought to Christ to receive from Him forgiveness, peace, and joy. It was delightful to see hundreds of children with beaming countenances listening to short addresses in which the love of Christ was so tellingly set forth.

Two evenings in the week the boys had a meeting to themselves, conducted by one of the gentlemen, and twice a week the girls—these being held by ladies in the afternoon. In the evening, meetings were held in the Sailors' Institute for older children and adults, when the Gospel was most earnestly and lovingly proclaimed. There were meetings for young men, and an open-air service on Sunday evenings after church. The "Lantern Service" was one of special interest to the children. The mission began, August 10, and was concluded on the 28th. The services were conducted by Mr. George King, assisted by Messrs. Oswald Bird, Gordon Young, E. H. Stacey, C. J. Kennedy, and W. Bothamly.

A GOOD WORK IN BILLINGSGATE.

ON Tuesday, October 20, an invitation was given through the medium of large posters placed in the market, to the salesmen, porters, and others, to attend a meeting at noon in the rooms of the London Fish Trade Association, kindly lent for the occasion, to listen to addresses by Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe and Archibald G. Brown. About 100 responded, and listened with much attention to the "old, old story." The chair was taken by Mr. Alfred Walters, who convened the meeting, and who is Secretary of the Billingsgate District Association, and himself a salesman in the market.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe delivered an earnest address, interspersed with telling anecdotes. He remarked that one pretty general idea of a Christian was that he must be a muff. Never was there a greater mistake. Frequently the idea of a youth was that when he became a man he would go in for enjoying himself, drinking and gaming and cursing and sitting up all night, and so on, and that when he had sowed his wild oats he could look back and say what a glorious time he had had of it when he was a young man. Such a man as that was no man. Every one of us, when we got to thirty years of age, said, "Poor fool! he was just spoiling his manhood; he never knew what he was doing." It was not true manliness to drink as much as he could, and it was not true manliness to curse and to swear. True manliness seemed to him always to be something that was able to bear and forbear; when a man could bear any trial or suffering for the cause that was dear to him, then he was a true man. A man was no man because he played the fool with his body, with his time, with his tongue, and with his talents; but a man was a man when he was able to bear and forbear. The very noblest specimen of a man, that everybody would acknowledge to be a man, was the one that carried out the Christian doctrine in every single point of his life. For real fighting, for bearing, for rescuing the needy, whatever they would, the self-denying, suffering, patient Christian would carry out the idea of a real noble, honourable man. The real man was Jesus Christ, the carpenter of Nazareth; and if they wanted to be real men, they must come and join the Lord Jesus. If a man went in for drink, he would end by being a shaky, palsied fool; and so, if he went in for any other vice, there was nothing but a miserable and sad ending. And so with fame and riches, and any other earthly prize—it would have an end one day, and there was only one thing which could go further, and the value of which would continue beyond the grave. After referring to St. Paul's figures of the Christian as the soldier, the athlete, and the husbandman, he concluded an address which had been listened to with intense interest, by an earnest entreaty not to delay deciding for Christ.

Mr. Archibald Brown said that Mr. Webb-Peploe had been telling them what sort of soldiers they ought to be. He himself would like to act as a recruiting sergeant, because it was of no use for any of them to try to be soldiers unless they had entered into the army. Some people had an idea that they were going to play the soldier, but that was impossible unless they were in the army. A soldier entered into the army not by payment but by acceptance, and if they were to be saved they must accept the salvation which was freely offered to them, and enter into Christ's army by a simple faith in Himself and an absolute trust in his finished work. No man could make a good soldier unless he was really loyal at heart, and if a man was to be a good soldier of Jesus Christ he must have Him within his heart.

We may add, that a report recently received of the Association's work for the past year shows that much good is being done. The hungry are fed through the medium of free breakfasts. The Gospel is preached by the City missionary, Mr. T. Vicary, and other willing and consecrated helpers. A large library is provided for the use of the men, &c. Every effort is put forward to secure the spiritual and temporal welfare of those who frequent the market and neighbourhood. Help is needed to enable the Association to maintain, and if possible extend, the work, and this may be sent to the Treasurer, Mr. J. Newman, 9, Crooked-lane, E.C.; or to the Hon. Sec., Mr. A. Walters, 10, Billingsgate-market.

A WELCOME TO MISS MACPHERSON.

A LARGE number of friends gathered at the Home of Industry last week to give a welcome to Miss Macpherson on her return from Canada. She founded her remarks on Deut. xxxi. 6—8, showing how the promises contained in these verses had been fulfilled in her experience with regard to the work the Lord had placed in her hand; especially during the last few months, in crossing and re-crossing the ocean, in giving many precious opportunities of service on board, and in going before, step by step, in Canada, by preparing suitable and happy homes for the children.

Miss Granger, who went out with a party of children five months ago, told her experiences of life on board ship and in Canada. Miss Stock also said a few words about her visit to Canada, she having accompanied Miss Macpherson. An account of her visits to the children placed out in Canadian homes appeared in our last issue. Several branches of the home work were mentioned by Miss Macpherson, fuller particulars of which will be given in an "Occasional Paper," which will soon be issued. The present special need of the Institution is £500 for a Working Girls' Home, which is much required, on account of the over-crowded dwellings of the poor in the East-end.

Dr. Eccles spoke a few encouraging words about missionary efforts amongst the Berber races of North Africa, and introduced Dr. Churcher, a medical missionary, and two ladies leaving shortly for that mission field.

A GREETING FROM GERMANY.

MY DEAR SIR,—The good Lord has brought me back here quite suddenly, and almost unexpected by myself, as far as early winter is concerned, but I find everything so ready for a thorough work of evangelisation among the lowly of the East of Berlin; I find so many prayerful hearts here, filled with this one thought, "consecrated to the Lord," and really in earnest, that my soul is full of rejoicing and filled with a living hope of sure success for the honour and glory of my Master. Will you pray for me, and also ask for prayers from those earnest co-labourers in the work, the readers of The Christian, for this winter work in this great city?

I cannot tell you how happy I was when, on arrival here, I found that our friend, Count Andreas von Bernstorff, had organised at his Christian home, in Belwen-str., 29, a noonday prayer meeting. Even if but few attend as yet, what a power will come forth from this half-hour of prayer in the busy hours of the day, of the faithful ones of the city who gather here. Pray for us in the Aldersgate-street noonday prayer meeting also.

May the Lord strengthen your hands in this terrible fight you and we all have on hand. Give greetings to Brother Stead; I pray to God daily to strengthen his hands and heart. Thanks for that article by Brother Clark in No. 820—"Honesty in face of a Guilty Past." Greetings to the brethren.—Fraternally yours,

F. von Schluembach, German Evangelist.

SPEZIA.—The eleventh anniversary of the Spezia Mission Locale was celebrated on October 18. After a most edifying address from Mr. Edward Clarke, the superintendent, some fifty believers joined in observing the Lord's supper. One of the most impressive events of the day was the baptism of two young Italians, one of whom had served the Romish priest in the Mass; the other had professed himself a "free-thinker." The Spezia Mission itself, in a few months, will celebrate its twentieth year of service for Christ in this anti-Christian country.

MR. HAMMOND IN LONDON.

DRAWING-ROOM MEETINGS.

ON Wednesday and Thursday, last week, Mr. Hammond and Mr. Jos. Spiers conducted drawing-room meetings at Mrs. Gurney's, Ladbroke-terrace. The spacious drawing-room was crowded to overflowing. Many were found in he second meeting deeply moved, and a large number expressed faith in Christ. At the second day's meeting it was found that numbers who were anxious the day before were rejoicing in Christ. Mr. Spiers related a touching story concerning the conversion of three children fifteen years ago in his meetings, who are now each of them occupying positions of usefulness.

At the meeting on Friday in Dr. Sinclair Paterson's Presbyterian Church, a father related, n a very touching manner, the story of his little daughter's conversion at the drawing-room meeting. Mr. Hammond had been talking with a ittle girl who was evidently trusting in Christ; he then led her to this gentleman who was delighted to find it was his own daughter, whose heart was filled with new-found peace and joy. He was able to say she had already gained great power over a very strong self-will, which showed tself in a solicitous obedience to her mamma's wishes.

Each night the meetings have deepened in nterest, and the church has been constantly illed. Hundreds have remained to the inquiry-meeting. The touching incidents that have been related from time to time at the morning meetings would fill columns. A clergyman from the county of Norfolk, who had come up to town for the purpose of being in the midst of his work among the children, said he had recorded ninety girls of different ages who had given themselves to the Saviour and determined o live to Him. So obvious to him was the work of the Holy Spirit in these services that he would return to his own flock suffused with the energising influences and thereby communicate o them the vitalising power of the Divine life.

At the meeting on Thursday morning, Mr. J. E. Mathieson said the work had gone on at Mildmay since Mr. Hammond left. On Friday morning, though it rained incessantly, though he numbers were not so great as on other mornngs, the service was a most impressive one. Probably fifteen different persons offered a short prayer of thanksgiving. One gentleman thanked he Lord for the change in public opinion regarding the conversion of children, as also for the greater notice the churches were giving to the place that children should hold in the Church.

LETTER FROM REV. D. B. HANKIN.

Dear Sir,—May I express my thankfulness to ur loving Lord for sending Mr. Payson Hammond to us at Mildmay. Although the mission was held at the Conference Hall, I threw myself nto the work heartily, and am now reaping a most blessed harvest. Numbers of young people, boys especially, are rejoicing in their Saviour; hey have their prayer meetings two or three imes a week, and their happy faces testify to heir joy. I am much struck with the healthiness and spiritual vigour of these babes in Christ; hey are out and out for the Lord, and keep on bringing in new boys to sit down with them at he Gospel feast.

The conversion of children is no strange work o me, but I believe that the Lord is now workng amongst the young in a very definite way, nd if only co-workers with Him are on the ook-out for a blessing, and take care to welcome Jesus of Nazareth as He passes by, they will ee "far greater things" than any they have een as yet permitted to see. We are just now holding a series of evangelistic services, conucted by Mr. Legg, of Harrow, and evening fter evening we witness the conversion of young people. To Mr. Hammond I owe fraternal hanks, and I cordially commend him to the rayerful sympathy of the Church of Christ.—ours faithfully in Christ,

Daniel Bell Hankin.

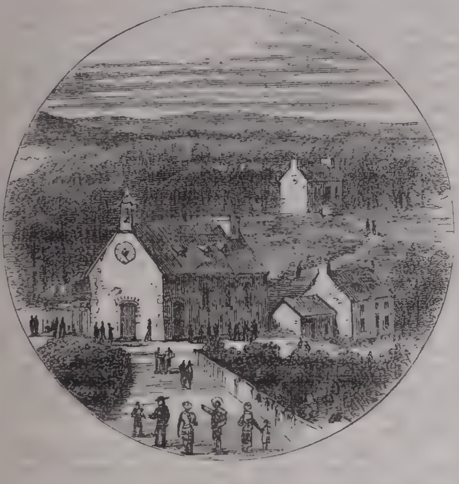
THE BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.

THE Bretons are cousins of our Welsh and Gaelic fellow-countrymen, and if Tre, Pol, and Pen, are distinguishing first syllables of the names of Cornish men and places, there seems to be even a nearer relationship between the inhabitants of the two peninsulas which guide the waters of the Channel in their inflow from the Atlantic Ocean, for such names are the rule in Brittany. The name of the chief station of this mission is itself an instance—Tre-mel. We have two towns named St. Ives in England, but the Bretons boast of having the body of that saint in their soil.

The land is spiritually very dark. Satan has most truly blinded the eyes of the people, and the Romish priests and shoals of nuns have been used as instruments to effect this. There are about two millions of Breton-speaking people in this north-western peninsula of France, over whom the Papal Church has obtained an almost universal sway. To succeed in this, they have pandered to the peculiar religious ideas of the people upon whom druidical forms of worship have left an indelible impression. The Romish priests found no difficulty in engrafting the venerated customs upon the Catholic ritual, and in elevating the old local heroes into papal saints, so that to-day, within twelve hours of our own shores, we may find a people more sunken in superstition and more priest-ridden than perhaps any other people in the world.



BEED

Christianity, doubtless, once had considerable hold in this district, but the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes here did an infamously perfect work, in extinguishing absolutely every Protestant community among these Breton-speaking people. They are, consequently, sunken in poverty and drunkenness, and such is their moral condition that their word is not to be taken in anything they say.

Among this people, a few friends in Wales, half a century ago, started a mission, which, after much uphill work, did not do more than make a slight breach in this compact mass of sin and wickedness. Not being able to bear the full strain of the work, the original founders appealed to the committee of the English Baptist Missionary Society, who generously took up the cause. The great increase of this society's work in Africa and Asia not permitting the necessary attention to be given to this small mission, they have decided to relinquish it, and an evangelical committee has been formed to take it up.

It is just now in a more interesting condition than it ever has been. The Trinitarian Bible Society has given the people a New Testament in their own tongue, and the whole Scriptures are already translated by M. Lecoat, the native missionary, who will in future conduct the mission. There are two day-schools for boys, with between forty and fifty scholars in each. The Bible is taught and explained to them daily. On this account the French Government will not give any support, nevertheless they insist upon an inspection of them to ascertain if the required standard is maintained. The girls are visited and taught at home by female Bible readers, a most useful institution. A little hospital, with four beds, gives shelter to the aged or sick who may need such watchful care and medical aid as Madame Lecoat can give. Preaching is carried on in the two main or larger buildings, and in twelve out-stations. The Government authorities favour M. Lecoat's efforts to evangelise. Several colporteurs, not supported by the mission, are under M. Lecoat's direction.

The whole of this good work is carried on for about £350 per annum, but the people are beseeching M. Lecoat to open preaching places and schools in their villages. Seventy pounds per annum would provide a preacher, colporteur, and house for meeting in any new district. French Protestants are too few and poor to help, and, not knowing the language, know even less than Englishmen do about this interesting people. The Baptist Missionary Society kindly allow the use of their buildings at a nominal rent.

One branch of this mission offers a very large field for influence. At the French arsenal town of Brest there are more than 30,000 Breton-speaking people, who know but little French, and who crowd out the straitened meeting-place. They cannot often be visited for want of further assistance. Workers, converts of the mission, are ready, but help is needed. Will friends come to our help. Any further information given by

W. L. Lang, a Member of the Committee.

Y.M.C.A. WORK IN SYDNEY, N.S.W.

ERE the good ship which took me out had anchored off the circular quay at Sydney, I noticed amongst the mixed crowd gathered to await our arrival several young men distributing cards, and throwing them on board to the passengers. My curiosity was aroused, so I picked one up, and discovered it was an invitation to the rooms of the Y.M C.A. I went, and was hospitably received by the general secretary, Mr. David Walker. During my stay in Sydney I cultivated this gentleman's acquaintance, and found he had an intense sympathy for young men, and the vigour and earnestness with which he met the many difficult tasks before him aroused my esteem and respect.

One of the best works connected with this institution is the opera-house services for non-churchgoers, held every Sunday evening in one of the theatres, where real, straightforward Gospel truths are plainly spoken, and where many have been brought to their knees before God. In the Secretary's little room many a wanderer has been reclaimed. Through this Christian agency many good situations have been found for strangers on the look-out for work. Many prodigals have been hunted up, and sent to the home in the "old country" so long neglected by them; and many a young fellow has been saved from ruin by its timely aid.

My advice to all who intend leaving English shores for Australasia is, to go to the Y.M.C.A. Christianity does not always mean "talk;" it teaches us to help those in distress, to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, and take one's fellowman by the hand to help him out of the mire and clay; and this is my experience of the work done by these societies.

T. F. S.

THE PRUSSIAN BIBLE SOCIETY celebrated Oct. 14, in Berlin, its 71st year. During the past year over 72,000 Bibles and about 18,000 New Testaments were distributed. In addition to these nearly 47,000 school Bibles were disposed of.

SHAFTESBURY HOUSE, MARGATE.—The report for the past year of this young men's Seaside Home shows that the great objects of the institution have been kept steadily in view, and abundant evidence has been received of the spiritual good obtained by those who have sojourned there. To this fact many extracts from letters bear witness. As an outcome of the work, a prayer union has recently been established at the Gracechurch-street Y M C.A. by some young men on their return to London, to pray for blessing on all young men who have been there, and also on its managers. In some instances prayer has already been answered. All information as to terms, &c., can be obtained from Mr. Owens Mell, the resident Manager.

ONE DAY'S WORK AMONG LOST MEN.

FEW think of the weary, despairing men who morning by morning emerge from the Metropolitan prisons, Clerkenwell, Holloway, and Wandsworth. These men have sinned, but are they, therefore, to sink deeper and deeper into crime and lawlessness, or are they to be saved? The question is a very practical one, and must be faced in a practical way. As the man who has done wrong steps forth from the gloomy portal, he finds awaiting him old and hardened companions in sin. They know, too well, his day of discharge, and they are there to see he does not escape them. Left to these, left to himself, the poor fellow has no resource but to follow the old pursuits. Here and there one, with bitter repenting, may endeavour to break the chain; he soon finds no one will employ a convicted thief, while all the time tempters are at his side whispering how easy it is "to prig." In such case, isolated and unhelped, he is indeed lost.

But, even as he steps forth, friends are near; close by the gate of each of these prisons may be found an earnest company—the prison-gate workers. Inside the gate one of their number is engaged passing down the line, as the men about to be liberated stand mute in Indian file. giving to each an invitation to breakfast and a few words of warning and comfort. Then, as the men pass slowly out, the workers outside urge them to come to the mission-room, and thus escape temptation. To a new-comer, an inexperienced worker, it is a painful and saddening sight as one after another the men and boys pass out to freedom.

"All out!" is at length announced; and, crossing the street, we find in the mission-room some twenty or thirty assembled. Breakfast is served, and enjoyed heartily, by men long inured to hard prison fare. After breakfast, the Secretary of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, or some of his helpers, addresses the men in plain, direct, straightforward words of Gospel entreaty. Temperance is insisted upon—for drink is the great snare of such, and the folly and stupidity, in the long run, of wrong-doing are forcibly pointed out. There the unhappy men listen to plain words that nowhere else, and in no other circumstances, would they bear.

But this is only preliminary. A day's work among lost men means much more. Many of these accept cards for the Home in Brooke-street; many of them plead for "a chance." Well, let us go down to the Brooke-street rendezvous and see what is doing. Entering the new Home, passing through the waiting-room (crowded with applicants hoping against hope), and class-rooms and hall, we reach, on the second floor, the audience-chamber. Here Mr. Wheatley interviews the men. His first endeavours are to make sure the applicant is really desirous of well-doing; for, unless it be so, it is useless to waste time and money, when so many others are pressing forward. Long experience and considerable natural shrewdness have made him very expert in getting at the true state of the case. When, however, sincere repentance is manifested, sharpness vanishes, and he is tender and loving in seeking to lead the man to the one and only way of escape, in the pardoning love of Christ.

Meanwhile the convicts have arrived; for day by day a number of "long term men," those who have committed some crime of sufficient gravity to demand penal servitude, are discharged in the Home. These men are committed to the care of the mission, their allowance is paid over to the mission, by it to be disbursed on their behalf.

Here we have the "regular" burglar, one who has been five times in prison, has spent the most of his life within the prison walls, and appears to have come to the conclusion that "the way of transgressors is hard."

"Give me a chance, sir; I've never had one; I was trained for a thief. Try me. God helping me, I mean to drop it."

He is pointed clearly and directly to the only source of strength, and advised to unite himself with the praying company (of reformed men) who meet every Tuesday in the Home to wait on God.

The next comer was far differently brought up; but, alas! has fallen equally low. He seems sincerely penitent, and for him also a chance is provided.

So on through a long list—even in the course of this one morning what sad revelations of the folly and bitterness of sin! Blasted lives, homes broken up, wives broken hearted, children starving, fair fame and name gone through yielding to temptation. Criminals all of them. But are they to remain so? That is the simple question to be answered here. A helping hand, a loving word, a little real practical aid just at the right moment, and these, as many before have done, may become steady, honest, God-fearing, godly men. Round the mission are gathered many such even now in good positions in London, and before me, as I write, are letters from others in distant lands, who are seeking to serve and honour God, and, moreover, are doing all they can to save those fallen as they once were. They know, as do few others, the peculiar difficulties besetting a man who has been convicted of crime.

Three or four busy hours are spent in this interview work, most essential and necessary, and, moreover, requiring special tact and wisdom. This over, work must be found for these men. Humanly speaking, there is little hope of them unless employment be found, for hunger is a wonderfully potent ally of temptation. Hundreds of letters must be written, and many personal calls made, to secure the employment desiderated.

Then the Recorder wants to see Mr. Wheatley about some lads, fallen victims to the coiner's nefarious intrigues; or the magistrate at one or other of the police courts desires his presence in connection with some case; or the police commissioner requests him to call about some ticket-of-leave man. Away goes Mr. Wheatley, hither and thither, ever with the one intent, that of rescuing the slaves of crime.

Late in the day, when such official calls have been complied with, he recalls some sick convict, some dying man, out on special licence, and off he goes to carry the message of salvation to one who knows, and, it may be, cares little for its gladness.

Yet, again and again has he been led to speak just the word which, like a sharp arrow, has reached the heart. By the bedside of some sore-sick one, disgraced in the eyes of man, forsaken by all but his mother, I heard him the other day speak and plead until tears welled from the sufferer's eyes, as he exclaimed—

"Why, it seems you think there's mercy for me."

"Yes, that's exactly why I am here."

"But I'm too bad."

"Are you? Why, He came to seek and save the lost."

"But I'm a great sinner."

"This Man receiveth sinners."

"A sinner like me?"

"He saved the chief of sinners. You can't be more than that."

"Well, I s'pose I can't. The fact is you beat me all round."

"Let us pray about it;" and down he goes on his knees by the poor man's bed (while the mother is sobbing as if her heart would break), and cries to God that the blind eyes may be opened to see Jesus. And opened they appeared to be; so far as man may judge, that despised ticket-of-leave man accepts as a guilty sinner the King's mercy, and passes from death to life. This is real hand-to-hand grappling with souls, for which, in spite of the incessant demands of this great and growing work, Mr. Wheatley somehow contrives to snatch time.

It is late now—he has had a long day, the body is weary, but there is Mrs. So-and-so, that convict's wife. He knows she is badly off, he cannot go home without seeing what can be done for her. So down he goes to that back street in Whitechapel, finds her out, has a brief (and, by the way, rather painful) interview, gives a little present help, and promises to devise some permanent means of obtaining a livelihood for herself and starving children.

Yet awaiting him at the Brooke-street Home are countless letters from all parts of the world, claiming reply. Men in prison write, asking if, on their release, there will be a chance for them; masters and friends write from all sorts of places, giving accounts of the conduct of men (formerly criminals); men themselves write, overflowing with gratitude, and asking advice on some point from the only human friend they know; rescued boys write in similar strain, and somehow or other these must be answered.

Day by day employment must be found for twenty or thirty men and boys; clothing must be provided, tools in many cases found (to be repaid by instalments); and all this must be contrived and planned and effected to-day, for to-morrow will bring its fresh contingent of erring but professedly repenting ones, equally anxious to turn over a new leaf.

The results of this one day's work among lost men are registered in heaven, for souls have been born again, lost ones have been found, runaway husbands restored, wandering boys brought back, and the ranks of crime distinctly and manifestly thinned by the operations of the day.

If all this work costs money—and money it does cost—who shall say it is not money spent to the best and most remunerative purposes? A Christian gentleman, of considerable experience in police and prison matters, remarked the other day, "I don't know any way in which a hundred pounds a day could be more profitably spent than in such rescue work. With the actual results such as we know them really to be, I wonder the St. Giles' Christian Mission has not an income tenfold the present amount. The work it is doing is an untold benefit to the nation, as well as to the men themselves."

A visit to the Home, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, would reveal more of the work than any description I could give; it would amply repay time and trouble. Failing this, a note to the Hon. Superintendent, Mr. George Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C., would secure much interesting information. P.

OBITUARY.

THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER.

WE regret to announce the death of the Bishop of Manchester, which took place last week at Bishop's-court, Higher Broughton. The event was sudden in the extreme, but it was not altogether a surprise to his medical attendants, who had had reason to regard it as a possibility. For nearly two months the Bishop had been unwell, and for some time he gave up all work, but latterly he was not entirely incapacitated from his official duties, though he was relieved of all unnecessary work. The cause of death was that which the doctors feared—a clot of blood flying to the heart and stopping the artery. The news of the Bishop's death created a profound sensation in the district. The warmest sympathy has been shown for Mrs. Fraser in her sad bereavement. At all public buildings the flags were placed at half-mast, and at many public meetings the deepest regret was expressed.

Dr. Fraser was born at Prestbury, near Cheltenham, in 1818. In January, 1870, he was selected by Mr. Gladstone to succeed Dr. Prince Lee in the bishopric of Manchester. He had no sooner established himself in Manchester than he began to impress himself upon the diocese as a man of boundless self-devotion, activity, and width of sympathy. He at once took the lead in all philanthropic movements, in all movements for elevating the social condition of the working classes, and in all movements for promoting union amongst different Christian bodies. He was honourably nicknamed "the Bishop of all denominations."

The deaths are also announced of Dr. Woodford, Bishop of Ely, and Rev. R. H. Marten, Congregational minister, Lee.

WESTCOTT-GREEN.—The open-air services held on Westcott-green during the summer were well attended, and accompanied with much blessing Mr. W. Umell, of Dorking, with other friends, faithfully testified of the Gospel of the grace of God.

REVOCATION of the EDICT of NANTES.

THE Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House was filled on Thursday afternoon at the eeting in connection with this commemoration. rayer having been offered by Rev. Dr. White, he Lord Mayor gave a rapid survey of the work f the Reformation in the various countries of urope, and contrasted Protestant England and rotestant Germany with Papal Italy and Spain nd Infidel France. He reviewed the history of he promulgation of the Edict of Nantes and nd its Revocation, affirming that the evils from hich France now suffered were largely due to he expulsion of the Huguenots and the substitu- ion of the infidelity of Voltaire and Rousseau; the suppression of the principles of Protes- antism in favour of Roman Catholicism. After welling upon the loss to France, he pointed out he gain to England and other countries from the ct of Louis Quatorze in driving his most indus- rious subjects out of France.

Rev. G. G. Daugars, in an impassioned and loquent speech, dwelt upon the history of the evocation. It was, he said, Cæsar contending gainst the Spirit of God. Dwelling upon the istory of the Huguenots between 1598 and 685, he showed how they had been deprived of heir rights, how king after king had sought to vade the Edict, and how the despotism of Rome nally conquered in the struggle, when through he Jesuits Louis XIV. signed the Revocation.

Dr. Stoughton's address was very scholarly, ut was only imperfectly heard. He said the evocation was really designed to crush religious berty, although it was professed to leave the uguenots liberty of conscience. The Huguenots ed the country at a fearful risk, and he drew a raphic picture of the flight of the refugees. dverting to the consequences, he showed how rench commerce was affected, and, although ot immediately, how French literature suffered. he lesson to be learnt from the sufferings of the uguenots was the need for a life of self-sacrifice. r. Stoughton concluded by moving a resolution at a medal be struck to commemorate the vents of that memorable day, October 22, 1685. aptain Phipps and Rev. Gossett Tanner also oke to the resolution. Much indignation was icited by Mr. Tanner's declaration that the ucifix was soon to be set up in St. Paul's as a centre of worship."

The speech of the day was that of Rev. Grat- n Guinness, in moving the second resolution, at a fund be raised to establish two scholar- ips at the Theological Faculty of Montauban rance), of the value of £25 each, to be held for ree years by two pious young men, born of oor Huguenot parents, to prepare them for the inistry in France, and also to help the dissemi- ation of evangelical truth in that country. mid some excitement he produced an old uguenot Bible, upon the flyleaf of which was entry dated 1745, recording a Huguenot ptism. This was a witness to the duration of the uguenot persecutions. He also produced another teresting relic in a Commentary upon the Apo- lypse, written by an anonymous Huguenot pastor 1685, just before the Edict was revoked, and rinted in London in 1688. In this remarkable olume, he said, the writer identified the Church Rome with the Babylon of Revelation, and nticipated the sufferings of the "two witnesses." fter touching upon the share of the Huguenots the English revolution of 1688, Mr. Guinness oduced a copy of the medal struck by Pope regory XIII. to commemorate the massacre of t. Bartholomew. He then gave some very teresting reminiscences of his visit to Spain in 70. Whilst at Madrid he found that in making new road the workmen had cut through the iles of ashes of the Protestant martyrs which emained as a witness of the auto-da-fé of the quisition, and he produced a packet of these red relics. Mr. Guinness concluded by ex- essing his wish to present the Bible as an fering to the cause of the evangelisation of rance.

Among the other speakers were Dr. Donald raser and Dr. Sinclair Paterson, who moved a vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor and Dr. White, who had taken the chair during the latter part of the afternoon. The meeting, which was very enthusiastic, and which showed strong Protestant leanings, lasted about two hours and three-quarters.—Record.

Special services, in connection with the Bicentenary Commemoration, were held at Canterbury Cathedral, the French Church in St. Martin's-le-Grand, the French Church, Bayswater, &c.

MISSIONS ON THE CONGO.

DEAR SIR,—In the early spring of this year I left the land of the Stars and the Stripes, having lived for some time in the far West. After spending a happy time in England, the land of my birth, I sailed from Liverpool on June 17 in the ss. Kinsembo, bound for Mossamedes. I went on shore at Madeira, Accra, Fernando Po, Bonny, St. Thomas, Old Calabar, and Gaboon. Space will not permit me to refer to the many strange scenes I beheld at these places. On July 28 I went on shore at Kabenda, where our dear brother Mr. Henry Craven was called to his rest. There, on a short visit, he was stricken with the deadly fever, and passed from this withering land to that region where the sun shall not light on him nor any heat.

Here, too, and at other places along the coast, are buried many who came out to make money by trading with that destroying element, drink. In the midst of their ill-gotten gains they were cut down and called to their eternal reward. The trade in intoxicants on the African coast is almost fatal to missionary enterprise, at least, where the drink is sold. O England! O Europe! O America! your skirts are red with the blood of your victims, whom you have destroyed with whisky and rum!

After a few days' stay at Banana, I arranged to go up the river on the A. I. A. boat Heron. I awoke on the morning of my departure with a fearful headache, a furred tongue, and a feverish pulse. However, I recovered by the time we reached Boma, where we spent the night at the Dutch house. Palabala is about 130 miles from Banana, and ten miles from the south bank. It is a hilly region, and the A. I. A. will find it difficult to survey the much-needed railway to Stanley Pool.

The brethren whom I have met out here, connected with our Mission, and also the missionaries of the Baptist Missionary Society, are evidently men of the right stamp and suited to the work. The experiences of some of these brethren are simply marvellous, and show the true spirit of these heroes of the Cross. Notwithstanding the efforts that have been made on the lower river, the darkness is still very great. As I write, there are a large number of the natives of the various towns dancing within 150 yards of this station. The noise they make is indescribable, and this will be kept up through the whole night. They are a very superstitious people, and are firm believers in their "inkisi" (idols). It is believed that an inkisi placed at the entrance to a town will keep out the "ndoki" (devil). In wandering about, I frequently notice a small branch of a tree or bush tied to their doorways. It is believed that this will keep away the "yevie" (thieves), and, indeed, it is in most cases sufficient protection from that class of people.

There are, however, in a few instances, signs of a spiritual awakening, and a desire to know something about the true God and Jesus Christ, whom He has sent. God grant that this may be the first droppings of a shower in this thirsty land!

"Light of this world's gross darkness,
  On Ethiopia shine;
Till Ham's sin-stricken children Receive the beams Divine."

I do not remain at this station. Before you receive this, I hope to be eighty miles further up the river, at our Mukimbungu station. After a stay there of some months, I shall probably proceed to Stanley Pool, where assistance is sorely needed. It is very difficult getting up country, as all our provisions, tools and other things, have to be carried by the natives, or Loango men. The country, too, is hilly, and the roads are very trying to the feet.

We have just heard of the wreck of the Corisco, on the Liberian or Kroo coast, with the loss of all her cargo. Some provisions for this Mission have gone down with her. It is somewhat singular that I was urged to sail with the Corisco, instead of the Kinsembo, in order to have the companionship of a dear brother going to Old Calabar. A kind Providence, however, ordered it otherwise, as I had a large quantity of goods with me, only a small portion of which was insured.

Since my arrival there has been considerable sickness in these Missions. It is a great trial of our faith; yet we are firmly persuaded that He doeth all things well. By and by the darkness will flee away, and the glorious morning will dawn, shedding light upon things that are now hidden and obscure. I ask the prayers of all who may read this that we may be greatly blessed in our work, that God Himself may be ever with us—in the daytime, his lovingkindness; in the night, his song. I am praying that the Lord may put it into the heart of some Christian friend to send me your paper, which I like so very much.—Yours in the service of the Lord,

MEDICAL ACCESSORIES NEEDED.

Dear Sir,—After spending nearly four years in the Lord's work on the Congo, I am now at home with my wife, in search of health, and we hope to return to our work out there next month. We should feel greatly obliged to Christian friends if they would supply us with lint and old linen for bandages for dressing ulcers, scrap and picture books, small dresses and toys for our school children, and old jackets and coats as presents to native chiefs. These all help to win our way to the hearts of the people.

We feel that although the management of our mission has passed out of English hands, yet there are many who feel a deep interest in the work out there, and only require to be asked to bestow their gifts and thereby show their sympathy with the work and in our efforts for the end—"Congo for Christ."

We would also ask that in their prayers the readers of your paper would remember us and our Mission that we may see spiritual results.—Yours in the work, Stephen J. White, BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Mr. Haegert states that 175 persons have professed faith in Christ through baptism, in connection with the mission, since his return from England.

WORKING GIRLS' CLUBS.—A little less than a year ago the first "Working Girls' Club" was organised in New York. Now there are twelve clubs with twelve hundred members. They aim to supply to working girls in the city a partial substitute for home life, to afford them facilities for improving their industrial and general education, and to secure to the members the practical benefits of co-operation. The girls gather each evening except Saturday to receive instruction in the "common English branches, in millinery, dressmaking, cooking, home elocution, singing, shorthand, typewriting, book-keeping, English literature, German, &c., at a cost of from three to ten cents per lesson." One room serves as a library and sitting-room and those who choose pass the time in reading, games, and social enjoyment. Another room is a suitably furnished kitchen. In fact, the feeling of actual home life is sought in every way possible. The managers believe that these clubs, by affording innocent recreation and good company, will take away the temptation to questionable amusements; that they will prepare the young women to become more efficient, and therefore better paid, workers; that they will, in many cases, introduce them to the refinement of good society, and, perhaps, to homes of their own; and that, in general, they will open to them a higher view of life and its aims. Ought not such clubs to be organised in every city?

MRS. HILTON'S FOSTER CHILDREN.

Our young readers who enjoy the privilege of happy homes, and receive the kind care of Christian parents or friends, have shown an interest in past years in the children who are less fortunate, and for whom Mrs. Hilton seeks to provide in the Crèche and Orphan Home, at Stepney Causeway, E. We are sure they will like to read the following particulars taken from Mrs. Hilton's last Report:—

"Several dear children have left our Home during the year, and, though we miss the little faces, we are glad to think that their parents are able to receive them home again. One hard-working mother has made a second marriage, and fetched her boys home with great rejoicing. Little Lilian was fetched home by her father, who has served his five years in prison. Dear little Ethel's father made a second marriage, so she was taken home by her new mother. Alice has left us, for her father has returned, and her mother hoped he would behave better to her, and was willing to believe in his promises of amendment.

"Little Paul has been taken by the Good Shepherd; he suffered from a complication of diseases, and we sent him to Shadwell Hospital. They kindly received him at once, but neither skill nor careful nursing could save him. It is impossible to describe the grief of his poor mother at his death, for all her hopes had been centred in her child, and her delight that he was fair, instead of coloured, like herself, was most pathetic. She is in a situation, where she is treated with great kindness. 'You see, ma'am,' she once said, 'the ladies are too good to mind my colour.'

"We advanced some of the money to bury the dear child, and on the day of the funeral Alice, Paul's mother, came to see us. We asked if he was still at the hospital, but she replied, 'Oh, no; he is in my friend's room; she thought it would be so lonesome for little Paul and me for him to be buried from the hospital as if he had no home, so she had him in her room, and she has lent me some of her things that she didn't want, to pawn, that I might buy my blacks. She is very poor, but has a kind heart.' This friend was a woman Alice has once lodged with, and was no relation whatever. We were much touched by the sympathy of this poor woman, which showed itself in such self-sacrificing, though such injudicious kindness. We gave Alice the money to repay her at once. A week or two since Alice came to show us a basket of most exquisite flowers, which her mistress had given her to place on little Paul's grave; she also paid part of her debt.

"The two girls, Florrie and Gerty, whose father is in penal servitude for life, were taken a month or two since by their grandfather to see him, at his earnest request. The poor children were so overcome at the sight of him and his surroundings that for several days they were too ill to return to us. The poor fellow sent most grateful messages to us for our care of his dear children.

"All our schoolroom children are making satisfactory progress in their lessons and needlework. At a recent Industrial Exhibition, held at St. James' Schoolroom, Ratcliff, they sent specimens of needlework, knitting, and two dolls dressed entirely by two of the elder girls, all of which elicited praise."

FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS.

One evening this summer the birds were singing me so many songs that I thought I ought to do something for them, so I got some hempseed, and strewed the window-sill with it; but the birds took no notice of it whatever.

Next morning bread-crumbs were added to the seed, but still the birds refused to come. The following day, however, I saw a little sparrow hopping very near. He hung his head on one side, then quickly changed it to the other, and gave a little chirp, and went hop, hop, hop (now he is coming!). But, no; a door banged, and off he flew.

Another chirp, hop, hop, hop (oh, you wise little bird! are you coming?), a soft flutter of wings, another hop, and chirp, and away the sparrow goes with a large crumb. Of course, having fared so well, the little fellow came again, and, better still, brought some of his friends with him, which was exactly what I wanted. One of these friends was a chaffinch, a pretty bird who seemed to be troubled with very little shyness. He dropped on the window-sill very gently, and went off with five seeds tucked safely down his long bill.

I stayed to watch him, for he came again and again, and grew very tame, so I put all the hempseed on the table and drew it close to the window, and wondered if he would trust me, and come straight in. And he did, just walked right in and carried off what he wanted, and then I heard him singing away on the roof. I thought I would test him further, so I put the hempseed in all sorts of places in my room, and wherever I put it he found it. Do you think I was sorry? No; it was just what I liked. I wanted the birds to trust me, and come and take what they needed.

One morning early, I was awakened by a great chorus of bird-singing outside the window, and I found that my guests had come to breakfast and found nothing ready. I was determined that they should not be disappointed again, and that same night when it was quite dark I opened the window and laid a good meal for them, and like wise birds they came and took it.

And then, shall I tell you what I thought That the Lord Jesus had been doing for me what I had been doing for the little birds, only far, far more. He had come into this dark, cold world, and died. He gave up his own life that we might be saved. He came to prepare salvation (Luke ii. 30, 31), and He had to give up everything to do it (2 Cor. viii. 9; Phil. ii. 7, 8); and, having finished (John xix. 30) our salvation, He just waits now for us to come and take it. Whosoever will, let him come and take (Rev. xxii. 17). How foolish it would be if a little hungry bird saw some food and did not gladly take it. And then, are we not foolish too? We need salvation, and the Lord Jesus has provided it for us. Shall we not go to Him and say, "Lord Jesus, I will trust Thee; I will take what Thou dost offer to me?"

"Lord, I have invited all,
And I shall
Still invite, still call to Thee:
For it seems but just and right
In my sight
Where is all, there all should be."

CHILDREN'S EVANGELISTIC SERVICES.—During the past week Mr. Thomas Eyres, who has been labouring in Derry and Antrim, held a series of services in connection with Aghadowey Presbyterian Church. The attendance was good. The young people seemed to value the services, many since Mr. Eyres' departure having testified to the benefit they have derived.

DYING LEAVES.

Is their glory departing and dying,
The beautiful trees?
Is their requiem mournfully sighing
In winterly breeze?
The glow and the greenness of summer have passed away,
The fluttering leaves underneath our feet to-day
Withered are lying;
The sunshine is over and past;
Fast, very fast,
They are dying, dying!

Yet still, though it sorely may grieve us
To see them expire,
Like the prophet Elijah they leave us
In chariot of fire;
Amber, and crimson, and purple, and radiant gold,
Did Spring in her tenderest beauty ever unfold,
When swallows were flying,
Such flaming and regal array
As shineth to-day—
Now the leaves are all dying!

When fruit caught its beautiful tinting
From midsummer heat,
And his glory the sun was imprinting
On ripening wheat,
Crimson, and purple, and russet, and gold were there;
Scattered in lavish abundance, enough and to spare,
Our tables supplying;
But were apples and harvest sheaves
So bright as these leaves?
Now they're dying, dying!

So may I, in my spring-time, be growing
A beautiful tree,
Much fruit may my summer be showing
To glorify Thee.
Service, and love, and obedience, faith and prayer,
But the ripest and richest glory may autumn share,
When I stand
On the border-land
Of the home where so many dear ones have entered in,
Where the blood-bought robe is never defiled by sin,
Where sorrow, and crying,
And pain shall have passed away
In eternal day,
Where there's no more dying.

Lucy Taylor.

"IN THE TIME OF JESUS."—Messrs. Kingsley & Co., 49, Bedford-street, W.C., offer to preachers and teachers, at the expense of the translator, these very useful historical studies by Dr. Siedel, of Berlin University, post free for 1s. 6d. The published price is 3s. 6d. We advise our readers to take advantage of this offer.

THE NEW CUT.—Tuesday, October 20, was a red-letter day at the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New Cut. About twenty years ago, a young man was converted to God, and through his instrumentality his father and brothers were led to Christ. In 1876 the brothers Young, their aged father, and two other brethren, commenced the above mission. Through God's abundant blessing the numbers increased beyond the capacity of their premises, and they were obliged to enlarge. In the providence of God, and in answer to prayer, the lease was secured, and on Tuesday of last week a happy and enthusiastic gathering celebrated the opening of a new and larger mission hall. Mr. F. A. Bevan, whose cordial help and encouragement had largely contributed to the desired end, was called to the chair, and several gentlemen gave gratulatory addresses. The cost of the improvements has been £1000, of which £600 has been obtained, £200 having been contibuted by the people themselves—a most creditable fact; £50 each from Mr. Bevan and Mr. T. A. Denny reduces the deficiency to £300. Certainly they should be helped who thus help themselves. Mr. Spurgeon is the president, and, in the words of the Report, there is every prospect of "an abundant harvest from among the lost and godless masses who toil, and live, and die, in this dark neighbourhood of the New Cut."

Valuable Work of Reference for Preachers, Teachers, &c.

"IN THE TIME OF JESUS."

Historical Pictures of the state of the World when Jesus lived.

"Under this modest title is veiled a most able and valuable book. The object of the writer is to furnish ministers and students with those historical settings of our Lord's life, without which much of his teaching cannot be rightly understood or vigorously expounded. Specially noteworthy is the concise but terribly suggestive chapter on "The state of Morals among the Heathen:" also the interesting chapters on "Religious Life and Religious Parties among the Jews." A careful reading of "Judaism in the Dispersion' would, we fancy, correct many crude notions as to the present state and future destiny of the chosen people. Students will profit by, and all thoughtful Christians enjoy, Dr. Seidel's little book.'—The Christian.

By request of the Author, the Publishers will send a copy of the above Work to any Preacher, or Christian Worker, for 1s. 6d., in Postal Order.

Notes and Comments.

VARIOUS correspondents have suggested to us that a penny subscription towards the Stead Defence Fund should be set on foot by the mothers and maidens of England, on whose behalf such noble service has been rendered. We heartily approve of the idea. We could not ourselves undertake to receive and acknowledge such small sums; but, if some responsible person, in each town, will act as treasurer and remit us the total amount collected, we will gladly acknowledge all and forward them to the proper quarter.

At least one good and sensible resolution has recently been passed in Ireland :—

> "At a meeting of the Workmen's Club, in York-street, Dublin, on Sunday, the resolution was passed unanimously calling upon all truepatriotic Irishmen to boycott public-houses, and to put into practical effect the suggestion of Michael Davitt at a late meeting at Limerick, to keep the five-and-half millions of taxes on drink sent over to the English Exchequer, at home, and turn it into some useful industry that will not degrade and demoralise its supporters."

The best way, as it seems to us, to commemorate events that convulsed Protestantism in Europe, especially France, 200 years ago, is to give a hearty and generous support to all the evangelical and evangelistic agencies now at work in that country. Among these the Paris (Belleville) Mission, conducted by Miss de Broen, holds a most honourable place. We learn with regret that it is at present in great need of funds to sustain its invaluable operations in Gospel and medical effort among the poor. Perhaps some of those who have not yet taken any part in commemorating the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, will do so in a very practical way by coming to the help of Miss de Broen and her fellow labourers, in their uphill but glorious fight.

The following extract from the letter of the London correspondent of the The Scottish Typographical Circular has been sent us by one of our readers :—

> "I have often heard the opinion expressed that no respectable printer would undertake such work [as the printing of indecent literature]. Judge of my surprise when I tell you that I am credibly informed that a firm, whose chief support is derived from religious bodies, and who do a large trade in sermons and pious tracts, have been considerable sinners in this respect. The house in question has over fifty apprentices, many of whom were recommended and articled by its pious patrons, and, in order to keep these boys going during a period of slackness, they supplemented their religious work by printing 'The Singed Moth,' 'The Scorched Wren,' and other literature of a similar character, which was duly retailed to little boys and girls at a penny a copy. Not long since the same firm had a work of a very coarse nature in the house, and the proprietor, with great delicacy of feeling, requested the overseer not to give it to the boys, but to the men, to compose. But here an insuperable difficulty arose, for there were no men to give it to, this being one of the houses alluded to in my last letter as employing men only as 'clickers.' Of course the virtuous proprietor could not be expected to know anything of the details of his own office, and was, I suppose, much shocked. He eventually, however, soothed his conscience by telling his factotum to give it to the elder lads, and have it done in a separate room. (Religious papers, please copy.)"

The publication in English of a translation of the life of the German ecstatica, Sister Emmerich, forcibly illustrates the steadiness with which Roman Catholic writers persist in treating from a theological standpoint subjects belonging to the province of physiology and medicine. Any person familiar with the visions of Marie Alacoque and her circle will have little difficulty in assigning the so-called miraculous element in Sister Emmerich's life to the proper sphere; but a nineteenth century reviewer who, in the pages of a leading Roman Catholic magazine, briefly notices the singular volume, alludes to the new saint as "one of the chosen few who have had the unspeakable privilege of bearing on their body the wounds of their Lord and Master." Not satisfied with this plain-spoken assertion, he goes on to say :—

> "She shared with her Lord not only his sacred wounds, but his task of expiation, and endured voluntarily and with joy the most agonising bodily and mental sufferings in expiation of the sins committed in various parts of the world, and to obtain graces for sinners and avert from them the punishment they had merited."

It is but fair to the reviewer to say that the italics are ours, that writer apparently having seen nothing extraordinary in the astounding claim. The remarkable assertion has one merit, and perhaps only one—it is clear and unmistakable, unlike many utterances of the kind, well calculated to mystify and to leave a loop-hole of escape for the casuist, if objected to. How refreshing it is to turn from so shameless an attempt to discount the finished work of Christ, to the simple and equally unmistakable words of an inspired writer :—"Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which He shed on us abundantly, through Jesus Christ our Saviour."

At a Convocation in the North of Ireland a few days ago, a clergyman said :—

> "Whisky would be drunk as long as men lived in Ireland, and he thought the greatest boon they could confer on them was to see that, if they did drink whisky, it should be good stuff. . . . One of the greatest blessings they could confer upon the public would be to see that they got the genuine article."

Those who know Ireland best will be disposed to believe that it would be a still greater blessing if the people would leave whisky alone. Quite recently one of the most popular Irish agitators gave public expression to the unpopular opinion that in abstinence from intoxicating drinks and tobacco the remedy would be found for much of the poverty in the sister island.

It is a matter for thankfulness that Great Britain no longer holds the unenviable position of being ahead of all other nations in the consumption of intoxicating liquors. Denmark, it would appear, is the country in which the comparative consumption of spirits is largest; the drink bill representing 1876 glasses per annum, or nearly five glasses per day for every person over 20 years of age in the kingdom. Of course, the usual and inevitable results follow this state of things: thirty per cent. of the pauperism, three-fourths of the crime, and a fifth of the lunacy, are directly traceable to indulgence in drink. In other European countries a similar startling condition of things obtains; crime, vice, and insanity follow closely upon the heels of drink, yet there are people who persist in refusing to recognise the close relationship between the cause and the effect.

The "Theosophical Society," if they find it difficult, as doubtless they do, to define their singularly vaporous creed, ought gladly to avail themselves of the concise definition of Neo-Buddhism recently made use of by a clear-headed opponent, "despair organised and reduced to a system." Colonel Olcott's followers certainly are in a somewhat cheerless position, for they substitute a blind necessity for an Intelligent and Divine Will, and they are in a hopeless muddle with regard to good and evil. As if this were not sufficient, they have very little idea where they come from, and still less as to whither they are going, for nobody among them seems able to define their "true Nirvana." Yet, hopeless as their prospect is, if indeed they have any prospect, it is all they can offer in place of "the peace which passeth all understanding," the light burden and easy yoke of the Divine Master.

To prefer a misty theosophy to the simple Gospel is to choose the region of fog and malaria in preference to the life-giving breezes of the mountain-top. Clever as the theosophists may be, it would be better for them if they had less learning and more of that simplicity which they deem to be childish, rather than childlike, and without which no one can see the kingdom of heaven.

The preface to a modern work of fiction contains these remarkable words written and published before recent events had cast so lurid a light upon the question to which they refer. If all our novelists took such lofty ground, this class of literature would be much less objectionable than, unfortunately, many recent examples of it are :—

> "What the creed of peace is to the State, the creed of purity is to the social community. So long as carnal indulgence is recognised as a masculine prerogative, so long as personal chastity is a supreme factor in the lives of women, but a mere accident in the lives of men, so long as the diabolic ingenuity of a strong sex is tortured to devise legal means for sacrificing a weaker sex, so long, in a word, as our homes and our streets remain what they are, the creed of purity must remain as forlorn a dream as that other creed of peace."

Thank God, the cloud has lifted a little during the past few months, and the legal means have been lessened somewhat.

The National Society for Women's Suffrage has issued an appeal to the electors, in which it is truly said that "The exclusion of women is at the present moment more anomalous than it has ever been before. Through the operation of the service franchise, there will be many instances in which the servant will have a vote in respect of a house of which the rent and rates are paid by his employer, whilst this employer, if a woman, will be excluded. A felon, as soon as he comes out of prison, will have a vote, while a woman whose whole life has been spent in doing good will be excluded. One more instance: A great deal has been heard lately of the traffic in young girls for immoral purposes. The monsters who are guilty of worse than murder will have votes, while the devoted women who truly deserve to be reckoned among 'the noble army of martyrs,' on account of their ceaseless conflict with vice and its consequences, will be excluded. In those social questions, which are now coming to the front, such as Temperance, the housing of the poor, and the protection of girls, women have for years been doing work which ought to give them some claim to consideration, when they ask that they, too, should be admitted to the ranks of citizenship."

"We appeal, therefore, to the electors to put an end to the unjust exclusion of women from representation. Let each man who loves justice and fair play resolve not to let a day pass between this and the general election without helping us. Let him question his candidates and make them feel that the constituencies earnestly desire justice in this matter. This is no party question, but a question of simple justice. But merely passive sympathy will not suffice to secure justice. Such an active expression of sympathy is needed as will rouse the attention of candidates and convince them that votes depend on justice being done."

A lady of position and property, anxious about her neighbours, provided religious services for them. She was very deaf—could scarcely hear at all. On one occasion one of her preachers managed to make her understand him, and at the close of their conversation asked, "But what part do you take in the work?" "Oh," she replied, "I smile them in, and I smile them out!" Very soon the preacher saw the result of her generous, loving sympathy in a multitude of broad-shouldered, hard-fisted men, who entered the place of worship, as delighted to get a smile from her as she used to stand in the doorway to receive them. Why do not the working classes attend the house of God? They would, in greater numbers, if self-denying, Christ-loving Christians would smile them in, and smile them out.

Although we utterly differ from the conclusion that "Confession and Absolution" are taught in the Bible, we are not sorry to see a book, with attempted proof thereof, sent out by Rev. Warwick Elwin (Hayes, Publisher). It will be good for all men when ecclesiastical controversies are brought to the touchstone of Scripture. This was never so desirable as at the present hour. Such a dogma as that of priestly absolution has long been defended from usage and tradition. When sacerdotalists go to the Bible for proof, people will be in a far better position to form a judgment as to the authority of these priestly assumptions.

On the division and tabulating of sins as "mortal" and "venial," for which Mr. Elwin pleads (1 John v. 16), even a High-church reviewer intimates in The Guardian that what St. John speaks of is a sin tending unto death, or a special course of conduct which, if persisted in, will issue in separation from the source of life. And in the comment of Mr. Elwin on the remission of sins (John xx. 19—23) the reviewer reminds him that theologians, from the early times to the present, have referred our Lord's language to the twelve to whom he was speaking, that it merely announces a pardon conferred by God, and refers to the blessed results of that preaching of the Gospel to which Apostles were commissioned by the risen Christ.

Disestablishment and Disendowment have been the subjects of daily letters, during the last week or more, from distinguished writers in The Times. The Guardian thus vigorously sums up the arguments for Disendowment :—

"The Church will be more free; it will no longer be mixed up with sordid money matters and unpopular payments; it will no longer have the discredit of State control; the rights of the laity will come up, and a blow will be struck at clericalism. With all our machinery shattered and ruined, we shall be thrown more on individual energy and spontaneous originality of effort. Our new poverty will spur us into zeal. Above all, the Church will be delivered from the temptation, incident to wealth, of sticking to abuses for the sake of gold, of shrinking from principle, and justice, and enthusiasm, out of fear of worldly loss. It will no longer be a place for drones and hirelings."

Complaint has been made that at the late Church Congress some readers of papers were not heard, and that many of the clergy do not speak intelligibly, or even audibly. The same defect is observable in others than Episcopalians. An eminent Nonconformist was lately complained of as speaking in such long and involved sentences that, in trying to make out what they meant, all profit was hindered. Some time ago we heard, or rather saw, Dean Burgon reading the lessons in Chichester Cathedral. No one near us understood a sentence, or even knew where the lesson was, and our place was not far from the reading-desk. When Ezra and the Levites read the Scriptures, it is recorded that it was done "distinctly," and the "people were attentive" because "they understood." The profit of multitudes is concerned in this matter.

The subject of "Free Education" is likely to play an important part in the election which is at hand. Without taking a side on the question, Mr. Mundella's words, last week at Sheffield, must be held to be valuable, coming as they do from one who all his life has had experience on the matter, and is an ex-Minister of Education. School fees, he said, were one of the greatest causes of irregular attendance; one-fourth of the children who should be taught were absent every day; the honest man out of work was the greatest sufferer; and the most needy children were turned away because they came empty-handed. It is to be hoped that this great question may be severed from party politics, and there are happy auguries of this. Whatever increases attendance, and simplifies a great national undertaking, deserves candid consideration.

Dear Sir,—I am obliged to you for the copy of The Christian with which you have favoured me this morning. I am glad also that you have honoured me by quoting part of my discourse upon the Bible. I am more and more persuaded that what the Church wants and what the world needs is a deeper interest in the Word of God. The reading of the Bible is, as a rule, perfunctory and superficial, and not until it is read continuously, so as to secure the sense which pervades the whole literary structure, will the deepest Christian life be consolidated and perfected in any country. Amid all the outcry for systematic theology and the study of science and the reply to modern thought, I am perfectly certain that we occupy the right ground in earnestly desiring that the Bible should be allowed to speak for itself in its own tongue and in its own way. To my mind, preaching is only worthy of its institution in proportion to the degree in which it magnifies the Sacred Scriptures.

Thanking you for assisting me to make this doctrine still more widely known,

I am, truly yours, Joseph Parker.

"A True Patriot," eighty-seven years of age, writes :—"'Prayer moves the hand that moves the world' (see 1 Tim. ii. 1—3; Zeph. ii. 3). No true patriot will at the present crisis refuse to lift up heart and voice to Him who has all power in heaven and on earth, that He would influence the hearts of truly wise and good men to undertake the solemn responsibility of representing our country in Parliament; and the minds of the electors to choose men who fear God and desire to do his will.

"Those who, from the Scriptures, compared with the signs of the times, see much trial approaching, should meet together by twos and threes, or more, according to circumstances, to offer their united supplications. I have set apart the hour from twelve to one o'clock, inviting the few well known to me as praying people who see the necessity, to meet in my small room one morning in the week, earnestly desiring that the example may be followed, certain that the blessing desired of the Lord will descend on the country through faithful and earnest prayer."

A meeting will be held in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Thursday, November 12, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., for prayer and supplication,

"That God will so overrule events at this critical time in the history of our nation, that only such men as base their public life upon the sanctity and purity of the home may be sent to Parliament; also that a higher tone of morality may prevail amongst all classes."

The meetings will be open to the general public, but Christian women are specially called upon to manifest by their presence their conviction that the sacredness of family life must have the first consideration from all who aspire to be honoured with public confidence. Several well-known ladies connected with Christian work will take part in the meetings. Communications and suggestions on the subject of the meeting to be addressed to Miss Mason, House of Rest, Kilburn, N.W.

We are hearing of bad results from Registry Offices. Some of them knowingly cater for evil purposes. But, where this is not the case, sufficient care is seldom taken to secure young women who apply for situations from being engaged by immoral people. All Christian missions might well add to their other agencies a registry office, in which the character of those who require governesses, assistants, or servants, should be known, as well as the character of those who apply for situations.

We shall be delighted to receive from any of the churches intelligence of the work of God. The blessing attending the ministry of Mr. Jones at Maindee, Mon., noted in the brief article on "A Thriving Church," must be encouraging to all who desire the evangelisation of our own land, as a means to the evangelisation of the world.

Mr. Lee Warner, a high-minded Churchman, writes from Rugby to a contemporary, embodying an opinion that wins favour with a small, but not uninfluential body, of literary persons. They would have, instead of Disestablishment, what they term a comprehensive Church. Into Westminster Abbey, or St. Paul's Cathedral, they would gather the crowds, to be addressed alternately by such men as the Bishop of London and Dr. Dale, the Congregationalist. In the parish churches the preachers might be Mr. Arch, the Primitive Methodist, or Mr. Stubbs, the Broad Churchman, or Canon Liddon, the High Churchman. The determining thing must be whom "the villagers will listen to," which is wide enough. How sensible men can think that such a latitudinarian Church could advance true Christianity in the land is incomprehensible.

POPE LEO has taken up his favourite autumn amusement, lark-catching in the Vatican gardens. But, according to a description given by the correspondent of The Indépendance Belge, this sport seems a strangely cruel pastime for the infallible head of a Christian Church, and might well rouse the ire of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Numbers of fine singing larks are blinded with a red-hot needle, and concealed in cages in a fine laurel grove, where flocks of larks fly across from seaward during their autumn migrations. The blind songsters decoy their fellows by their loud strains, and nets are then deftly dropped over the unlucky birds attracted. His Holiness gets very angry with any awkward attendant who fails to drop the net at the critical moment, and himself often extricates the birds, and kills them in the approved fashion, by crushing their heads between thumb and finger.—Graphic.

We have lately been congratulating ourselves on the great advances made in ameliorating the condition of the toiling masses, since the days when Lord Ashley began to advocate their claims before a reluctant and unsympathetic House of Commons. There is good reason for rejoicing at what has been accomplished, but the work is not done. Mr. Ellis Lever, of Bowdon, has been drawing attention in the public journals to the abuses that still exist in connection with the employment of female labour at colleries. He quotes as follows from The Mining Journal:—

> "Those who have visited the mines in the County Palatine must have been greatly surprised at the appearance of the females on the banks of the pits, for they cannot easily be distinguished from the males who work along with them. There is little or no distinction in the attire of the two sexes, and when they return from work with their blackened faces and male attire they are certainly no credit to their employers, the sex, or even the class they belong to. It is true that a similar state of things prevails in the mines of Belgium, in some of which young women even work underground. There are some things which may be worthy of copying from our Continental neighbours, but we certainly believe that we should do well to allow Belgium the monopoly of female labour at and in the mines."

Mr. Lever's own testimony is still more specific and conclusive :—

> "In colliery districts where females are not allowed to work at the pits the men themselves are of a superior type. Their homes are made attractive, and their children well trained. But wherever women and girls are permitted or compelled to engage in this laborious, dirty, and unwomanly work, there you will find the greatest amount of brutality, obscenity, squalor, wretchedness, and vice. As in the early years of the reign of Her Majesty the employment of females underground was prohibited, so let us hope that the jubilee year of this benificent reign may be signalised by the liberation of these custom-enslaved women from their hideous yoke."

The Christian and humane sentiment of the nation will uphold Mr. Lever in his earnest and much-needed crusade.

ELISHA AT DOTHAN.

TRUTH OR CASUISTRY ?

DEAR SIR, — In the course of the International Series of Sunday-school Lessons, on a recent occasion, a somewhat difficult question arose in connection with Elisha at Dothan (2 Kings vi. 8—22). When the Syrians compassed Dothan, Elisha tells them, after they had been temporarily struck blind, "This is not the way, neither is this the city; follow me, and I will bring you to the man whom ye seek." The Authorised Version adds, "But he led them to Samaria;" the Revised Version "And he led them to Samaria." The general impression is that Elisha practised a threefold deception, telling the Syrians that they were wrong about the way, the city, and the man; and many commentators lend the weight of their opinion to justify this view, explaining that the "stratagem" was excusable in war to save his life!

It would be interesting to know how Sunday-school teachers met this difficulty, or if in many cases it was discreetly avoided. If, next week, you will devote a little space to concise explanations of the passage by teachers, I will ask leave to give the reconciliation of the difficulties that was suggested in the Teachers' Preparation Class, which is held here every Wednesday, at 8 p.m., for ladies and gentlemen.—Yours truly, ROBERT BURN.

THE AMERICAN MISSIONS IN SYRIA, begun in 1821, have established native churches at Beirut, Sidon, Hurus, and other places, with a membership of about 1200. The whole Protestant community numbers about 4000, and much school work has been done. Connected with the missions are 151 schools, with 6000 pupils. Great use has been made of the Press, more than 19,000,000 pages being issued last year; the Arabic Bible, translated by the missionaries, must take a foremost place in Arabic literature.

SAVED FROM SUICIDE.

ONE dark night this summer a woman, with a loaded revolver in her hand, was pacing up and down the lakeside, close to a town in Switzerland. The midnight darkness around was not more deep and drear than the despair which filled her soul. Again and again she tried to summon courage to fire the fatal shot; but again and again an invisible hand seemed to stay the hand of the would-be suicide.

God was answering prayer. In an upper room in the neighbouring town, all through that night another woman was upon her knees pleading for the salvation of that poor sin-crushed soul who was thus trembling upon the border of the abyss. She had come forward in the meeting that evening under the deepest conviction, and this officer had spoken to her, but she had failed to find peace. There was evidently something awful upon her mind, which she felt she ought to confess, but she resisted, and at the close left with a look of despair. But our sister's heart felt drawn out in agonising prayer for her in such a remarkable manner that she could not think of sleep, but pleaded, hour after hour, until she received the witness of the Spirit that her prayer was answered.

Little did she realise why the spirit of prayer had thus come upon her, and that out in the dark night yonder, the devil, seeing his prey about to escape him, was urging her to suicide.

But the Prince of Darkness was defeated by the power of prayer, and, as the watcher rose from her knees, the poor lost creature stole back into the town, resolved to confess all and commit her sin-stained soul to the Saviour whose wondrous love she had heard in that meeting.

Having found the officer's lodgings, she told her all with tears of deepest contrition. "I am a murderer," said she. Then she went on to tell how that in her native town in another country, years ago, she had committed the awful crime. A young man had asked her to marry him; but, her mother having for a long time opposed and prevented their union, he suggested to her one day that she should put poison in her mother's food. She consented, and he procured her the poison. The sight of her mother's dying agonies and the thought of her guilt, were so dreadful that she fainted away. After the funeral she left home, the mental torture became so great that she attempted to commit suicide by discharging a revolver in her mouth. The wound was not fatal, though one of her eyes was destroyed, and she lay long in the hospital in the greatest agony of body and soul.

She had refused to marry the young man, thinking (being a Catholic) that this might in some way atone for her crime; but its awful memory haunted her, day and night, from place to place, for years, until, passing through the town of ——, she was attracted by curiosity into our hall. There, in the light of the Spirit, she realised that there were pardon and peace, even for her; but, in that light, the awfulness of her deed came also before her as never before, and she saw that she must confess it. But death seemed preferable. Then followed that awful night in which she went again to destroy herself; but the invisible hand had brought her back from the shadow of death, and now, as she cried to God, acknowledging her sin, the Salvation Sister of Mercy pointed her to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world, and her soul found peace in believing.

When her father received her letter of confession, he came a long journey by rail to see her. He refused to believe the story of her crime, saying she had been "hallucinée" by the Salvation Army. He took her to ——, hoping that the change would drive away the "mania." In the train her heart became so filled with gratitude to God for his pardoning love and for having allowed her to see her father again, that she fell upon her knees in the carriage and prayed, and praised God aloud. Her father tried angrily to make her rise, saying that this was all "hallucination," but she continued to praise God out of a full heart, and to pray for her father.

Three months have passed during which she has been a bright rejoicing Christian. She is in a good situation, and I have heard to-day from the officer of the corps that she has been remarkably used of God in a rescue case within the past few days. A. S. CLIBBORN.

DEACON ABRAHAM.

THIS Nestorian brother, who has been sojourning in our midst for some time, purposes returning to Persia, and to his loved work, at the end of November. During his stay in this country God has opened a way for him to the hearts and sympathies of many Christian friends, for which he desires to express his grateful thanks.

The Deacon would be glad, we doubt not, if some well-wishers were to arrange farewell gatherings, at which he and his son could be commended to God, in view of his important work among his own people. We understand that a friend is presenting the Deacon with a magic lantern; if any others interested in his mission could furnish him with Scriptural and other good slides, it would be a great help in enabling him to gain an entrance among the Mohammedans.

Deacon Abraham will be accompanied on his homeward journey by Joseph Jacob, who has for some time been pursuing his studies in England, and who is now returning to labour in Persia. Some help is needed to make up the needful expenses of his journey, and would be thankfully received by Mr. R. Williams, 23, Alfred-place, Bedford-square, W.C.

A THRIVING CHURCH.

REV. ALFRED JONES, of Maindee, near Newport, Mon., was some years ago, when a youth in his teens, led to Christ through the instrumentality of Mr. Opie Rodway. He soon began to speak of the salvation he had found, and other souls were saved. He was subsequently invited for the opening services at a new Baptist chapel, at Maindee, with such good results that he was asked to become their minister. He objected that he had never been educated or trained for the ministry; the people, however, were content and anxious that he should remain with them, and for the seven years since then he has never passed a month without conversions, and has baptized in every month, except eight, since 1878.

The writer has had gratifying proof of Mr. Jones's gift as an evangelist, and of the power accompanying his preaching, in some young people led to Christ and continuing stedfast until now, who were the fruits of a very brief visit to Wood-green many months ago.

Mr. Jones's chapel is now too small for the increasing congregation, and is in process of enlargement at a cost of £1000. It will give me great pleasure if this brief notice should lead any to contribute to this necessary extension, which I am sure will be carried out as inexpensively as possible.

YOUNG WOMEN IN LONDON.

THE Y.W.C.A. is evidently determined to do its utmost in caring for the thousands of maidens in this great city, of whose perils and trials we have lately heard so much. They have impressed into the service Lord Mayor Fowler and his daughter, at whose invitation a social gathering took place within the lordly precincts of the Mansion House last week. Besides a large muster of ladies and gentlemen interested in the work, quite a number of young people, the clients of the Association, were present, and appeared to appreciate the solicitude shown on their account.

The meeting was convened specially in connection with the institute at Finsbury, where larger premises are sorely needed. A general expansion of the work throughout London, however, was warmly advocated by the speakers. The Lord Mayor thought the Association claimed the heartiest support of the Christian public because it is training young women for varied branches of work in poor neighbourhoods, such as Sunday-school teaching, visitation, and so forth. Canon Leigh mourned the decease of Lord Shaftesbury, who had ever showed such a deep personal interest in the welfare of young women. He expatiated on the pitiable and dangerous position of young women who are "alone in London," and said, that if those ladies reared in the lap of luxury could but change places with their lowly sisters for a time, they would understand their difficulties. Mr. D. Marshall Lang said he could not understand how so much work had been done in the past for so little money; the whole of the subscriptions last year did not amount to £2500. We hear of immense sums being given for work among young men at such places as Exeter Hall, the Polytechnic, &c., surely work for young women is equally needed and ought to be as generously supported.

This thought was further expanded in a genial, telling speech by Dr. Donald Fraser, who was severely sarcastic on the way in which young men had been provided with institutes, and preached at, and lectured, and soireed, and harangued, and generally coddled, as if they were all creation, and as if there were not as many girls in the world as boys, and as many young women as young men, if not more. It was high time the balance was redressed and the young women got a share in the Christian love and sympathy and help so lavishly bestowed on the other sex. As to the thousands of young women employed in the City, of course the rich merchants would see to it that they were helped as far as possible to do right and keep right, amid the dangers and temptations that beset their path. At the same time young women must be taught that these outward helps, invaluable as they are, will not avail to preserve them safe and pure, unless the citadel of the heart is in the keeping of Jesus Christ. Mention was made during the evening of the good work that is being done through the visitation of young women at restaurants and public refreshment bars. In a brief but earnest address, Mrs. Hind Smith gave some details of the latest branch of effort engrafted on its operations by the Association, the meeting at railway termini, of young women arriving in London, and providing temporary accommodation to those who are in need of it. Mrs. Smith said that many cases had already been met with where the need of this was manifested, and she strongly urged that all young women coming up to London from the provinces should previously be placed in communication with the secretary, at the Central Institute, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W. Mr. George Williams, Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, and Mr. W. T. Paton, also spoke.

It was stated that some £20,000 are urgently needed for the vigorous support during the coming winter of the work in its varied departments, and for the planting of new branches in districts where they are much wanted. We are certain the money could not be more profitably spent, and we sincerely hope it will be forthcoming.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

[Contributions to these Notes will be welcomed from any quarter; specially of evanglistic work in any of the churches.]

MR. AND MRS. WIGGAN have just closed their fourth summer of successful tent services near Queen's-park, London, W.

MR. DENHAM SMITH returns to London this month. During November he will preach at Clapton, and December and following winter months at St. George's Hall.

ILKLEY, YORKS.—A Convention for the deepening of Spiritual life will be held at Craigland's Hydropathic Establishment, December 1 to 3. The conveners are Mr. H. F. Bowker and Rev. A. C. Downer, Vicarage, Ilkley.

IRELAND.—The social purity movement has lately received a considerable impetus in Dublin and Belfast, where vigilance committees have been formed. An earnest spirit of prayer is shown every Monday at the noon meeting in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin.

ROTHESAY, N.B.—A successful four weeks' mission has been held in the High-street Free Church. The Town Missionary, and Mr. S. Steven, evangelist, with others, addressed the meetings. There is reason to believe that saint and sinner have alike profited.

NEW BECKTON.—The Gospel mission, commenced here as a Sunday-school by a resident, is "a light in a dark place." Believing prayer, earnest service, and personal dealing with souls have been so blessed that all interested in the work are compelled to cry, "What hath God wrought?"

WALSALL.—A sixteen days' mission, conducted by Mr. George Hefford, has been concluded here, and has proved a time of great blessing. A band of workers, by their singing and invitations in the surrounding streets, gathered in many of the class most difficult to reach. These, having heard for themselves, became missionaries, and brought in others.

BRECON, SOUTH WALES.—Constant evangelistic work is carried on in connection with the Y.M.C.A. here. Open-air meetings are held in a district where many reside, who do not attend any place of worship. The lodging-houses of the tramps are visited, and the inmates eagerly read the religious periodicals and papers left. Many thousands of tracts have been distributed. Already good results have appeared.

UNION HALL MISSION.—A further new effort has just been made by the workers of this mission, by the opening of a Gospel Hall in the town of Brentford. Mr. Bilke (the director of the mission), Mr. F. C. Bland, Mr. Charles S. Thorpe (of the Rescue Society, and Major Michael, from Hounslow, gave addresses. Prayer is desired for this new effort; also that the needs of the winter work may be supplied. Mr. Bilke's address is 18, Greenhill-park Villas, Harlesden, N.W.

ELGIN, N.B.—A very successful fortnight's meetings have lately been held here by Mr. Richard Hill, of Melrose. The meetings were arranged for by the Evangelistic Association, who have had such meetings once or twice a year for some years back. The committee made rather a happy hit in taking the New Town Hall, which was opened on the Friday previous, for the Sabbath evening meeting. During the mission a good number professed to trust in Christ for "pardon, peace and power."

MISS HAMOND AND HON. LADY SEBRIGHT purpose starting on a driving evangelistic tour on November 6, from Windsor to Bath. They will be very glad to hear of any openings by the way for Gospel services, or of any Christian friends who would offer hospitality to them and their horses on the road. They will be for three or four weeks at Bath, and would be glad to do any work for the Master in that town that would be suitable for them either in Gospel or Gospel Temperance Meetings. Address, Hon. Lady Sebright, Weybourne, Holt, Norfolk.

SOUTH LONDON.—On Tuesday, October 20, a very interesting meeting was held at Hawkstone Hall, Westminster Bridge-road, in connection with the open-air preaching that for twenty-nine years has been carried on continuously at Surrey Chapel and Christ Church. Mr. Benson, the evangelist, reported that since April 198 outdoor meetings have been held, with an estimated attendance of over 30,000. Rev. Newman Hall and Rev. H. Grainger frequently take part, but working men chiefly occupy the stand as preacher. The results have been very cheering; not only have many Temperance pledges been taken, but many won for Christ. In the crowded room last week, numbers rose up and testified to having been led to decision by these meetings.

THE CHURCH ARMY IN LONDON.—Sir,—May I request the earnest prayers of your readers for God's blessing on a ten days' mission which Rev. F. S. Webster, of the Church Army, and myself, are hoping to conduct from November 1 to 9, to reach the multitudes in this neighbourhood who attend no place of worship? There will be a preliminary prayer meeting for workers at Brunswick Chapel, on Saturday October 31, at 8 p.m., and daily services: Sundays, 8 30, 11, 3.30, and 7; week-days 11.30 and 8, from November 1 to 9 inclusive. There will be open-air processions before the evening services.—Yours faithfully,

15, Harewood-square, Edward W. Moore,
N.W. Incumbent, Brunswick Chapel.

THE GOSPEL SHIPS.—The Annie having completed a two months' mission work at Calais, sailed some weeks ago for Ramsgate, to help the brethren labouring in that port for a week or two. She was caught in a terrible gale, but the Lord delivered ship and crew, so that it received only a few pounds damage, whilst other vessels lay around dismasted and much injured, and some with the loss of some of the sailors. The Annie has at length arrived home for her usual winter's work. The Mystery has been for the last month at St. Malo, and not without blessing. Thankful letters have been received by me from two Christian brethren for the use of the vessel. Warm cuffs, comforters, old clothing, Bibles, Testaments, Gospel books, little bags 8 by 7, are much needed for the next four months of the winter. Henry Cook.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

It is said the various coffee-tavern companies pay dividends ranging from 4 to 15 per cent.

A great Temperance reception was to be given to Canon Farrar, on October 29, in New York.

In The Fortnightly Review Miss Mary A. Lewis strikingly illustrates the descent of the drink taint.

In a considerable portion of the United States the liquor traders rule the elections, and the results are disastrous.

Mr. S. Morley has laid the foundation-stone of a new Blue Ribbon Hall, in Forster-road, Tottenham.

New Zealand.—In a mission at Otago goldfields Mr. M. Burnett has induced 800 to sign the pledge and 900 to don the blue ribbon.

On October 16, about 500 members and friends of the National Temperance League were entertained at the Mansion House, London.

In connection with their Temperance Sunday, December 13, Wesleyans at various centres are arranging for important public meetings.

When the City of London Militia left Aldershot recently, 500 out of 1000, including many serjeants, were drunk. Their conduct was disgraceful.

American Schools.—The Women's Christian Temperance Union has procured compulsory temperance teaching in fourteen States of the Union.

The closing gathering of the recent American Centennial at Philadelphia was the most remarkable Temperance assemblage ever held in North America.

Rev. J. W. Horsley has no faith in short imprisonments for drunkards. The victims often shrink from leaving prison, fearing the power of the drink.

The students of Regent's Park College, London, N.W., are prepared to address Temperance meetings during the winter. Application to be made to the Secretary.

The New York Independent says pithily and pointedly:—"It is high time that government of the saloon, by the saloon, and for the saloon, should perish from the earth."

Prohibition is making sure and very rapid progress in Western Pennsylvania, and New York, and Northern Ohio. The increase is chiefly in the rural districts and hamlets.

The City Council of Ogden, Utah, have passed an ordinance fining any boy or girl, under the age of sixteen years, found on the streets after nine o'clock, p.m., without a written permit.

Georgia, U.S., rigidly enforces its law against selling liquor to inebriates. Half a dozen firms paid 50 dols. each, the other day, to a woman whose husband had purchased liquor on their premises.

Mr. Wm. Noble had a very enthusiastic reception at Dr. A. J. Gordon's church, in Boston, U.S., on October 5. Rev. Joseph Cook was present, and warmly welcomed Mr. Noble in the name of the Boston Temperance Workers.

Letters to the Editor.

ON DISESTABLISHMENT.

ir,—I am sure that "An Evangelical Clergy- n" will forgive me if I say that his remarks)n Disestablishment" are, unfortunately, too ch the result of his own distinctively private w of things. Thus the reorganisation of ruri- anal chapters, conferences, synods, and the rest he tells us, "a desire on the part of ecclesiastics mselves to stand well with the governing class the future." In the absence of any such avowal the part of those ecclesiastics, surely this is purely tuitous and highly speculative.

gain, he gives a few statistics which refer to attendance and to sacramental teaching in age churches. Clearly it is his own opinion that records. In a matter so important we should e the testimony, not of a limited experience, of indisputable figures gathered from all rters.

hen, too, the value which is attached to Estab- ment by some is made to depend on a privileged atus," "a certain kind of respectability," the ronage of the gentry, the middle and monied sses, and an assured "income" (although this is the result of Endowment and not of Estab- ment). Would not the generality of Churchmen udiate such an estimation? Disestablishment lf would alter none of this in the way of lessen- it. The status, the patronage, would remain ltered, for the associations and instincts of turies are not easily broken.

ut, even if all this were to be abolished, is it not ing too one-sided a view? Must not the nation large be considered? If, as Rev. W. Mann tham says, "it would be a gain to the Church Rome," "it would strike a blow at the Protes- t succession," and "be welcomed by all infidels, Secularists, and all sorts of men who wish to troy the Church because they hate religion." en Disestablishment becomes an extended ques- ı, and concerns not only Churchmen but Dis- ters and the whole nation.

t is no answer whatever to say that Christ's rch is founded on a rock, and that "the gates hell shall not prevail against it," true as the mise is. No one supposes that the security the Christian Church is affected either by ablishment or Disestablishment, but that does make the latter desirable. These are the s of religious toleration, but would any- wish them to give way to days of perse- ion? Or should we offer no protest or oppo- on, if immorality or infidelity threatened to uge the land? And yet, in any case, would the mise of Christ lose any of its truth or power? uld not rather the opposition be the evidence of h? What if some evil-disposed person sought derously to take away the character, or unlaw- y to appropriate the "temporalities" of "An angelical Clergyman," would he consider them rth defending, though he knows it is written, ear not, little flock, it is your Father's good asure to give you the kingdom"? I think he uld. And he cannot possibly be blinding him- to the fact that Disestablishment means Dis- owment as well. The Church might (even as does) fully believe Christ's promise, and if Dis- blishment is accomplished it will be her conso- on; but, in the meantime, she may naturally ect to be the occasion of a very obvious violation common morality. For it is not on principles of spel honesty that Disendowment can be justified.

here are other considerations, too. To establish Church is one thing, and to disestablish it is other. Many, unwilling to do the former, might just as unwilling to do the latter. The estab- ment of the Church of England has come rather the course of history than by any distinctly nan instrumentality. Some may see the Divine d in this; but, be that as it may, is it reversion advance when a nation publicly lays aside the ional acknowledgment of its religion, and a gion, too, that is inseparably interwoven with all history?

s not "An Evangelical Clergyman" a little im- ient and slightly disaffected with the prevalence distasteful doctrines? But Reformation surely he remedy for this, and, failing that, Disestab- ment and Disendowment are altogether wide of mark. "The best friends of religion are those o see that the Church needs reform, and not sestablishment, and who realise that in her ser- es there might be a glorious sphere for the per- nent preservation of the Christian faith" (W. an Statham).

We all would cordially re-echo his closing exhortation, "Let none, then, be moved in defence of what are well called 'the temporalities' of a Church; to dishonour, in the eyes of those around them, by the manifestation of party feeling, the name and cause of their Saviour Lord." But it is sadly strange to me, at least, that, while he thus exhorts the defenders, he has neither counsel nor caution for those "Christians" who are seeking to separate a Church from its lawful possessions, and divert money given to God and religion into purposes more or less secular. Yes, thank God, the Master is at hand, and not one jot or tittle of these things is unobserved. And, when He comes, all wrongs will be righted, and they shall bear the responsibility who set them wrong. In the meantime, may God give us all "a right judgment in all things." Another Evangelical Clergyman.

Dear Sir,—I read with pleasurable surprise an outspoken article on Disestablishment in last week's Christian by "An Evangelical Clergyman." I am sure that he must feel very much alone in this position, because the Evangelical body as a whole cling so tenaciously to the Establishment, as if it were the very essence of the being of the Church. I, too, am a clergyman, and one of those who still glory in the names Evangelical and Protestant; and I would like the writer of that article to feel that he has at least one brother who sees with him on the subject, and believes most fully that God can take care of his own Church without the help of the State.

That the majority of the English clergy should fear for the future in the face of Disestablishment, I do not wonder, when the sacred office is to so many merely a profession. And, were it not for the emoluments and the position in society which it affords them, many would never dream of entering it. I can understand such as these dreading the result. But I am perplexed that the few who yet believe and glory in the old-fashioned Gospel, and set it before the Sacramental system of the present day, should have a like fear. Without wishing to cast any blame on the Bishop of Liverpool, who is always so full of Gospel teaching in his writings, I have been somewhat amazed at his series of pamphlets which he has lately put forth in defence of a State Church; and asking in one "Will it please God, if the people disestablish the English Church?" I felt rather inclined to say in reply, Yes, it will please God, for I believe that if all the religion of England was only to be found in the pale of the "Church of England," this country would be in a very poor condition indeed.

I read in Matt. xvi. 18, these words, which our Lord addressed to Peter after his noble confession that He was the Christ, "I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Whatever may be the true meaning of "this rock" upon which the Lord says he will build his Church, against which the gates of hell shall never prevail, this fact is true—that that promise can never be frustrated by any scheme of Government to sever the connection between the Church and the State. One might think that those who are so fearful of the result, and talk about Disestablishment taking away all religious life out of our many villages, if not out of the great towns, had either forgotten, or did not believe, that promise of the great Head of the Church. But what does Christ mean by his Church? For I think that many are deluded and deceived on that point. I do not for a moment believe that it is the Church of England, though many will tell us that only can be a Church which can boast of a duly ordained ministry, taking their orders in direct line of succession from the Apostles, and administering the Sacraments by episcopally ordained priests. Still less do I believe it to be the Church of Rome, with all its boasted arrogance of the name of Catholic. Nor, again, do I think that Christ's Church means the Church of Scotland, or of Luther, Wesley, or any other sect who have banded themselves together under the bond of any humanly-devised system of doctrine, be it ever so Scriptural. The Church, which St. Paul calls the bride of Christ, I understood that collective body of all those who have come out on the Lord's side; who are born again, and have passed from death unto life: who are now adopted into God's family, and have rested their souls on the finished work of Christ as their only hope of salvation; and who can now say, with the blind man of the Gospels, "Once I was blind, now I see." It is these I look upon, as composing the true Church of Christ which He owns as his bride—be their names what they may, or worship wheresoever they may.

This puts Disestablishment into a very different position to what many place it. It shows us that Christ's Church can exist whether established or disestablished. In fact, it almost makes us feel that the less of worldly power the Church has the more religious life it will have in it. I mean real, religious life, holiness of heart and life, and an earnest longing for the salvation of souls, not mere activity which so many thousands to-day are mistaking for that. If Disestablishment comes, whether sooner or later, sure I am that Christ's Church will never suffer by it. The Church of England may, for I fear that her light is fast going out, and that God is about to remove her candlestick; but he will take care of his own bride, the sheep of his flock. Therefore, I do not see why any of us whose life has been given up to preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, and a full Gospel, should ever have any fear.

Stapenhill, Burton-on-Trent. J. P. W.

[We must dissent from the view of our correspondent that the light of the Church of England is fast ebbing out. We question if its members were ever doing more aggressive evangelistic work, were ever giving a more consistent and outspoken testimony to Christian holiness, or if it ever contained a larger proportion of saintly men and women. Since the foregoing letters were in type, we have received others on both sides of the question, for which we regret we have not space.—Ed.]

"FATHER IGNATIUS."

Dear Sir,—My attention has been drawn to an advertisement in The Christian, announcing services by "Rev. Father Ignatius," in Westminster Town Hall. May I raise a note of warning to my fellow country-women, and especially sisters in Christ, to beware of Jesuits who preach Christ with one hand and seek to restore Popery with the other? I have heard "Father Ignatius" lately at Southsea and bought his own paper at the door, and I find it contradicts his preaching. "Jesus only" is preached, but in practice it is mixed with holy water, altars, crosses, scapulars worn for protection, &c., &c. Our Lord says, "In the world but not of it." This rev. monk says, "Shut thyself in convents, and bow to altars and burn incense." May God open his blind eyes, and preserve our young men and women from falling into his popish error.—Yours in the Truth, D. Bax.

POLITICS AND MORALITY.

Dear Sir,—I should like to tell you how pleased I was with Mrs. Butler's noble appeal in The Christian, for a purification of Parliamentary representation. The reading of it has suggested the following plan: Could not a small committee of well-known and experienced men—say the Central Vigilance Committee—issue a similar appeal to the ministers of every denomination in the three kingdoms, urging them by the stress and solemnity of the crisis to take their stand at the coming election, boldly and resolutely, as champions of public morality? It is high time that the great political parties of our land were made to feel that they can get little support from earnest Christian men, unless they are prepared to deal honestly with intemperance and immorality.

I have my own decided political convictions, but now I feel that the allegiance I owe to God and to righteousness compels me to take a somewhat independent stand. I should play a paltry part if I allowed myself to forget that both the late Government and the present one have each covered themselves with shame in this matter. They, the one, in the atrocious Jeffries case, and the other, in the prosecution of Messrs. Stead, Booth, &c., have dealt terrible blows at public morality. Am I not guilty if I vote as before, taking no pledge for the future? Now, if ever, it should be known that we Christian men are guardians of morality first, and politicians second.

It is clear to me that, at least during this tremendous crisis, we should reserve ourselves for questions of Temperance and morality, leaving party politics for the most part untouched. The Government that will not rouse itself to contend strenuously for the protection of our daughters, or for the deliverance of our land from the illimitable horrors of the drink traffic, cannot be worthy of the enthusiastic support of enlightened Christian men. Believing this, I am bound to refuse my vote to any man who is not a thorough-going moral reformer. Moreover, as a Christian minister, I shall urge others to do the same.

Why should not the ministers of the land combine and declare the same thing? The effect of such action would be tremendous.—Yours, very sincerely, John Pearce Clark.

The Book World.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

Mr. T. Woolmer sends The Little World of School. By Anne Rylands. 1s. 6d. A good tale, showing that in the school world, as in the world of grown-up life, the reaping will be as the sowing.

Bible Promises. By Richard Newton, D.D. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 2s. In these sermons to children, Dr. Newton follows somewhat on the lines of Todd's celebrated "Lectures to Children." They are faithful, pointed, and present the truth in very simple dress.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. have issued four singularly attractive books for the nursery—"Pretty Pictures of Tiny Pets," "The Young Folks' Picture Book," "Birds and their Nests," "Bible Pictures and Stories." The titles indicate the delightful contents, which include a great array of pictures that are real works of art, and letter-press to match.

The following publications of The Sunday-School Union will be welcomed by young readers. Zita the Gipsy Girl. 6d. A pretty tale, telling how a little gipsy was won for Christ by the efforts of a ragged school teacher. The Two Friends (6d.) is a healthy toned and interesting story, and very well translated from the German. Bayard the Dauntless, and other Historical Tales (2s.), translated from the French of Madame de Witt, begins with a capital sketch of the famous Chevalier, who was sans peur et sans reproche, and goes on with other short accounts of interesting personages and events, milk for babes, which will strengthen as well as refresh. In The Old Mill (1s.), the milk is a little more mixed with water, but the story is fairly attractive, and the moral good. Josceline, or the Cousins. By M. M. Pollard. 2s. 6d. If Josceline was some time wining her way into her cousins' hearts, she will find ready favour with those who read her story. The details of home life carry many a useful lesson. Anecdotes on Bible Texts. The Gospels according to Matthew and John. By J. L. Nye. 1s. 6d. each. These two little volumes, which must have cost the writer much labour, will prove a great boon to Bible students and teachers. The anecdotes are so telling that they must not only illustrate the texts, but help to impress them on the memory. Claude Russell's Sister, and other stories. By Edith C. Kenyon. 1s. 6d. A suitable book for a prize or present, with nice binding, clear print, and good engravings. Bible Pictures for Little People. By Uncle Harry, Each of these 184 pages contains a picture and descriptive letter-press, inculcating valuable lessons within the easy comprehension of a child.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND HISTORICAL.

In Southern India, by Mrs. Murray Mitchell (Religious Tract Society), is a freshly-written narrative. In recording a visit to some of the chief mission stations in the Madras Presidency, the authoress proves that she has many new things to tell. She writes most encouragingly of mission work, entering into everything with keen appreciation and sympathy. Assyria: its Princes, Priests, and People, by Professor Sayce (Religious Tract Society). In this eminently helpful little work the Bible student and general reader will find all that he can possibly wish to retain of a history of one of the most wonderful empires of ancient times. Jottings from the Pacific. By W. Wyatt Gill (Religious Tract Society). Most delightful pages are these, telling of the strange denizens of southern sea and wood, with the adventures of chief and child in their quest. His botanical notes are invaluable to the student of nature. The Children of Africa (Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.), though written expressly for young people, will meet with a hearty welcome from old and young alike. The authoress, in a simple conversational way, tells of the various efforts that have been made to carry the Gospel and the blessings of civilisation to the heathen tribes of the Dark Continent. While we read with horror of the cruelties of the slave trade, we rejoice to know of the efforts made to suppress it. The volume is much beautified by many attractive pictures. Abyssinia (Nisbet & Co.) is an interesting addition to the series of juvenile books issued by these well-known publishers. It contains, besides an outline of the history of this ancient kingdom, a full account of the imprisonment of the missionaries, and of the consequent war with England, which ended so disastrously for King Theodore. The Spirit, Principles, Faith, and Worship of the Huguenots. By Rev. J. A. Martin, D.D. Nisbet & Co. 2s. A book of historical and spiritual interest at any time, and specially at the present time, when we have just been celebrating the Bicentenary of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Child's Own Magazine (Sunday-School Union) is full of interesting tales and verses, beautifully illustrated. The coloured frontispiece is charming. Young England (same publisher). It would be difficult to find a volume more full of wholesome entertainment and varied instruction than this magazine for young people. An excellent gift-book either for boys or girls. Early Days. T. Woolmer. The "early days" of our little ones are wonderfully blest by the child lore provided for them. This volume will delight the heart of any boy or girl who is happy enough to possess it.

BIRTHDAY AND TEXT BOOKS.

A handsome addition to natal literature comes from The Religious Tract Society, entitled Our Anniversaries. A text, and some choice stanzas, illustrative of the passage, are furnished for each day, and the whole is artistically got up. Another exceedingly neat and chaste contribution, handy in shape, is My Friends' Birthdays. Hawkins. 2s. The same publisher sends two pretty little text books—Living Waters (1s.), and Grains of Gold (6d.). A Diary of Golden Thoughts for the Year (Fisher Unwin. 2s. 6d.) is excellent. The thoughts are culled from many sources, and all are truly golden.

STORY BOOKS.

An Original Belle. By Rev. E. P. Roe. 1s. Ward, Lock & Co. The scene of this graphic story is laid at the time of the American War, and the description of the New York Riots is intensely vivid and interesting. The influence exerted by the heroine upon a number of her male friends developed all that was noble and manly in their natures, a complete change in their lives being the result. Mrs. Lester's Girls and their Service. By the Author of "Miss Marston's Girls." Nisbet. 2s. 6d. The varied characters in a girls' Bible-class are cleverly individualised, and the book, while specially suitable for servants, will interest other readers.

CHRISTMAS AND BIRTHDAY CARDS.

First in the field, as usual, with these heralds of the Church's greatest anniversary, is Mr. James Hawkins, of Paternoster-row. The specimens he has sent to us this year fully maintain his reputation for excellence. For richness of colouring, beauty of design, and general artistic merit, it would be hard to excel them; while the illuminated Scripture mottoes make them specially welcome to those who would give due significance to the approaching season. The Religious Tract Society has issued an attractive selection of Christmas, New-Year, and Birthday Cards, Bible Acrostics, &c. A packet of these popular mementos also reaches us from Messrs. Castell Brothers, Warwick-lane, E.C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We have received a splendidly bound edition of Cassell & Co.'s illustrated serial issue of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. The immortal allegory could scarcely have a better and more attractive setting; may it have legions of purchasers and perusers.

The Religious Tract Society have issued a tract written by Dr. S. G. Green, in which he tells the story of the Edict of Nantes, and its infamous Revocation, exactly 200 years ago this day. Dr. Green's brochure gives a terse and vivid account of this epoch-making event—one of the many deeds of shame and cruelty perpetrated in the name of religion.

A Lady of Property, and other Stories, by Frederick Sherlock, is a charming little story-book from the office of Home Words. We have here an illustration of that true heroism which is a redeeming feature in the darkness in which so many are almost lost in this vast Metropolis. From the same office, we have also "Is it Utopian" (a plea for the evangelisation of the masses by voluntary lay help), and Faith's Rock of Rest, by Rev. Chas. Bullock; besides several reprints from Home Words which will be exceedingly useful in Temperance work.

The perusal of The Sentinel (Dyer Bros. 1d.) is almost a necessity to any who would keep abreast of the growing movements on behalf of Social Purity, and matters generally relating to morality and righteousness, whether in the family or in public life. The November issue contains, among other matter of the deepest interest, an account of Mr. Henry Varley's campaign at Derby, where he has been enlightening the ex-Home Secretary's constituency on the past career of that "Right Honourable" gentleman, with regard to the burning question of the time.

A Friendly Letter to Women Employed in Factories, Mills, and Warehouses has been prepared by Miss V. M. Skinner, of Bath, as one of her interesting series. (Jarrold. 6d. per doz.)

An address on Consecration: What it is, by W. Spencer Walton, is published by D. B. Friend, Western-road, Brighton (1d.). The teaching is clear, forcible, scriptural, and instructive.

The Overcomers. 1d. S. W. Partridge & Co. A little book of exhortation to the professing disciples of Christ to overcome all evil. It is a reprint from The Christian of August 20 and 27.

Words to Workers. Hamilton, Adams & Co. Sketches of ten brief and thoroughly evangelical addresses given at Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, at a three days' conference of Old Wycliffites held in June.

The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit, by George Soltau (Shaw & Co.), directs the reader to the true source of power, and will be very useful in a day when too little attention is directed to the work of the Spirit.

In the Time of Jesus.—Messrs. Kingsley & Co., 49, Bedford-street, W.C., offer to preachers and teachers, at the expense of the translator, these very useful historical studies by Dr. Siedel, of Berlin University, post free for 1s. 6d. The published price is 3s. 6d.

Unpolished Gems of Scripture. By Rev. J. Hawker. Elliot Stock. The earnest student of Scripture would do well to possess himself of this work (published quarterly), which will shed a new light on many passages. Many beautiful thoughts are given, which are not even suggested by the English translation.

The International Daily Text Book for 1886 (Sunday School Union) is a text for every day chosen from the International Lesson, with "golden texts" for Sundays. Many hearts in many lands will be linked together by this little book, which is of a convenient size for carrying in the purse or in the waistcoat pocket.

All whose annual incomes do not exceed £400, part of it being made up of rents, dividends, &c., should consult a little brochure written by Alfred Chapman, and published by Mr. Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange, E.C. Full instructions are given as to how income tax paid on these items of income can be refunded.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Pacific states that Mr. J. E. K. Studd addressed a meeting at the Y.M.C.A. of this city, on Sunday October 4, on Christian work among University men in Great Britain.

CHICAGO has become excited over the doings of the Salvation Army, and has sent a number of the members to prison, but it has been quaintly and truly said, she gives herself little anxiety about the awful proceedings of the damnation army of saloon-keepers.—Zion's Herald.

YALAHA, FLORIDA.—Rev. D. Leith, of Memphis, Tennessee, writes from this place:—The coloured people here have made astonishing progress, socially, morally, spiritually, within 20 years. As I write this, I can look out on the beautiful orange and lemon groves. The fruit is just taking its golden tinge. This is like an earthly paradise.

FOREIGN Y.M.C.A.—The German and Swiss Conference of the Episcopal Methodist Church rejoices in the growth of Y.M.C. Associations. Last year eleven new Associations were formed, so that now there are thirty in Germany and fourteen in Switzerland. Most of these, while providing for the educational and recreative needs of young men, lay the greatest stress upon Bible study.

REV. W. WELFORD, one of the Primitive Methodist missionaries at Fernando Po, Wes Africa, has been arrested by the Spanish authorities. They seem to have imposed a number o restrictions as to the ringing of the church bells, singing in the church, and so on, all of which were complied with as far as possible. A fine of twenty dollars was imposed on the missionary, which h refused to pay. Soon afterwards he was arrested and taken on board the hulk which was moored i the river.

RAILWAY-MEN'S BIBLE UNION.—The Hon. Secretary, Mrs. John W. Probyn, requests that fo the ensuing year all correspondence and applications for cards may be addressed to the Hon. Assistant-Secretary, Miss Kingstone, care of Miss Campbell, 131, Mildmay-road, London, who has undertaken the burden of the work.

CITY POLICE.—An interesting meeting of the City Police took place on October 12, in the Lecture Hall of the City Temple, to celebrate the third anniversary of Mr. T. Russell's appointment a City missionary to the Force. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, in the absence of the Lord Mayor. Mr. Russell's report was of a very cheering character. Addresses were given by Rev. B. Cassin, Rev. Thos. Grear, and Mr. G. Dashwood.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fisher men the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

THE CHILDREN.

WHY do children grow up so indifferent to God, their own Father and Mother, and true Bible Religion? What answer will many Parents give to this momentous question?

We all know life begins at home, and the strongest impressions are made between the ages of four and ten. For many years Parents had no proper system of Bible Catechisms to enable them to teach their children the great things of God and Religion, and it is impossible for Parents to teach and train them right without.

The Systematic Bible Teacher and Bible Voices for the Young, post free, 2s. 6d., contain a complete system of Standard Catechism and Scripture Lessons, by good Dr. Watts, the Westminster Assembly, and the late R. Mimpriss, graduated to suit all ages from infancy to maturity, and which enables Parents to teach one child or a family of twelve children, Teachers to teach a class of twenty or a school of five hundred, Educated Ladies to teach all ages, or Ministers without study to conduct a quarterly examination so that all can answer, and also carry home the lessons for parents to both train and profit by all the week. Here is the one hope for Parents in the training of their dear children. VISITORS TO LONDON should call and learn about the system at the Notes on Daily Readings.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29.—GENESIS XIV.

Lot's enjoyment of the land of his choice, in the well-watered plain of Jordan, is now rudely disturbed; and the battle of four kings against the five ends in his capture and captivity. The result of the fight was told to Abram by "one that had escaped," and "when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto Dan." The numbers seem to be given to us to show that Abram's defeat of the armies of the four kings was nothing short of a miracle, and wrought, as were the victories of Israel in after time in the same land, by the direct interposition of God, whose help he had no doubt invoked.

16.—"And brought again his brother Lot."—The spiritual teaching of this incident is worthy of note; it points to going after "brethren" (see the twice-repeated expression "his brother"), and delivering them from any captivity into which they may have been, by their own folly or inconsistency, betrayed. Abram might have left Lot to suffer for the folly of his choice, but seldom, alas! is to be seen such brotherly conduct as that of Abram—the reverse of Cain's, "Am I my brother's keeper?"—risking his own life and his possessions in order to bring back his brother. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted" (Gal. vi. 1).

18.—"Melchizedek, king of Salem, brought forth bread and wine."—"Melchizedek was in himself nothing. He was a mere man; but he was a typical man, appointed to foreshadow the eternal Son of God. Melchizedek, therefore, as a typically eternal Person, foreshadowed Him who, being a truly eternal Person, brings the eternity and all the excellency of that which He personally is into the offices which He assumes."—B. W. Newton.

If any typical significance is to be attached to the "bread and wine" which Melchizedek "brought forth," it must be as being typical not of the Lord's Supper, but of that of which the Sacrament is itself typical, the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 30.—GENESIS XV.

1.—"The word of the Lord came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward."—This is the first occurrence in the Bible of the expression "the word of the Lord," which occurs so frequently afterwards. "Fear not" is constantly used to introduce the Lord's revelation of Himself, both in the Old and New Testament. It seems impossible to doubt that Abram had the first promise in his mind (iii. 15), along with the promise of its fulfilment through him (xii. 3), when he responded to the Lord's revelation of Himself by saying, "Lord God, what wilt Thou give me, seeing I go childless?"

6.—"And he believed in the Lord; and He counted it to him for righteousness."—"The root of the word rendered 'believed' has the sense of supporting, sustaining, strengthening. Hence in the Hiphil conjugation (as here) it signifies to hold as firm, hence to believe and rely upon as true and stable."—Sp. Com. It is important to note that the object of Abram's faith was nothing less than the Lord Himself. He did not merely believe the truth of God's word, but he believed in the power of God to make good his word. "Being fully persuaded that, what He had promised, He was able also to perform; and therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness" (Rom. iv. 21, 22). God's word to us, no less than to Abram, has been made good in the death and resurrection of Christ, which is, therefore, the ground on which righteousness is imputed to those who believe now, as it was to those "who had before hoped in Christ" (Eph. i. 12, R.V.).

8. "Whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?"—Delitzsch renders this: "Whereby shall I know that I shall take possession of it? (the land)." The covenant which was made in answer to this request had reference (as the additional words spoken by the Lord show) to the possession of Canaan by his posterity. It was here "made" (Heb. "cut"), and in xvii. 7 "made to stand." The word "make," xvii. 2, is not the one here used, but is lit. "give," which Delitzsch interprets "set in operation."

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31.—GENESIS XVI.

"Here we find unbelief casting its dark shadow across the spirit of Abraham, and again turning him aside, for a season, from the path of simple, happy confidence in God. . . . It is evident that Hagar was not God's instrument for the accomplishment of his promise to Abraham. Both Abraham and Sarah 'multiplied their sorrows' by having recourse to Hagar, for 'when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress was despised in her eyes.' Abraham and Sarah had to endure the presence of the bond-woman and her son for a number of years, and then get rid of them in God's way. . . . We are authorised to look at Hagar and her son as figures of the covenant of works, and all who are thereby brought into bondage (Gal. iv. 22–25)."—C. H. M.

"Chap. xvi. is the fleshly attempt on Sarah's part to have the seed which was assured by the word of the Lord to Abraham in the beginning of chap. xv. Here all is failure; but the purposes of God will be accomplished according to promise, and not of the flesh and man's will."—J. N. D.

12.—"He shall be as a wild ass among men," &c. (R V.).—"This animal is frequently mentioned in Scripture, and often as a type of lawless, restless, unbridled, dispositions in human beings. The violent character and lawless life of the Bedouin descendants of Ishmael from the first till this day is exactly described in the words, 'his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him.'"—Sp. Com.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 1.—GENESIS XVII.

"The covenant had been made with Abram for at least fourteen years (ch. xv.), and yet Abram remained without any visible sign of its accomplishment, and was merely pointed in faith to the inviolable character of the promise of God. Jehovah now appeared to him again, when he was ninety-nine years old, ... to give effect to the covenant and prepare for its execution. At the establishment of the covenant (xv. 7), God had manifested Himself to him as Jehovah; here Jehovah describes himself as 'El Shaddai,' God the mighty One. The name which Jehovah thus gave to Himself was to be a pledge that in spite of 'his own body now dead' and 'the deadness of Sarah's womb' (Rom. iv. 19), God could and would give him the promised innumerable posterity."—Delitzsch.

13.—"My covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant."—The common notion that baptism has taken the place of circumcision has no countenance from Scripture. Circumcision has never ceased to be the sign of the covenant with the seed of Abraham according to the flesh. It was only Gentiles who (Acts xv. 23) were excused circumcision.

17.—"Abraham fell upon his face and laughed."—Bishop Harold Browne says that "The Jewish commentators, and many of the Christian fathers, understood this laughter to be the laughter of joy, not of unbelief; so, also, many moderns. It is thought also that our blessed Lord may have alluded to this joy of Abraham (John viii. 56), 'Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad,' for it was at the most distinct promise of a son who was to be the direct ancestor of the Messiah that the laughter is recorded." Isaac—laughter—would suitably commemorate his joy, not his unbelief.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2.—GEN. XVIII.

"This chapter affords a beautiful exemplification of the results of an obedient separated walk (Rev. iii. 20; John xiv. 23). From these passages, taken in connection with our chapter, we learn that an obedient soul enjoys a character of communion entirely unknown to one who moves in a worldly atmosphere."—C. H. M.

1.—"And the Lord appeared unto him . . . . and, lo, three men stood by him.—The generally accepted view of these three mysterious visitors is that one of them was the Lord Himself, the second Person of the Trinity, while the others were angels, representing, it may be, the other Persons of the Godhead. One of the three is repeatedly called Jehovah but the other two are not.

10.—"I will certainly return unto thee according to the time of life."—Delitzsch renders this "at this time when it lives again, i.e., at this time next year." So R.V., "when the season cometh round."

12.—"And Sarah laughed within herself."—Augustine thus discriminates between the laughter of Abraham (xvii. 17) and that of Sarah: "The father laughed, when a son was promised to him, from wonder and joy; the mother laughed, when the three men renewed the promise, from doubtfulness and joy." The angel's reproof, however, and her own untrue denial, give a darker picture of her conduct, and give point to the meaning of "by faith even Sarah herself" (Heb. xi. 11, R.V.).

32.—"I will not destroy it for ten's sake."—Abraham ceased to intercede, probably thinking that ten righteous would be found, and that Sodom was safe. The Lord's justice was, however, magnified in its destruction, and his mercy in "sending Lot out of the midst of the overthrow."

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3.—GEN. XIX.

In reading the terrible story of the wickedness and consequent judgment of Sodom by fire from heaven, we must not forget that the doomed city is set forth by our Lord Himself as a type of "this present evil world," with a like judgment impending. "As it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all; even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." When Lot warned his sons-in-law, "he seemed as one that mocked." The very uniformity of social life seemed to harden them against the threat of its sudden interruption, just as "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation" (2 Pet. iii. 4), is the excuse now of those who question "the promise of his coming." The warning from Lot's example, as to the danger of believers settling down in this world, as if it were a fitting sphere for efforts at reform, is very solemn. Lot "sat in the gate" of Sodom, which implies a judicial position, in which, no doubt, he did his best to reform the ways of the wicked city; but "the path of faith as such is not to cleanse the world, but to lift men out of it to dwell in heavenly things. Can the Lots reform the world? Rather they themselves are only 'saved so as by fire.'"

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4.—GEN. XX.

Abraham does not appear to advantage in this chapter. It is a melancholy record of the working of human nature, even in a saint of God. "He sojourns in Gerar, and fears the men of that place. Judging that God was not there, he forgets that He is always with him. He seems to be more occupied with the men of Gerar than with the One who was stronger than they. Forgetting God's ability to protect his wife, he has recourse to the same stratagem which years before he had adopted in Egypt. The father of the faithful was carried away by taking his eye off God. How true it is that we are only strong as we cling to God in the sense of our perfect weakness."—C. H. M.

"The old compact between Abraham and Sarah is acted on again, after so long a time—acted on now at Gerar, as before it had been in Egypt. It had been made between them, ere they left their native country. It was brought out with them from the very place of their birth. It is false and yet specious, and savours strongly of the serpent, of him that is a liar and the father of lies. Abraham is forced to betray it, vile as it was, to the king of Gerar: 'It came to pass, when God called me to wander from my father's house, that I said unto Sarah, This is thy kindness which thou shalt show unto me; at every place whither we shall come, say of me, He is my brother.' There was not a principle in the life of faith that was not gainsayed by so vile a compact as this. And such is the flesh, the inbred corruption. Its way, whenever taken, is shame and deep dishonour. It degrades a saint even before men. It is that which will confound and expose an Abraham before an Abimelech."—J. G. Bellett.

16.—"He is to thee a covering of the eyes."—R.V. renders this "it is to thee," &c. So Delitzsch, who adds, "the covering of the eyes" is a figurative expression for an atoning gift.

SPAIN.—Mr. Armstrong regards the condition of things in Spain as very serious. The terrible plague with which they have been visited has not brought forth the least sign of humiliation or repentance among the people. In consequence of the oppression, misery, and despair of the people, many expect a social revolution. Nevertheless, individual cases of turning to the Lord are recorded with praise and thankfulness.

PERSECUTING CHRISTIANS IN CHINA.—The American Consul at Canton reports a fresh campaign of persecution against the Christians in China; and this, according to the Philadelphia Correspondent of The Times, is confirmed by advices from missionaries there. It causes a general movement among American Missionary Boards and other religious bodies, urging the Secretary of State to make an immediate vigorous remonstrance.

MISSIONARIES AT LAKE NYASSA.—The work which brave Livingstone began, in the interests of Christianity and civilisation, in this portion of the Dark Continent, is being actively carried on. Bishop Smythies, with a party of eight clergymen and artisans, is now at Lake Nyassa, near which place a Church steamer, sent out in pieces from England, at a cost of nearly £5,000, is being put together for work along the coasts. In view of Livingstone's opinion that the presence of Englishmen in that region would have an adverse influence on the slave trade, which still keeps the lake-side people in misery, and drives them to the marshes as the only safe habitations, the Bishop proposes to settle on an island close to a great slave ferry, and to establish sub-stations on the mainland, using the island as a place of refuge when necessary.—Echo.

The New Crusade—Vigilance Work Indeed!

Dear Christian Friends,

The demands for help in rescuing Little Children from the gravest perils have of late been unprecedented in number and in intensity of distress.

From all parts of the Kingdom communications by telegram and letter are received almost daily; and up to this we have not refused aid in one single case of any urgency.

Our winter's work has therefore commenced early, and is already seriously pressing upon us from every quarter, while 1,400 other children in the Homes need daily care and support. Through the goodness of God our Preventive and Rescue organization, perfected by many years' experience, enables me now to hold out helping hands to almost every phase of real child misery or danger.

But I am compelled, although reluctantly, to tell you that, for many weeks past, we have experienced the keenest pressure, and not a little trial of faith, owing to the very serious falling off of funds during the autumn recess.

Economise as we will, we cannot diminish our expenditure below the point of £100 per day. Our receipts for nine weeks have not unfrequently been under £30 per day.

I have no doubt our Heavenly Father has had some wise purpose in thus esting the faith of His servants. Perhaps, also, one reason for this recent xperience may have been that such a statement of our needs might thereby come to many hearts as a trumpet-call for generous aid in this most important nterprise.

Very gratefully indeed will the contributions of God's people be received and acknowledged if addressed to the Treasurer, William Fowler, Esq., M.P.; r to

Your Fellow-servant among homeless and perishing Children,

T. J. BARNARDO.

"Manna Cake"

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. HAYWARD, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

MAGNETIC TREATMENT OF RHEUMATISM.

To those who suppose there is no cure for Rheumatism we commend the following: We do not know of any chemistry outside the human organism which can eliminate the morbid products of a Rheumatic Diathesis; but that which chemistry and medicine cannot accomplish the human organism can, when the right conditions are afforded, and one of the most effective conditions is that which tends to establish an equilibrium of functional action in all the organs. Our arrangement is simply this, that by Magnetic Treatment, an unhealthy condition of the system or the blood, culminating in the morbid and consequent functional derangement of some organ and predisposing to formations, even to cancers, as admitted by medical men, is checked, and counteracting conditions of dispersion or absorption are set up, a more vigorous tone being communicated to the system in general, and to each organ in particular.

We admit the value of medicine as of primary importance in acute affections, but Magnetism has a direct relation to the cause, giving, as it does, vitality and energy to the system, by which the tendency to a recurrence of the symptoms is overcome.

From Mrs. GRANT, St. Nicholas, Margate, October 4, 1885.

"It is above ten years since I first wrote you for advice and treatment. I had then been suffering from a very severe attack of Sciatica, which had confined me to my bed for several weeks, and was unable to walk without crutches. Sympathising friends told me that I should be subject to returns of the painful trouble, but I am thankful to say I have had no symptoms of it up to the present. I believe that the blessing of God on Magnetism has saved me. I recommended some friends (Mr. and Mrs. Hadaway) to try your system, from which they also derived much benefit, and more recently a Miss Grant, of Ramsgate. This last July my son returned from the West Indies quite broken down through some years' residence in that hot climate. He, as you know, applied to you for suitable Magnetic Appliances, and is now feeling much better, and able to attend to his duties with more satisfaction and comfort than for a long time before he came home. Doubtless, change of climate has a little to do with his restoration, but I and he also believe that Magnetism has more.

"You will please excuse this long letter, but I feel sure you will be pleased to know these facts. You are quite at liberty to make them known if they may be the means of inducing other sufferers to try the same remedy."

We can point to people who were once incapacitated, and seemingly so for life, but who are now healthy, and actively taking their part in the world's hard work. In numerous instances, affections which had been pronounced incurable, leading the patient, perhaps, to give way to melancholy forebodings because of the dark prospect before them, have yielded to Odo-Magnetic treatment. No more inconvenience is involved than by the wearing of an ordinary garment, and it is often as effectual as the most radical change of climate or favourable condition of health which could be devised for an invalid. This is no extravagant statement, but it is what is continually attested by our patients. Although we do not assure any applicant that cure is certain, we are permitted to refer such inquirers to a goodly number of those who know from experience what Magnetic Treatment has done for them. A list, containing the names of 1000 such persons willing to answer inquirers, can be had free, together with all information on the treatment, from B. COPSON GARRATT, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

CONSUMPTION.—CASE of a YOUNG GIRL at ALFRETON.

In August last year, Mr. Sam. Dunkley, of Newton Green, near Alfreton, Derby, wrote to me relative to his daughter. Her illness had commenced about the Christmas before, with low restless nights, followed by slow fever.

A very troublesome hacking cough had followed, which continued sometimes night and day; expectoration difficult, sometimes mixed with blood. There was constantly oppressed breathing, pain with coughing, perspiration towards morning. The strength had gradually declined, and she was wasting away.

In this serious condition my treatment was commenced. In one month the father reported, "Cough better, appetite improved, looking better."

In another month, "Breathing much better, resting well at night, gathering strength, no pain."

Before Christmas last she was getting all right, but having caught a slight cold in the damp weather resumed her former treatment. It was found advisable to continue on until the Spring.

In June the father says, "Our daughter has seemed to have nothing amiss with her since taking her last medicine."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

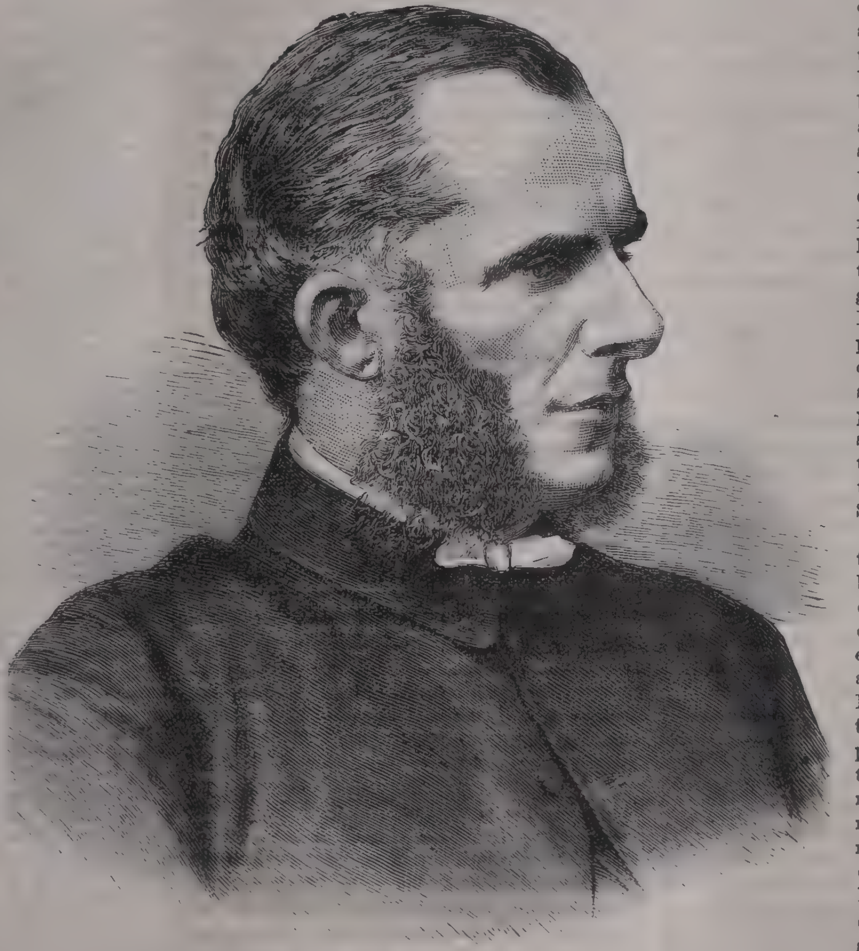
REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.



WE have pleasure in presenting our readers this week with a portrait of the well-nown and justly popular Vicar of St. Paul's hurch, Onslow-square, in the South-western istrict of London. For the last nine or ten ears few ministers of the Gospel of Jesus hrist in this great city have been more welcome n evangelical platforms, or have more deeply npressed the Christian ablic with the sense of vigorous and strongly arked personality, than r. Webb-Peploe. As a ublic speaker his gifts are extraordinary as to be most unique. For rapidity utterance, perhaps the nly Englishman of this eneration who has excelled im was one of his own redecessors at St. Paul's hurch—the late Rev. Capel olyneux. This extreme uency is often a drawback the hearer whose mental rocesses are somewhat uggish; all the more Mr. Webb-Peploe's ad-resses are characterised by ose and sometimes intricate ains of reasoning, and his araseology is by no means a hackneyed or common-ace order. To the average enographer, who essays to on paper his lightning eech, he is a perpetual rror, as the writer of ese lines can very feelingly stify. It frequently hap-ns that Mr. Peploe's pub-hed addresses require to ve a footnote appended, to e effect that they have t had the advantage of e author's revision, which a way of intimating that e strict accuracy of the port cannot be vouched r.

As Vicar of the church in Onslow-square, of urse Mr. Webb-Peploe's primary duty is to s large and influential congregation. That ty he discharges right faithfully, with the lp of the band of earnest workers whom he s gathered around him. Thus we find that, in dition to the usual parochial agencies set on ot by every conscientious holder of the clerical fice, there are such useful adjuncts as night-hools, Temperance work, coffee taverns, and other efforts, to reach the men-servants and maid-servants who are so numerous in the locality. We understand that "The Coachmen's and Men-servants' Club" in connection with St. Paul's Church is a very flourishing and successful endeavour to reach and benefit a class of the community that is too often left outside the pale of church work. The congregation at St. Paul's are noted for their generous money contributions to good causes; one illustrious instance, several years since, was the raising of £1000 on behalf of the Church Missionary Society, through an appeal from the pastor, who is greatly beloved by his flock.

A man of Mr. Webb-Peploe's active temperament and untiring energy cannot be confined within the narrow bounds of a London parish. Intensely evangelical in his theological views, and a powerful preacher of the good old-fashioned Gospel of the three R's—ruin, redemption, regeneration—he is in much demand as a special missioner. He is best known, however, to the general public as a speaker at meetings held "for the deepening of spiritual life." The annual Conferences on this subject at Keswick would, to many, lose more than half their charm and influence if the clear-cut, thoughtful features, and the profound and penetrating utterances of Mr. Webb-Peploe were not to be seen and heard. The address which we report in succeeding columns, delivered by him at a recent Conference in Glasgow, is a fair instance of the lofty height to which he raises the consideration of the great themes that relate to Divine purpose and human privilege. No Christian can listen to one of these serious and searching expositions without an added sense both of the glory and the awfulness of living in this dispensation of the Spirit.

As if it were not enough to be a faithful pastor, a busy labourer in the fields of evangelism, and an honoured instrument in quickening the spiritual life of all the churches, Mr. Webb-Peploe somehow finds time to take an active part in promoting the great philanthropic and social movements of the day. We know not how many societies number him on their working committee list, or impress him into their service for deputation work. He has shown special zeal in dealing with the difficult question of social purity. To him, probably more than any other man, was due the inception of the Central Vigilance Committee, which anticipated and paved the way for the National Vigilance Committee that is now forming branches in all parts of the kingdom. The wonder to us is that one man, even if he possesses the most vigorous frame, and a heart on fire with love to God and man, can sustain from month to month so much exhausting labour. We hope

Mr. Webb-Peploe will not forget that there are limits to the endurance of the strongest and the most zealous. One thing is tolerably certain, that he will die in harness. May the day be far distant when he will be translated from the service of this lower sphere to the more exalted service of the heavenly courts on high.

DIGNITY AND GLORY OF MANHOOD.

By Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

ADDRESS AT GLASGOW CONFERENCE.

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."—GEN. i. 27, 28.

IT is totally impossible for any speaker to over-estimate the dignity and glory of man. So long as man is in subjection to God, the Father of spirits, it is utterly impossible to overstate the glory and honour that man may enjoy; for man, as he enhances his own true glory, is actually enhancing the glory of God, and he is the nearest creature to God that can be found in the Universe. He represents God to the creation around, and he manifests in the visible what God is in the invisible sphere. Man displays before all the earth, the glory, the greatness, and the beauty of the Lord God, if so be that he fulfils the purpose with which God originally called him into existence.

It is manifest that David refers to this when he speaks in Psalm viii., and makes that solemn inquiry repeated by the Apostle in Heb. ii.: "What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels: Thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands." Though the one, the prophet, is apparently speaking of man in the abstract, yet he is, evidently, speaking by the Holy Ghost with a certain reference to the coming Man, Christ Jesus; the other, the Apostle, is distinctly speaking concerning the Christ who had come; while there is a certain reference to us who are one with Christ Jesus, our Lord, and to all who are made partakers of life in Him. "For this cause He is not ashamed to call them brethren," seeing that they are actually united to Him when they have faith in Him, and are made partakers of his very resurrection life—so joined to the Lord Jesus Christ that they are absolutely one with Him in the glories of his present existence. Therefore whatever is spoken by the prophets of old concerning the coming Man Christ Jesus the Lord—whatever by the apostles and prophets of the New Testament dispensation concerning the Christ of God who has appeared among us—is to have a more distinct and wondrous fulfilment in the Church of God, as it now exists upon earth, and as it shall exist in the coming and millennial glory, than was seen in the person of Jesus in his humiliation; for then it pleased Him, for our sakes, to divest Himself of visible glory and honour. You and I are partakers of the very glories that Jesus has inherited through his death and resurrection; so that we become, in a certain sense, greater as man than the Lord Jesus when He walked this earth of ours in his humiliation. As He Himself says to the Father, "The glory which Thou gavest Me, I have given them," so He also, referring to his feeble disciples, and speaking of the days that were to succeed his departure, asks that "They may be one, even as We are one; I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one." And to them He says, "The works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father" (John xiv. 12). The Apostle Paul, speaking of Jesus as Man, says, "We see not yet all things put under Him, but we see Jesus who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man." Then we hear a little lower down in that chapter of his having overcome death, and having destroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, that He might preach unto us through the apostles and prophets of the New Testament dispensation, all the glory of the resurrection manhood. That is the man as God would have him to be. If then we turn from what is too selfishly thought of by many, viz., our own personal salvation, to the abstract principle or idea of what God intended man to be, it may for a moment appear to a feeble-minded Christian as if we were entering on the sphere of metaphysics rather than that actual and dogmatic truth which concerns our own personal need in the world of trial and suffering. But the more that the Church of God in its individuality, that is, in each individual soul, rises to the realisation of God's purpose for the whole, the more that purpose will be carried out in the individual; and, instead of considering ourselves as a mere package of units, shaken up together as atoms of earth have been shaken up, each man holding his own against his neighbour, if we remember that we are welded together in one great body, and all partakers of the very life that springs from the head and heart of Christ, we are far more likely to secure our own true advancement in spiritual life and power; more certainly shall we enhance the glory of God, and more assuredly hasten the second coming of our Lord.

Our subject, then, is the dignity and glory of Christian manhood; and though it may appear at first sight to be abstract, it is of infinite value to the souls of all here. Just in proportion as we merge our own individuality in the glory of the great God above, who has sent forth his Son to be the Second Man, the Lord from heaven, we shall ourselves secure best that very end—for which we are in a certain sense too eager, I believe—our own personal advancement in spiritual life. I pray that all of us may be enabled to forget even the thought of our own salvation for a while, even the thought of our advancement; yea! even for a short while forget that we have a personality, except as far as we realise the truth that we are united to the Man Christ Jesus, and one with Him; then shall we be better prepared to receive what God Himself in his mercy would reveal to us, and be far more certain in the days to come to bring glory to God in our own personal sphere of action. Alas, we have far too long as Christians been devoted to the unit principle, and the unit habit of life, instead of realising the Divine idea of unity; we have lost sight of what Paul speaks of (1 Cor. xii.) as the magnificence of the body of Christ, the fact that we are one body, and that Christ and the Church are one Christ, and that all men united to Him make but the one Man, for that in God's sight there never has been but one Man. Just as God created the first man a male and female to make up the one man, so, with regard to the Second Man, the Lord God Almighty has decreed that there shall be one Man, and that the male and female in Christ Jesus are only to be one; that He being the bridegroom and we his bride, his Church, taken forth from his side, even as Eve was taken from Adam's side, the two in one constitute that perfect manhood that God desires to see completed. As members of the Church if we have any rightful ambition for ourselves it should be only that the glory of God ma be seen in the completeness of the Church as whole; so that the Lord Jesus may speedil have his bride and delight Himself therein, a one that He can present unto Himself withou spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. Let us forge our own personality, our own individual interes in the salvation of Christ Jesus, except to remember that we are members of the body.

Thus forewarned, then, let us ask, from th
Word of God, what was the original purpose o
God in calling man into existence upon earth
It is perfectly clear that it was with some grea purpose that God constituted this world as habitation so exactly fitted to meet the need of man. He could not have prepared th world as He did, in the most elaborate manne unless that creature appointed to the governmen of it was a very marvellous being, with som special dignity and honour as the head and top stone of creation. Hence, if God has announce a distinct purpose in his Word, it behoves us, a his creatures, to study carefully the announce ments. Now, we find that the saints are t inherit the glories of the kingdom prepared f them by the Father from the foundation of th world (Matt. xxv. 34). Here, then, is a distinc declaration of God's purpose for man. Agai we find, in Eph. i., that God has predestinate men to the adoption of children by Jesus Chris according to his purpose, who worketh all thing after the counsel of his own will." In Ron viii. 28, 29, we read of God's marvellous pur pose; that He fulfils all things according to tha purpose; and that He predestinated men to b conformed to the image of his Son, and wi carry out this purpose even to the final glorifica tion of the creature.

Now, seeing that God has such distinct purpo for man, and that He announces it in every pa of his revelation as being the great subject whic man should study, it will be a sad reproach upo the Church of Christ if she fails to fulfil th high purpose of her existence. To be ignoran of that purpose may be our infirmity; to reje that purpose must be our eternal condemnation to discover that purpose should be the highest ai and object of the creature; to discover and to kno that purpose, and to have it carried out, is th highest glory to which the creature can possibl attain. The purpose that God has announce concerning man is set forth in all parts of revela tion. Shall we not, each one, humbly and deter minedly say, by the grace of God, "If tha purpose is discoverable, I will discover and kno it"? And if, by the mighty power of God, tha purpose can be carried out in the Church, shoul not we, as members of the Church gathere together here to-day, solemnly determine hence forth and for ever to yield ourselves up to tha wondrous purpose, whatever it may be? "S help me, God," let each member say, "ther shall be no let or hindrance on my part to th absolute completion of God's glorious purpos but I will hasten on that day of God for whic the Church longs and sighs."

What a solemn truth, and how distressing the Church, if she rightly understands her dignit and position, that the "whole creation groanet and travaileth in pain together, waiting for th fulfilment of the purpose of God." What a solem truth, and how it should bring condemnatio upon the saints to think that the Lord Jesu Himself is ever sitting at the right hand of Go expecting until his enemies be made his footstoo Solemn truths? Yes! And how they shoul make us quiver with eager, longing excitemen to know what God could do with his membe upon earth, when we learn that the saints unde the altar are crying out, "How long, O Lord? and He tells them that they must wait till the brethren on earth are complete, and the heathe given as his inheritance; when we see the whol creation groaning and travailing, and saint crying under the altar of God; and can you an I look coolly on such matters as these? An et the utmost ambition of many a Christian is secure his own salvation: "May the Lord ke care that I am not damned." Is this really l we care to know? I charge it upon every ue believer to forget this miserable, wretched, nit life, and seek to know the unity of the Church

God, and to see how his purpose throughout l creation is one.

The subject we have to-day is "Indwelling -Enabling." Well, God's commands are enblings. God has laid a charge upon us, and e has bestowed the power to carry it out in etail. If the charge fail to be carried out by e creature, it is not with God but with man at the responsibility and therefore the sin will
. We read that Adam was called into exist-ce with the partner of his life, in order to have ominion—glorious position of the creature as od's representative Man was intended to ve absolute dominion over everything God iginally created, which we call by the title of nature" or "earth." But no sooner was man lled into existence than we find him losing at dominion; unable to hold it any time; ssing into a condition in which he becomes an solute slave to sin, and the power that pro-ked sin—viz., Satan. Man is in terror of e beasts of the earth, which were intended to placed in subjection to him. Man is a slave his bodily needs, and, having to labour with e sweat of his brow to gain a precarious exist-ce in the flesh, he is, in every point, without e dominion which was originally intended for m to enjoy.

It is only when we turn to the person of the ord Jesus Christ as the Second Adam, the Second an, the Lord from heaven, that we begin to see any way how the purpose of God is to be rried out. Man lost his dominion because he oked from God and forgot the absolute subjecon of the creature to ends that are Divine. He intended to regain it in the person of the Man rist Jesus. In the Word of God we are taught w this dominion came to be lost by the fall of e creature, and how it is to be regained in the rson of Jesus Christ. When God called man to existence, the words went forth, "Let us ake man in our image; in the image of God eated He him." But God is a spirit, without rts or passions, and we are taught in Acts xvii.
t to think of the Godhead as if He could be presented by any figure or elaborate device of n—i.e., not as a visible, material Being.
erefore, when we say that man was created the image of God, we must apprehend that, so as bodily existence is concerned, he was rmed anticipatorily as the type, or shadow, or ure of the One that was to come (Rom. v. 14).
course this does not contradict the truth that spirit man exactly corresponds to the spirit-ture of God. It has often been thought that sus Christ was formed in the image of man in der to be our Saviour from sin, and men speak of e Incarnation as if it were an after-thought, consequence of the fall of man, whereas ought to look back and remember that en God originally created man, He created n by type or figure or shadow in the form d in the fashion in which the Lord Jesus rist as Second Man would appear. That is to , Jesus Christ is not made in the image of n, as Adam was; but man, that is Adam, was de in the image or form or fashion of what Lord Jesus Christ as the Second Man would
It has been thought that Jesus Christ's In-nation was simply and only a result of the Fall.
e true doctrine is, that Jesus Christ was the n, and Adam the figure; and we should think Him and all that concerns Him as the true nifestation or type of man.

When Adam was called into existence as the e or figure of that which was to come, a rib s taken out from his side, nearest to his heart, l as woman made to be a help-meet to him in all ngs concerning his enjoyment, life, dominion, l glory. We read in the words of the text, God l unto them—not simply unto the male, but le and female, that make up the man—"Be fruitful," &c. Having thus granted unto n, male and female, Adam and Eve, as repre-tative types or shadows of the true man that uld hereafter be revealed, all the glory and nour of having dominion over the earth, he es them together, male and female, as his vicegerent here below. But man fails, and the dominion is lost and altogether gone from the creature.

Yet in the process of time—i.e., when the fulness of time was come—God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law; not simply to secure salvation for us from the effects of sin, not merely to give deliverance from wrath and to secure us a place in everlasting glory hereafter, but to enable all that trust in Him to manifest the manhood in its essential realities, and set forth before all the universe, in presence of the principalities and powers in heavenly places, the dignity and greatness, the honour and glory of true manhood. Thus we must turn to the person of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Second Man to see what the first had failed to be; and we find that He came to represent what the first had failed to represent, to reveal Himself in his perfected manhood, through death, as God's own power, God's wisdom and glory, against the wicked folly and assertion of Satan. In the Lord Jesus Christ we find exhibited all the glory and greatness and dignity of manhood.

But now mark the responsibility that attaches to my subject when we discover in the Lord Jesus Christ the grandeur, the greatness, the dignity, the glory of manhood, and apprehend the fact that it is not only for our sins, but to carry out in us this wonderful greatness and dignity, that the Lord Jesus was revealed. Then there comes, crushingly for the moment, and exaltingly henceforth, into the mind of every individual member of the Church this emotion or feeling of triumph:—"Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ"—thanks be unto God that taketh us as individual members of Christ's body, if we are really united to Him, raising us up together, making us sit together in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, far above all principalities and powers; ay! and giving unto us, in the person of his Son, all that He originally gave to man—which is now to be understood in a far wider sense—even in the vast spiritual sense and truth of the glorious Gospel—that dominion which was originally given to Adam.

The question arises: Can we have aught of it now? Can it be known on earth? Can it be realised and apprehended in such worms of the dust, subject as we are to bodily decay; liable to fall through the temptation of the world, the flesh, and the devil; conscious of inherited and indwelling corruption? Can it be fulfilled in us on earth, that there shall be exhibited in any sense this glorious truth: "Be fruitful, therefore, replenish the earth, and have dominion over everything that is upon the face of the earth"? Now, let us realise, or endeavour to realise what is the purpose of God, by contemplating the person of the Lord Jesus Christ for a moment. I speak not now of the fact that He came as God's representative here upon earth to overcome the powers of evil, by delivering us from wrath; I speak not now of his wondrous death; I speak not now of his glorious resurrection. All these things we admire in the Lord Jesus Christ as the great sinbearer of the world, and we look at Him and apprehend the truth of the Atonement and of our reconciliation with God. All this is manifest; but I speak now of what we may term the characteristics that were revealed in the Lord Jesus as Man and as representative Man. Regarding the person of Christ, we are to hold the glorious doctrine of inclusion as well as substitution—by that I mean, man's identity, absolute unity in Christ; so that all that was in Him should be in us; all that is in Him ought to have been found in the first Adam—all that is in Him may surely be realised, exhibited henceforth more or less according to our faith—experienced in the persons of those who make up the Second Adam.

What do we see, then, when we look at the person of Christ? We see the threefold character of Prophet, Priest, and King. And I thoroughly believe that it is in the realisation of these titles of our Lord that He was enabled to manifest dominion as the Man Christ Jesus, and that it is in the apprehension of these three titles as applicable to ourselves, as intended to be carried out hereafter in their fulness of glory, that we are to take up our position as the true man, and thereby bring glory to God even now upon earth. You shall realise your own true glory as a man, just in proportion as you apprehend that in Christ Jesus, the Man, you are made prophets, priests, and kings unto God. It is quite clear from Scripture that these characters belong to Christ. These titles may, without any question, be accorded to Him. But they are equally to be regarded as having belonged to Adam, the first man, though in embryo, in slighter manifestation than in Christ Jesus their source. A prophet knows the mind of God; so Adam was enabled to declare the mind of God in relation to every living creature which he named (Gen. ii. 19, 20). He bestowed titles on all the known creation, titles expressing their nature and position on earth. That he had the function of a priest is also clear, though not according to our idea in offering sacrifice for sin, but because he was the medium between the creature and Creator, who brings the particular needs of the creature to God, and from God brings back the assurance of God's favour to the creature. It is also clear that he was king over all God's creation; perfectly certain, from the words of the text. And all these functions he possessed as belonging to his manhood.

Now, all these having been lost to man when he had sinned against God, are restored in the person of the Second Man, the Lord from heaven. We are told that the purpose of God which seemed lost in the first, is more than restored in the person of the Second Adam. According to the revelation of the Gospel of God's love, you and I are intended this day to understand that purpose of God and to enjoy its fulfilment, before the universe, by taking our true position in the Man. What was lost in Adam is regained in Christ. But, so far from being prophets by nature, are not men everywhere declared in Scripture (Eph. iv. 18; Ps. xiv. 53; Rom. iii.) to have no knowledge of God, and to have the understanding darkened being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them? We see how the natural man is described in Rom. i. It is also clear that we are not priests by nature, having nothing that we can offer to God, or pretend to offer to God. which is not absolutely and entirely corrupted by sin. That we are not kings also is clear from the things I have mentioned, that we are slaves to sin, slaves to terror, slaves to disease; slaves to circumstances, slaves to death; in fact, we are occupying by nature in everything the position of slaves rather than the glorious position of kings.

But mark the wondrous change introduced by the Gospel of Jesus, who is the Second Man, the Lord from heaven. Do we not read that when the Lord Jesus, as man, had accomplished the mighty purpose of God and returned to the Father's throne in heaven this blessed truth is to be realised by all his people—"This is life eternal, that they might know Thee and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent"? But this is to be a Prophet—to know God—to have fellowship with God and his Son Jesus Christ. We are to seek the gift of prophecy (1 Cor. xiv. 1)—i.e. not simply to foretell, but to be able to declare the mind of God to all creation with which we are brought into contact. That we may all be Priests is perfectly clear from Romans vi. 13, xii. 1; Phil. iv. 18; 1 Peter ii. 5, 9. That we are to be Kings is perfectly clear from Rev. i. 6. The peculiar dignity and glory of prophet, priest, and king have all been granted to us in the Lord Jesus Christ. It is perfectly clear that this it is that God has purposed for man, and this it is to be a man. We have no right to rest as the Church until the Man Christ Jesus shall be complete, and his body, male and female, shall be one, and then true manhood shall stand out in all its dignity before the astonished universe. God keeps his own inherent dignity in the invisible heaven of heavens, but He grants to the Man Christ Jesus ability, authority, as his representative over the universe, and "Ye are all one in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 28), "members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones" (Eph. v. 30). This, O man, O woman, is your peculiar glory in Christ, as one with Christ, where there is no male or female, but where we are all one in Christ Jesus, and glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's!

IDOL-WORSHIP AND IDEA-WORSHIP.

GOD said, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness." The Fall of Adam through the temptation of Satan marred the image, and prevented any possibility of growth in the likeness of God. One result of the Fall was the tendency to make an image of God, hence God said to the nation of Israel, "Thou shalt not make any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above or that is in the earth beneath." The history of that nation is a history of image-making and image-worship of every kind, as they departed from the truth of God.

The effect of image-worship is degradation. So writes the Psalmist concerning all idolators, "They that make them (the idols) are like unto them, so is everyone that trusteth in them." No man can rise above his idea of the character of the god he worships. The lower the idea connected with the idol, the baser will be the moral and spiritual tone of the worshipper. The Apostle Paul traces the downward history of idol-worship in Rom. i. 23: "They changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like unto (1) corruptible man, (2) and to birds, (3) and four-footed beasts, (4) and creeping things." Parallel with this (ver. 25): "They changed the truth of God into a lie."

Civilisation has, in Christendom, demolished idol-worship long ago, but in its place has set up Idea-worship. Every man amongst us has some idea of God, he worships something outside of himself, and his character is affected by the character of his ideal god. Thus a man who looks upon money as the all-powerful agent, and lives to accumulate and use it, becomes in character as hard and unfeeling as his gold, and as morally flimsy and unstable as the paper of his bank notes.

The Agnostic says God is untraceable—his idea is ignorance of God; his character is ignorance of himself, of his real spiritual wants, and of the needs of those around him.

Another class worship culture and education, and recognise these things as the great potencies of the present day. They acquire knowledge of material things, but nothing more, so that their lives are confined to the material as distinct from the spiritual. Then again, a man whose idea of God is that of a Being, distant, unapproachable, awful, and wrathful, becomes such to those around him. He also thinks that God will not punish sin as the Bible describes, and deals lightly with sin in himself and his family.

A breast filled with the love of God, as revealed in Christ, will flow out in loving ways and acts towards those around. It is important, then, to have the right idea of God in the mind. To meet this want of an image of Himself, God sent forth his Son, "the express image of his person," that He might live, act, speak, suffer, redeem the world, and be on earth the Second Adam made in his image, to have dominion over the hearts and lives of those who had lost the image of God, and to deliver from the power of sin.

Over the pages of the four Gospels we must write: "Image of the Invisible God." They that make Jesus Christ, as revealed in the Scriptures, their image of God, will become like Him, and so will be every one who trusts in Him. God's thoughts about sin and its penalty, concerning the way of deliverance from its power through the death of a Sinless One, have been revealed by Jesus. Every act of mercy and power was the act of God. Every word of Gospel blessing and solemn warning was the word of God. The suffering for sin on the cross was the Divine estimate of the guilt of sin, and the Divine manifestation of love for the helpless sinner.

We live in an age of faulty ideas of God. We are commanded to bear the image of Christ by looking unto Him, and being transformed into the same image. A sorrowing, moaning world needs living images of an invisible Christ, self-sacrificing, self-denying, self-emptying, fearless in opposition to sin, tender and exquisitely gentle towards the fallen sinner. This is the purpose of God in our salvation, "predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son," not hereafter merely, but here and now. If Christians expect to bear the image of the glorified Christ by and by, let them bear the image of the crucified and rejected Christ now. This will do more to meet and overthrow the ideas that are current and the ideal worship than any number of treatises and sermons.

PARTY OR PATRIOTISM.

WE have reached a very grave crisis in national affairs. For a long time past the course of events has been watched with no little anxiety, by men who have hitherto held their peace, or only ventured a word of remonstrance or entreaty under the pressure of important interests. But silence may not always be justifiable. It can scarcely be right now.

Much has been said in defence of party politics. It is thought that thereby, subjects receive due consideration all round, and wise results are all the more likely to be secured. No doubt there is much truth in this, the highest principles of action being honourably observed on both sides. But herein lies the question before us. It is to be feared the parties have both run off the rails of true patriotism, and are chiefly intent upon triumphing over one another.

During the whole period of the tenure of office by one party, the other does not cease from harassing opposition; nothing is right; every step is a mistake. It matters not what the topic of the day may be, the "Government" does not say a right word, or do a right thing, according to the ideas of the "Opposition;" and vice versâ. Sometimes criticisms are so unsparingly severe, and "odious epithets" so freely used, that the country cannot but suffer in the eyes of other nations, who do not understand the necessity of discounting the denunciations expressed, and who think the state of the nation—army, navy, foreign affairs, and home interests—as hopelessly bad as party politicians describe it to be.

Perhaps one of the most serious aspects of the business is this: parties are sometimes so evenly balanced, that a few votes can turn the scale in favour of either side. This contingency is duly appraised by both. What follows? Just what might be expected. A small knot of men find themselves in possession of the "key" to the position; and, conscious of their power, proceed to use their votes in a way favourable to their own demands. Is it not simply monstrous that, through the exigencies of party strife, great national questions, vitally affecting the highest interests of the people, should be disposed of according to the will of a faction?

But a Nemesis follows the acceptance of support under conditions not sanctioned by an enlightened patriotism. For example, when a certain administration went to the country some years ago, and, under the influence of an unsuitable alliance, turned their back upon the great Temperance cause, they lost the day in overwhelming defeat. Surely God's hand was in this, for the Temperance cause is essentially his own.

Party strife has reached such a pitch that the inquiry is not "What will best promote the highest welfare of the people?" but the miserably unpatriotic, "How can we secure the defeat of our opponents, and our own triumph?" Men are ready to make the most unworthy concessions in return for support. Never mind how many thousands are every year the slain of the Drink Fiend; never mind how many homes are desolated, and hearts broken, and lives blighted; the drink trade must not be restricted, and even the Lord's day itself must not interfere with the publican's gains! How is this? Can anyone fail to trace it to the too potent influence of the makers and the sellers of the drink? So with other great questions. "Party" must be regarded before every other consideration; and support must be secured, cost what it may.

Oh, for patriots! Oh, for Christian men, who will go down to the House, straight from the place where the prayer has gone up from their very hearts, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" The country is getting thoroughly weary of the incubus of its political parties. The one will do the work of the other, if only it may be in office. Each will bow down before any faction commanding votes, and try hard to secure its support. Oh, for patriots! Oh, for men who will set their faces as a flint against any considerations other than those of the will of God, and the public good. Let party names be sunk in the depths of the sea, party strife cease, and party spirit be banished!

The present condition of the country imperatively demands the resolute efforts of Christian patriotism. Surely the time has come for energetic action in arrest of the awful prevalency of intemperance. Surely the recent revelations of frightful immorality demand something more than feeble legislation for the protection of young girls. Here are two questions of transcendent, yea, vital importance. Let the country support the men who will deal with them as in the sight of God, and according to his will. What are other questions—never mind what other—all others—compared with these? They vitally concern the welfare of the people. They must be dealt with, or our country will suffer; yea, she is already suffering—"the plague has (more than) begun."

Fellow countrymen! Let us have done with party politics. Men whose sole political creed is "Party," are unworthy of a single vote. Let us have Christians! Let us have patriots! Let us have men who will promote true godliness throughout the length and breadth of the land! Let us have legislators who will close the public-house on the Lord's day, and do their best to keep it closed all the rest of the week as well; men who will have nothing to do with the "State regulation of vice," and who will apply themselves to the provision of adequate measures for the restraining of immorality. The country has been aroused of late, and is in no mood to be trifled with. The daughters of the poor have as much right to be carefully and effectually protected against the wiles of the sensualist as those of the wealthy. With reluctant hand, something has been done. More must follow—oh, much more!

Where are our patriot candidates for Parliamentary honours? Let them come forward and declare themselves. The motto to be held aloft is, "For God and my country." Thousands of earnest voters, sick of "party," with its unholy alliances and unworthy compromises, are ready to further their candidature to the uttermost. Let them come forward. A warm welcome awaits them and heartiest support. The cry of the country, wounded and sick and sore, is for men who will deal with the affairs of the nation in a spirit of true patriotism and in the fear of God. Party men have had their day: now for Patriots—Christians! J. T. W.

ON DISESTABLISHMENT.

THE main purpose of the paper on Disestablishment, by "An Evangelical Clergyman," which appeared a fortnight since, we believe to have been expressed in the last sentence:—

> "Let none, then, be moved in defence of what are well called 'the temporalities' of a church, to dishonour, in the eyes of those around them, by the manifestation of party feeling, the name and cause of their Saviour Lord. Brethren, 'the time is short.' The Master is at hand. All wrongs will be righted when He comes, and till then let us be content to know that the very hairs of our heads are numbered."

To give emphasis to this was certainly the reason why we published it.

We have received so many letters in which correspondents at home and abroad appeal to our fairness to allow them a few words (not always few) in reply, that to comply with their appeal would occupy a considerable part of our issue.

More than one urges that we are going out of our province in touching this question, that we shall offend many of our readers, and that our circulation will suffer in consequence. It is not the first time by many that we have been thus instructed. Those who wished us to be silent about social purity have said the same again and again, during the past five and twenty years. We are now proving by the results that God was with us when many seemed against us. If our paper is worthy of its name, it must not only record events, but discuss principles; and one of the best and most prominent signs of the times is the growing determination to inquire into everything, down to its very roots. We have never had any liking for partisanship in politics or in religion, but no journalist—and especially no Christian journalist—would be worthy of his calling if he repressed inquiry, conducted in a kindly spirit, into great social, religious, and political principles.

Others, again, among our correspondents are indignant at the question parenthetically raised by the Evangelical Clergyman—"if there be an Evangelical party." Assuredly, there is no Evangelical party in the sense that there is a Ritualising and Romanising party. Or, if there be, it is not worthy to be compared with its antagonist in strategic tact, dogged perseverance, and uncompromising devotion to its cause. But far better, and nobler, and mightier, than any Evangelical party, there is an Evangelical and Evangelistic Power, evangelical in doctrine, and evangelistic in action, within the Church of England, on account of which every member of the Church of Christ must thank God and take courage.

It is this "Godly remnant" of whom it may be truly said, in the words of one of our correspondents, that it has "in our own time enrolled among its members men like Shaftesbury, Cairns, Henry Venn, Henry Wright, Edward Auriol; . . . which has been blessed with such an offspring as the Church Missionary Society, the South American Missionary Society, the Church Pastoral Aid Society; . . . which supplies half the funds of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and to which the London City Mission, and a vast number of other agencies, spiritual, moral, and philanthropic, owe a great part of their vitality."

In the paragraph quoted in our last from The Guardian, that leading representative of Church opinion condenses all that was said by our "Evangelical Clergyman." Those who claim to be more evangelical than The Guardian certainly will not shrink from so evangelical an avowal. It must be noted, however, that The Guardian is not in favour of Disestablishment. The article from which we quoted was very strongly against it.

There is one reason for which we should regret Disestablishment. Portions of the Holy Scripture are read in the National Churches every year, which probably have not been read from any Nonconformist pulpit during the present generation. Our sturdier forefathers "commanded" them to be read; but when the command ceases to have authority, we fear that these words of the Holy Spirit will be dropped out of public use as too unrefined for the polite ears of modern mock modesty.

Whether the Church of England will become more spiritual if it should be disestablished remains to be seen. We express the views of many when we say that some of the saintliest men and women in the land are found within its pale; and that the real Christians who are found in its ranks will well bear comparison for devoted lives with any others in the world. Nevertheless, believing, as we do, that all denominationalism, except the Christian denomination, is contrary to the mind of Christ, we wait hopefully for the time when all sectarian distinctions shall be disestablished, and the disciples be called Christians, as in the early days.

What we desire to see is the disestablishment of Denominationalism, which is but another name for the Dividedness of Christ. Denominationalism was one of the evils in the gifted but carnal Church of Corinth, which most troubled the great and generous heart of Paul, who wrote to them, "Ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal and walk after the manner of men? For when one saith, 'I am of Paul' [or of Calvin], and another, 'I am of Apollos' [or of Wesley], are ye not men?' Now this I mean, that each one of you saith, I am of Paul! And I of Apollos! And I of Cephas! And I of Christ! [The last the most pretentious and sectarian of all.] Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized into the name of Paul?"

Vested interests are the very life of Denominationalism. And, thank God, vested interests are on their trial in every sphere. It was vested interest in individuals that called forth from the Apostle, whose heart was that of a father and a nurse among his children, the scathing rebuke to the Church of God which was at Corinth: "I hear that divisions exist among you. . . . For there must also be heresies [sects, factions] among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." Each party wanted to set up his man, his opinion, his system; therefore there must be divisions. May God disestablish Denominationalism, and re-establish the one primitive Church, whose name of reproach was "Nazarenes," whose royal name was "Christians."

THE NEW POLITICAL ECONOMY.

OUR shrewd American cousins are waking up to see that "Political Economy" has been a very misleading term, covering an immense amount of false philosophy and inhuman practice. Dr. Washington Gladden writes in The New York Independent an article entitled "The New Political Economy," showing that a new school is arising, and an American Economic Association has been formed, whose method is historical rather than deductive, and whose aim it is to include within the scope of the science other motives and forces than those which are purely mercenary. Dr. Gladden says:—

> "Economic research was to men like Ricardo a superfluous work. What use had they for facts? The one central fact of human selfishness was enough; out of that they could deduce all the principles of their science."

This is what we have always insisted upon, and we rejoice that an association has been formed to overturn old fallacies and to declare the truth, and that such able men are engaged in it.

In order to make clear to our readers the difference between the old method and the new, which is indeed the older, we quote from Dr. Gladden's paper:—

> "It is a little strange that this à priori method should have held its own so long, in the midst of an intellectual movement in the opposite direction, which has revolutionised all the sciences, from geology up to theology. Its dominion was not, indeed, unquestioned, even in its palmiest days; for, as Professor Ingram shows in his masterly, historical sketch in the last volume of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' a somewhat obscure professor at Haileybury, named Richard Jones, defended the inductive method fifty years ago. He said:—
>
> "'If we wish to make ourselves acquainted with the economy and arrangements by which the different nations of the world produce and distribute their revenues, I know but of one way to attain our object, and that is to look and see. We must get comprehensive views of facts, that we may arrive at principles that are truly comprehensive. If we take a different method, if we snatch at general principles, and content ourselves with confined observations, two things will happen to us. First, what we call general principles will often be found to have no generality; we shall set out with declaring propositions to be universally true which, at every step of our further progress, we shall be obliged to confess are frequently false; and, secondly, we shall miss a great mass of useful knowledge which those who advance to principles by a comprehensive examination of facts necessarily meet with on their road.'"

Of these truly scientific principles, Dr. Gladden says:—

> "This is a clear voice, assuredly; but fifty years ago it was a voice crying in the wilderness; nobody heeded it; and neither Professor Jones, nor his book, nor his college, appears to be known to the cyclopædias. In later days he has been followed by the historical school led by Roscher in Germany, and the works of Newmarch, Thorold Rogers, Jevons, and Cliff Leslie in England, and Francis A. Walker in America, have abundantly justified the position of Professor Jones, though giving him scanty credit for his discoveries."

We specially ask attention to this, that, while the so-called laws of political economy hitherto current have been arrived at by the unscientific à priori method, it is shown that the principles of the new, that is the really older, and the true political economy, must be derived from the scientific historical à posteriori method—that of getting comprehensive views of facts, that we may arrive at principles which are true and comprehensive.

GARFIELD HOUSE, RYDE.—A sale of work was held lately on behalf of the current expenses of this Institution, which is a seaside Home in connection with the Y.M.C.A. At the opening meeting, addresses setting forth the benefits of the Home and its claims on the Christian public were delivered by Mr. Dashwood, J.P. and Dr. Johnson.

For the Young.

A BALLAD FOR ENGLISH BOYS.

[On January 31 three Christian lads in Uganda. Central Africa, were tortured and put to death. One of the murderers was so impressed with their behaviour that he came later on to the missionaries, and said that he must learn to pray too. Up to May, twenty more converts had been baptized.]—See THE CHRISTIAN for October 1.

It has been written long ago, in characters of gold,
That strange and stirring story of the wondrous times of old,
The story of the faithful three who braved the monarch's ire,
And yielded, for their dear Lord's sake, their bodies to the fire;

That story strange and beautiful, and brimming o'er with love,
Of how the Son of God came down, all glorious, from above,
And how, within the monarch's sight, He with his faithful three Amid the glowing furnace walked, triumphant, calm, and free.

That glorious One is still the same, as tender and as true
As when, to help his needy ones on Dura's plains, He flew;
Nay, nearer, closer to his own, by cross and death allied,
The Conqu'ror now, the Risen One, and still the Crucified.

'Twas but the other day, when we, perchance beside the hearth, Beguiled the hours of twilight with our homely talk and mirth,
Or, haply, on some errand bound, with free, untiring feet,
Sped, in the health and strength of youth, along the wintry street:

It happened that upon the shores of Afric's upland lake, Whence the famed waters of the Nile their journey northward take,
Where Nature spreads her bounteous gifts beneath a tropic sky,
Three bright young lads were seized and bound, and led away to die!

Born where the night of heathendom broods o'er the sighing land,
Brought up where scenes of sin and strife abound on ev'ry hand,
It was not long since they had learned the truth that maketh free,
And out of Satan's bondage passed to glorious liberty;

Not long since they had pledged themselves to serve their heavenly Friend,
And manfully to fight beneath his banner to the end;
That fight how fierce they little knew! nor guessed the rich reward
That waits the faithful soldiers of a world-rejected Lord.

First crippled by the cruel sword, the helpless ones were laid
High on a platform while beneath, the fatal fire was made;
Then rose the adversary's voice, and many a taunt and sneer
Were poured with cruel mockery into the captives' ear.

"Up! call on Jesus Christ your Lord, and see what He can do.
You say that He has power to save; now let Him prove it true!"
Yet from the youthful martyrs' lips there came no pleading cry,
No murmur as the flames leaped up, no moan of agony.

No! 'twas a song of joy and praise that rose amid the fire,
A wondrous and triumphant note from that funereal pyre,
For, though unseen to mortal eye, JESUS, their Lord and King,
Was present with his faithful ones; how could they choose but sing?

That singing sank, like holy dew, into the stubborn heart
Of one among the crowd who helped to do the murd'rous part;
Within his soul the longing stirred to learn the heav'nward way,
Until the meek request came forth: "O teach me how to pray."

And many more are crowding round to hear the Gospel word,
And many more have pledged themselves to follow Christ the Lord.
The path of suff'ring and of scorn those youthful feet have trod
Is turned into a fertile field, and beareth fruit to God!

The faithful three of old came forth out of the fiery glow
To witness for their heav'nly Friend and serve Him here below;
To these upon Nyanza's shore another lot was given—
Christ took them from the burning flame to be with Him in heaven!

O English boys! Will you not learn to sing his praises too?
His agony, his cross, his death, his grave, were all for you!
The Crucified will be your life, the Risen one your might,
And in his name you may go forth victorious to the fight.

Oh! glorious is the lot of those who follow Christ the Lord!
For He Himself will be their shield, and He their rich reward,
Will make their life a noble thing fair, fruitful, grand, and free,
And crown it with triumphant joy for all eternity!

A BURIED TEXT.

One word from each text will give a promise in one of the closing chapters of the Revelation.

I love the Lord, because He hath heard my voice.
Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done.
Be ye followers of God, as dear children.
The Lord knoweth them that are his.
If God be for us, who can be against us?
Trust in the Lord, and do good.
Where is He that is born King of the Jews?
The righteous shall inherit the land.
Be not overcome of evil.
The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want.
I live by the faith of the Son of God.

PATCHWORK.

For the most part, what a despised, superannuated, out-of-date employment, all very well for our grandmothers and charity-school children, but thoroughly old-fashioned now. Who cares to sit down and make patchwork in these enlightened days? And yet I think, perhaps, there is many a hidden lesson to be learned from such homely work as this, if we care to look for it.

There rises before my mind a vision of a patchwork quilt—a real old-fashioned one—with tiny squares of bright colour intermixed with patches of soberer tint, fitting and blending one into the other, and forming a not inharmonious whole.

Yards of sewing, hours of patient planning and contriving, have gone to the making of that quilt; and altogether the result seems satisfactory. It speaks of well-spent time, of steady labour, and fragments of hours that have been gathered up and not lost.

Can we not fancy a patchwork quilt to be a picture of our own lives? We are all working at our own particular quilt, and each fresh day as it comes is another piece added to it. We must go on. Whether we will or no, there is no turning back from putting on our patches as they form beneath our hands. We may be impatient or slothful, and then they will stand imperfect or soiled; but there they will be, and the only power we have over them is to choose their colour.

Looking back over that which we have completed, and which is made up of those spaces we call days, what do we see? Some bright and glowing pieces—just lived in the light of our Father's smile, and reflecting unconsciously the glory of his presence: when we kept close by the Master, and had almost found the secret of turning all we touched to heaven's own gold. Such pieces are bright and pleasant to look back upon, and we wish we had more of them. We know it is our own fault that we have not, but oh! those grey and sombre hues—how they outnumber the glowing, golden ones. Some are so spotted and stained with sin, and so many are dull and uniform, that we feel inclined to give up in despair at the utter confusion and want of harmony which seems to characterise our best efforts.

But we need not do that. It is true we cannot design our own pattern, although we try sometimes, and find complete failure as the result. We want just to yield up ourselves and our work into that Master-hand that is waiting to fashion our lives for us; and then, out of confusion, He will bring beauty and order, and we shall find a grand mosaic growing under his touch—such a blending and harmonising of the colours that we should never have dreamed of ourselves. And by and by He will show us the pattern that He has designed for us. When we stand at last, "Looking o'er life's finished story,' He will unfold, one by one, to our wondering eyes those days that we thought so useless and so dull, glorified into beauty. We shall see the meaning of our toilsome drudgery, then—the why and the wherefore of life will be clearly spread out before us, if—and, ah, that "if" is one which we had better speedily make into a certainty, if we have not yet already done so—if round our quilt runs a border of red, if a scarlet thread binds the bundle of our life together—in plain words, if the blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed us from our sin.

Let us see to it, too, that our quilt has a white lining—that the righteousness of saints is ours, and that our hearts are white and clean. And if we have the white and the red, the gold will surely follow, for "they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy."

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

THESE brethren continue to be busy about the Master's business. A brief visit of three days has been paid to the city of New York, for the purpose of inaugurating Gospel work at a new tabernacle in Broome-street, a low part of the city, just built in connection with the City Mission.

In reporting the opening service on Sunday morning, October 18, The New York Tribune says: "After prayer by William E. Dodge, Mr. Moody said: 'This enterprise has cost 175,000 dollars, and not one cent has been paid by the people of the neighbourhood. The church ought to be made self-supporting. I want a collection taken up right away. If you have not boxes enough here is my hat. I would like to have it filled with money.' While the collection was being taken he said, 'I am glad to see those two little girls in front of me dropping in their pennies.'"

Crowded meetings were also held afternoon and evening, and on all occasions there were a number anxious to be conversed with about their personal salvation. Mr. Sankey sang "The Ninety and Nine," "Oor ain Countree," and other favourites. The dedication service for the tabernacle was held on the previous Saturday evening, and was attended by many of the pastors of the city.

After leaving New York, the evangelists were to go for a couple of days to Bridgeport, Conn., the home of the famous T. P. Barnum. Ten days were afterwards to be devoted to Gospel work on the Hudson; then meetings are to be held in the State of Pennsylvania till December 8, after which a ten days' mission is fixed in connection with the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. in its new and spacious building.

In a private note from Mr. Sankey he informs us that he and his family are now located, for the winter season, in his Brooklyn residence, 297, Cumberland-street.

The Sunday School Times has the following:—A suburban revival-wave has been set to rolling about Boston, beginning with union services at Lynn. Mr. Moody conducted meetings for four days, and, excepting the last day, in the Coliseum, speaking to grand audiences, whose numbers went as high as six thousand, and closing his work in Lynn, September 30. The meetings were continued under Evangelist Needham. At Newton, Mr. Moody conducted services, October 1 and 2, in the Eliot Congregational Church; and its great audience-rooms though jammed at times, refused to hold the crowds that would come. Mr. Moody's blows were direct and telling; and at the above series of meetings he used for hammers such subjects as "The Holy Ghost," "Assurance," "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God," "Be not deceived, God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Mr. Moody had skilled help in song and sermon.

Mr. J. E. K. Studd has been very much pressed by Mr. Moody to spend some of the winter months in the United States, holding mission services in some of the American universities and colleges where his cricketing fame has preceded him, and will secure him good audiences. Mr. Studd, although somewhat unwilling to leave his work at the Polytechnic, has agreed to Mr. Moody's proposal.

UXBRIDGE.—Miss Howard, Bible-woman, 2, Colne Villas, Lawn-road, Uxbridge, writes:—"We are most anxious about our girls here. Within the past few months several girls under fourteen have been ruined—one aged only eleven, and another only six. We have succeeded in getting several into Homes, but we find that the girls of the lower classes generally are quite corrupt in their minds before they reach fourteen, owing to the overcrowding in their homes, and from the general looseness and immodesty in the conduct of their parents. We have formed a Female Branch of the Purity Association especially with the view of forming a Home to take two or four at a time of these unfallen girls who are in the midst of corrupt and dangerous circumstances, and train them for service. The Secretary is Mrs. A. Grimsdale, The Elmes, Montague-road, Uxbridge."

HE TRIUMPH OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

THE heart of the American Church is in the cause of Foreign Missions. The secular pers of Boston testified that never had such ultitudes come together to attend any political nventions as thronged the streets and overowed the largest public halls of Boston, drawn gether to attend the seventy-fifth anniversary the American Board. The annual meetings this Board are always large, but this was eyond all precedent. Tremont Temple and the usic hall were filled to the upper gallery at ery session, and it was necessary to have overow meetings, which more than filled Parkreet and Shawmut-avenue churches at the me time. Not less than twelve thousand eople would be in attendance at once, and it as impossible for one who came late to find an trance.

If the immensity of the audiences and their thusiasm were overwhelming, the occasion as a very simple one. There were no exciting eeches, nothing but reading of reports, the ory of the progress of Christ's cause in the orld, as told by officers or missionaries of the oard. The unmarshalled tens of thousands me together simply because they loved Christ's ngdom; and so the three ample Churches uld not hold those who wished to sit down on hursday afternoon at the Lord's table.

Let the reader whose heart is in that coming ngdom consider the contrast with the beginng of this work of American missions, as ported in the historical papers, and in the ldress of President Hopkins, whose life began ght years before that of the American Board. n the platform, a gift from President Porter d his sisters, stood the little mahogany table out which the five men sat who organised this oard. For half a dozen years their annual eeting was in a minister's parlour, whose ambers were sufficient accommodation for the isitors. It was nearly twenty years before it ecame necessary to open a church. To-day oston can hardly hold the crowds which gather.

And this meeting now represents but one of e bands of Christ's people who are working for e redemption of the world. The Presbyterians, e Baptists, the Methodists, and others, have llowed with their large congregations, and the ithdrawal of two denominations has not weakned the parent society. One of the pleasantest ccurrences was the address of Rev. Phillips rooks, bringing the fraternal recognition of the piscopal Board of Foreign Missions, offered ratefully to the mother society.

One does not need to go back seventy-five ears to see the progress made by Christian issions. During the last twenty-five years the umber of stations, of schools, and of preachers d teachers employed by the American Board s increased about five-fold. In India we see e Christian population doubling in each deade. Christian missions have made a selfoverned Bulgaria possible. The islands of the a are mostly converted. Japan has been ened to Christian civilisation, and is expectg, within a very few years, to accept Christanity as a nation, as did the Roman Empire nder Constantine. Some fifty years ago, Dr. ay Palmer preached and published a missionary rmon, in which he pictured how his soul, rerned five hundred years later to visit the earth, ight see closed Japan opened to the Gospel, nd its people instructed in Christianity. It ill not take seventy-five years to accomplish at for which his faith required five hundred.

Who can tell what great things we may not xpect? The Church has a greater work than e State. It is the Church, not the State, that giving the world all its hope and progress. he men and women who attend these missionary nferences are wiser than those who attend litical conventions or who legislate in Conress. Wisely do they gather to consult and to ank God. Blessed above ordinary men is he whom God gives the opportunity to help this ork. The hundreds of consecrated lives and e twenty millions of dollars expended by this ard have not been wasted. The morning ometh!—New York Independent.

EARLY CLOSING ASSOCIATION.

A LARGE and most enthusiastic meeting of employers and employed has lately been held under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., in Finsbury-park Hall. The principal employers in the neighbourhood were present, and unanimous resolutions were passed to close their places of business in the neighbourhood at eight o'clock all the year round. An hour quite late enough surely, but a decided boon to those assistants who have been kept behind their counters to nine, ten, and eleven o'clock every night. Numbers of young men and women are thus kept from any share of intellectual or spiritual improvement, and who can wonder that many of them take it out in bed the greater part of the Lord's day?

We are happy to learn that over 400 young men have joined the different educational classes now thrown open for them in the Finsbury-park Hall, Y.M.C.A. We are glad to see the notices of the Early Closing Association in most of the business houses of the neighbourhood, and trust that the closing time announced will become general, and that soon the more reasonable hour of 7 o'clock all the year round will be reached. We are not much in love with Boycotting, but we acknowledge to a strong and almost irrepressible feeling that we should like to see every shop effectually boycotted that persisted in keeping open after eight o'clock.

Mr. John Orchard, the energetic secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Finsbury-park, is aiding the movement in favour of the young men all he can, and the principal employers in the neighbourhood are warmly seconding his efforts. A general feeling was expressed in the meeting that if Christian ladies would heartily take up the work, and insist upon all shopping for their families being done before 6, or, at latest, 7 o'clock, the main object would easily be accomplished.

FINSBURY PARK HALL Y.M.C.A.

A MEETING of a remarkable character in connection with the evangelistic services held here, met under the presidency of Mr. R. C. Morgan, on a recent Friday evening. It was a gathering of the workers and converts. About 250 met. A large proportion of these were recent conversions. Numbers of young men from all classes of society have been brought to Christ, not only in the after-meetings held after every Sunday evening service, but during the week-day services, Bible-classes, and prayer meetings; scarcely one seems to pass without decided cases of conversion. To God be all the praise.

The number of young women converted at the Sunday evangelical services were so numerous that it became necessary to draft them off into a Bible-class, which has resulted in the formation of a young women's branch of the work, held in the old premises of the Y.M.C.A., 1, Coleridge-road, now taken entirely for them. Conducted by an earnest Christian lady, Mrs. French, this work amongst the young women progresses marvellously.

Letters were received by the workers from numbers of both sexes who could not attend the meeting, testifying to the glorious blessing of salvation received. Many and touching were the testimonies given in the meeting by young and old. The most striking facts came out again and again, touching personal dealing with anxious souls, the workers often following convicted ones out into the streets, and bringing them back to the hall, or classroom, and being blest in leading them to Christ.

Would to God that every evangelical minister and congregation in the land were alive to the value of after-meetings, and would take the trouble to learn how to draw in the net, which they would often find—much to their astonishment—full of great fishes, immortal souls struggling to be free. Would a fisherman be wise, when he had enclosed a multitude of fishes, to leave them with the net in the sea? Is the fisher of men much wiser, who sees a deep impression produced under the Gospel, and then leaves those convicted souls to struggle alone?

MR. W. FORBES has been conducting missions at Leamington, Kenilworth, Carnarvon, Kirby Stephen, and Workington.

LIMITED ELECTION.

SIR,—With deep awe and self-distrust I would touch this great mystery of God. But I am sure that the only safe mode of dealing with it is, not the assumption that we can decide what was becoming in God to do, but the humble and devout consideration of what He has declared He has done.

May I remind Dr. Pentecost that Rom. ix. and xi. are not the only Scriptures on which the doctrine of Unconditional Election rests? And may I, very respectfully, ask him to expound the following weighty words from our Lord Jesus's own lips.

"All that the Father giveth Me shall come to Me; and him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out: for I came down from heaven not to do my own will, but the will of Him that sent Me. And this is the Father's will, who sent Me, that, of all which He had given Me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. And this is the will of Him that sent Me, that every one who seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

[Do not these last two verses give the Divine and the Human aspects of the Gospel?]

"No one can (is able to, δύναται) come to Me, except the Father, who sent Me, draw him (cf. Acts xiii. 48, τεταγμένοι); and I will raise him up at the last day" (John vi. 37—40, 44).

"Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep: as I said unto you, 'My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow Me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any one pluck them out of my hand. My Father, who gave them to Me, is greater than all; and none is able to pluck out of my Father's hand'" (x. 26—29).

"I know whom I have chosen" (xiii. 18). "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." (xv. 16).

Then, in our Lord's grand anticipation of his heavenly Priesthood:—

"As Thou hast given Him authority (ἐξουσίαν) over all flesh, in order that (ἵνα) He should give eternal life to as many as Thou hast given Him. . . . I have manifested thy name to the men whom Thou gavest Me out of the world. Thine they were, and Thou gavest them to Me. . . . I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them whom Thou hast given Me. Holy Father, keep in thy name those whom Thou hast given to Me. Those that Thou gavest Me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition (that the Scripture might be fulfilled)" —(xvii. 2, 6, 9—12).

". . written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8).

I make no comment on these solemn words. They are the words of the Amen, the Faithful and True Witness. They are the true sayings of God.

Let us beware of the presumption of judging the Word of God by what we think worthy of Him—by what we conclude à priori He ought to say. "No one knoweth the Son but the Father: neither knoweth any one the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal Him."

P. H. Gosse.

Torquay, October 25.

MR. SPURGEON has finally decided not to take his flight this year along with the swallows to a summer clime. Thanks to a vegetarian diet, his health has sufficiently improved to tempt him to brave an English winter, with its fogs, rain, and east wind. Mr. Spurgeon's people will be only too delighted to retain him in their midst. Mr. Spurgeon himself will be very glad to remain, and it is to be hoped that time will prove the wisdom of his resolve. But Mentone will lose the presence of the man who has done so much to familiarise English people with her sunny skies, shady groves, balmy air, and croaking frogs.—Christian Chronicle.

THE BIBLE IN FRANCE.

THROUGH the kindness and liberality of Mrs. Robertson's Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures, we have been able, during the French elections, to give away at Marseilles about five thousand copies of the New Testament to electors. On the first day Mr. Touru, with his colporteur, and some of the Christian young men, went to the different voting offices where the crowds were waiting. At one place the young brother had scarcely begun before there was such a rush for the books that the officials came out, seized all the large parcels out of his arms, and distributed them all themselves.

One night Messrs. Touru and Genre went to a crowded meeting in a large hall, into which they were admitted, books and all. A gentleman, wearing a decoration, took one, and began reading it. As it happened, he fell on Acts xvii., and Paul's address; whereupon he shouted out aloud, "The unknown God!" "Voilà, messieurs, here's what we want—the unknown God!" Immediately there was one rush for the books, and 1000 were swept away in a minute, while Mr. Touru had to drive off with all speed for 500 more copies. The God they do not know is indeed just what these Frenchmen want. May He reveal Himself to them by his Holy Spirit in the reading of his precious Word which we have given them! Five hundred copies were sent to an important meeting. to be distributed by a Roman Catholic lady. Well-bound copies were sent by post to more than twenty deputies, and the rest were given on the 18th at the different offices. We rejoice to think of the large number of young men who received them.

I take this opportunity to express my great indebtedness to this little Association, from which, during five years of constant Bible work, I have received as much as £400, the whole of which has been expended on Scriptures, freely distributed in France, Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Cyprus, and a large portion on board mail steamers, chiefly French, but also of many other nations at Port Saïd and elsewhere. In a recent number you kindly mentioned my want of help for "leaflets." May I explain that what I desire is help to purchase and distribute 18,000 copies of, not leaflets, but the large illustrated paper, the Ouvrier Français, which have been lying in the Depôt here for two years, and are exactly suited for giving away here. The price is £1 per 1000. The "Day of the Dead," when so many mourners visit the cemetery, is on November 1, and we have nothing whatever to give them.

One word about my wish to give to the Jews copies of the "Old" Testament. Is it not a little unreasonable to offer them the "New" before we offer them their own? and would it not be a wiser and more sympathetic way of winning their acceptance of the New, if we were first to make sure that they possess their own? I can never forget how one Jew wept for joy at getting a present of a fine large copy of the Old Testament. He seemed never to have dreamt of having one for himself. Jews not seldom visit Mr. Touru's depôt here, and when they purchase the Old Testament, it is an opportunity for giving the New into the bargain. What multitudes in France "ignorantly worship" an "unknown God." Be it ours with more earnestness to declare to them the God we know.—Yours faithfully in Christ, M. E. Prinsep.

MANSION HOUSE MISSION, CAMBERWELL.—The fifth anniversary of this Mission was celebrated on Sunday, October 25, when the pastor, Mr. G. W. Linnecar, delivered three powerful sermons to large congregations. On Tuesday, after an excellent tea, a public meeting was held in the chapel, under the presidency of Dr. Ray, of Forest-hill, he being most ably supported by Dr. Wickson, Rev. Akehurst (Arthur-street), and Rev. Reed Howitt (Presbyterian). Mr. Linnecar's report was received with much interest.

MR. AITKEN IN AMERICA.

DEAR SIR,—You will be glad to learn of the safe arrival of Rev. William Hay Aitken in this country, where he intends to engage in work similar to what he has carried on so successfully in England. On Sabbath morning, October 11, he preached a mission sermon, to a large congregation at St. George's Church, Stuyvesant-square, from the text, "Is there not a cause?" (1 Sam. xvii. 29). He very clearly showed the great necessity of doing something to stem the torrent of national and social vice and ungodliness, to rouse Christians from the state of indifferentism into which so many had fallen, and also that the work of a mission, in a great measure, through the blessing of God, accomplished this end. In the evening he again preached with great earnestness and power from the text, "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," &c. (Rom. i. 16), proving, from reason and experience, the superiority of the Gospel of Christ over every other scheme or teaching that had been devised for the help and elevation of poor humanity. The service was followed by a short prayer meeting, which was a very solemn and heart-searching time.

Mr. Aitken begins a fourteen days' mission at Newburgh, a town about sixty miles from New York, on Tuesday, October 20. Will your readers remember Mr. Aitken at a throne of grace, while engaged in this work here.

MR. SPURGEON ON CHURCH WORK.

WHAT are the objects for which, as Christian brethren, we are associated together? One special object is the conversion of souls. If we have not souls converted every week, and we do not sigh or sob about it, we do not understand our work. I shall not forget my friend Mr. Higgs meeting me on one occasion when there had been sixteen added to the Church. "I say, guv'ner," said Mr. Higgs (that is the profane name by which they call me), "I say, guv'ner, that won't pay." I began to think it would not pay either. When we had been accustomed to have forty, fifty, or sixty added to the Church in a month, it seemed a wretched business to have only sixteen. We wanted to have many more brought in, and felt that we should, if we tried in the right way. I look for twenty a week, and if I do not see that number added, I feel as if I was not getting on.

We want to see that we are right with God, and then possibly our very plainest, simplest sermon will bring the people in. But when the pastor is cold, the deacons careless, and the members indifferent, you might call down the Apostle Paul, and get him to hold a mission—it would be no good.

A VALEDICTORY.

DEAR SIR,—During my visit to England it was my happy privilege to have had Christian fellowship with many Christians, many of whom are the readers of The Christian. As I am now on my way back to India, to continue, in my feeble measure, in the service of the Lord at Colar, where the work commenced by Miss Anstey is so well known, may I ask the prayers of those friends whom I have had the pleasure of being with in England, Scotland, and Ireland, on behalf of myself and the Lord's work at Colar.

I should like to say that I had the happy privilege of speaking at Mr. McAll's Rivoli Mission-room at Paris, through an interpreter, to a very crowded and attentive audience. Hearing from Mr. McAll of nearly thirty-five mission-rooms under his direction in France, and the successful work carried on therein, made one's heart rejoice, and created a prayerful sympathy for the work.

HOTEL SERVANTS.—Would any of our readers help in supplying monthly Gospel papers to hotel servants, who from the pressure of their duties are in a great measure shut out from Christian teaching? Mrs. Chancellor, 70, Princes-square, London, W., would be glad to give to any Christians who would communicate with her the names of hotels willing to receive good reading.

AUTUMN THOUGHTS.

THE springtide flowers have faded,
  And summer fruits are o'er;
For hoary-headed winter
  Approaches us once more.

The rain is swiftly falling
  O'er meadow, field, and lane,
Bright transient rays of sunshine
  Come forth, but quickly wane.

We love to think of springtide,
  And summer's pleasant hours,
The noonday golden glory,
  The birds, the streams, and flowers;

But autumn brings rich blessings,
  The precious fruits and corn;
Provision for the winter,
  On wings of love are borne.

And, though through lane and meadow,
  We may no longer roam,
We learn the more to value
  The dear delights of home.

And, if we help the needy,
  The careworn, and the sad,
'Twill make our homes yet brighter,
  Our hearts more truly glad;

For, though the glorious sunshine
  Be hidden from our sight,
The smile of our Creator
  Is our Eternal Light.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN THE CITY.

THE City of London Total Abstainers' Union has entered upon its eighth year of work. At the inaugural meeting of the winter's session, held at the Aldersgate Y.M.C.A., on Tuesday, 27th ult., the President, Mr. Samuel Morley, warmly welcomed the members of the Union. They had come together, he said, to pledge each other to do all in their power to stem the flowing torrent of evil represented by drink. He was not satisfied by any means with what had been done; the number of members ought at least to be doubled, forming a constituency of not less than a thousand strong. He never felt more deeply on the subject than now, and he had solemnly vowed never to let an opportunity pass of offering an earnest word against the evil in all its forms. As to the legislative remedy, Mr. Morley suggested Local Option. Already there were in London twice as many drink shops as were needed on any reasonable calculation. He thought there should be fair compensation to those that might be closed, and this should come largely from those that are left open.

Brief addresses followed. Mr. Symington, who spoke "from an agent's point of view," strongly deprecated the practice of giving drink to buyers. Mr. Beddall said that most of the failures he had known were attributable to drink. A gentleman having had an income of £700 a year recently died penniless through drink. The need of personal effort, the desirability of enlisting the sympathies of employers, the sad effects of intemperance, and the necessity for concrete action, were well spoken to by Messrs. Warner, Constable, Martin, and Kirby. Mr. John Taylor, chairman of the National Temperance League, observed that decision and firmness in the matter of total abstinence would be found to be a valuable element in the formation of one's character all through life.

GLASGOW Y.W.C.A. CONFERENCE.—An All-day Convention of Y.W.C.A. workers was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on October 9. Delegates came from thirty different places, several travelling from London and other parts of England. The large hall of the institute was crowded all day. The papers read by the different ladies were clear and practical, and every one felt that the Conference had been helpful. Almost every speaker touched on the great danger young women were exposed to, and urged the ladies present to exercise great vigilance over young girls, and the necessity of warning all, especially those that come up to our cities. The public meeting, presided over by Mr. Campbell White, was large and enthusiastic.—Young Men's Magazine.

REV. J. G. PATON'S FAREWELL.

AT the meeting held at the Conference Hall on Monday evening last, to take farewell of Rev. J. G. Paton, of the New Hebrides, who ailed for his home amidst the islands of the South Sea on the following morning, a most hrilling account was given of missionary work nd sufferings.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson read the sad story of ersecution to which the missionaries have been xposed at Uganda, culminating in the murder f three native youths, as related in our issue f October 1. The hearts of the friends at Mildmay, continued Mr. Mathieson, had been reatly saddened by tidings received that morning concerning Samuel Burr and William Taylor, who a short time since went out to join he East African Mission. During the long march from the coast to Lake Nyanza, both hese lads were seized with fever. The former ied on November 19, and the latter was so hattered in health that now he was on his way ome. How poor and little and mean a thing ur English Christianity seems, as compared with that which their beloved missionaries to the eathen and their converts have to pass through, ven in these days.

Mr. Paton gave a most pathetic account of is work in the New Hebrides, of the way in hich he had been upheld, of consecration and evotion on the part of those amongst whom he ad so long laboured. His faith had been more han rewarded by a prayer-answering God, who as sending him back with more money than he xpected to obtain (nearly £9000), and who had graciously opened doors for him by which he ad been able to make his work known amongst hose who were able to help. Referring to the acts mentioned by Mr. Mathieson, Mr. Paton imself had been grieved by news recently to and of the death of one of his own elders and is son, who some time ago, with two others, heir wives and families, consecrated themselves o missionary work on one of the still heathen lands of the New Hebrides group. Both the ather and son had fallen victims to fever, but thers eager for the work had already occupied heir places.

He hoped what they had heard that evening ould lead many others to volunteer for the ork of preaching the Gospel to the heathen broad. Oh, that young men and others would wake to the folly of spending their time at ncerts and in foolish entertainments, rather han in studying God's Word and preparing for is work. There was no life so blessed, so full happiness, as that spent in his service.

Then the veteran missionary spoke of wonderful work that had been done amongst those lands where a few years ago the name of Christ ad been scarcely heard. He spoke of Williams nd the two Gordons, and the six other European issionaries who had fallen by his side, of what e himself had suffered by persecution and by ever. Now churches have been established on xteen islands, and there are 8000 professed hristians. But there are still 70,000 heathen, ho are waiting for the missionary. He spoke how the Lord had answered the prayers of imself and his people by sending the needed oney, £20 had come from Mr. Studd, away in e centre of China. Two young helpers would llow him in April next, and two others would me as soon as the funds were provided.

Mr. Paton's concluding words were deeply uching, and must have stirred every heart. o go forth and tell of Jesus and his love was the randest work that men could be engaged in. ow that some in high positions in society were oing to labour in the mission field, it looked, deed, as if the clouds had begun to break, and e bright sun of the Gospel would soon shine rth and fill the earth with its glory. Oh! that ore would consecrate themselves and their eans to this glorious work, thus giving evidence of his love and grace in their hearts. He rayed that every blessing might attend the work at Mildmay, and, warmly thanking all for the encouragement he had there received, he took his leave of them, to die, as he had lived, amongst his people in the New Hebrides.

After a few words from Rev. J. Wilkinson and Mr. Robert Paton, this memorable meeting was closed, though a large number remained to join in fervent prayer to God for a blessing on Mr. Paton in his future work.

A MISSION IN ST. GILES'S.

A UNITED Gospel Mission, lasting ten days, has been held in connection with the congregations presided over by Mr. George Hatton and Mr. William Harrison. The public preaching services were held in the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, and the Bloomsbury Mission Hall, Moor-street, Seven Dials. Mr. Richard Weaver conducted services in each alternately. The hearts of the people were ready for the truth, and soon yielded to the earnest power manifest on each occasion. On the first Sunday evening at Wild-street Chapel, many seemed deeply affected. The results were good. At Moor-street Hall, where Mr. Harrison preached, there was also much to encourage.

On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, Mr. Weaver preached to large congregations in Little Wild-street Chapel. In response to his stirring appeals the inquiry-room was soon occupied by as many anxious souls as could be dealt with. On Thursday Mr. Harrison preached at Wild-street, and interesting cases of conversion followed. On Friday more than twenty former converts gave testimony to the power of grace, in Moor-street Hall. Some of their testimonies were most wonderful, and nearly all of those who testified were well known in the district, as much for the evil of the past as for the good of the present.

The work went happily on through Saturday and Sunday, and on Monday evening, the 26th, the mission closed with a communion service in Wild-street Chapel. About three hundred workers and friends assembled. Mr. Harrison and Mr. Hatton gave suitable addresses. It will be a long time before these Christian hearts will forget the ten days' united mission in St. Giles's.

A GOOD WORK AT CHISWICK.

TWO years ago a young man attempted to bring the residents of the lowest street in the locality under the influence of the Gospel, by trying to reach the hearts of the parents through their children. During the first year a room was hired for an hour on Sunday afternoon, then the school became affiliated to the Ragged School Union. Mr. Curtis paid a visit, and it resulted in the committee paying the rent of a cottage for one year.

The work grew, and the loan of a wash-house has been a great boon. Now that is required by the lender, and every effort has been put forth during the present year to raise £200, so as to purchase two cottages and erect a suitable building in their place. Half this amount has been raised, the Ragged School Union having made a special grant of £20. A lawyer is transferring the lease free of cost; an architect is giving his services gratis, and a friend has given sufficient second-hand materials. All that is now required is the money to pay the contractor for putting up the building which will be of the plainest description. For this purpose £100 will be needed. Help will be most thankfully received by the evangelist, Mr. R. T. Smith, 13, Barrowgate-road, Chiswick.

ONE OF THE MOST SIGNIFICANT AND HOPEFUL SIGNS of the present times is the growing desire on the part of Christian men and women to enter the foreign mission work. In England especially there is much inquiry on this subject, and more persons are devoting themselves to this work than ever before. The Church of Christ is evidently awaking to a sense of her duty, and before another generation passes she will have grappled with her gigantic task in all parts of the world. What we see now is but a small token of what we may expect to see a few years hence. Where ten missionaries are going abroad now, a hundred will be going before not many years go by. Money, too, will be given more freely than in former years. In addition to ordinary missionary contributions, we are glad to notice a growing tendency to give large sums to special objects in mission fields. This is hopeful, and may be expected to become still more common as the years go by.—Indian Witness.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

ON the 26th ult., at the quarterly meeting of the Open-air Mission, held in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, Dr. James H. Rigg gave an address on "The Special Difficulties and Advantages of Open-air Preaching at the present time."

The difficulties he enumerated were: (1) the familiarity of the people with religious truth; (2) their pre-occupation with other things; (3) the challenge of the infidel. The best way to meet these difficulties was: (1) by earnestness; (2) there must be style, manner, and tact; (3) the matter must be well lightened up by illustration; (4) there must be dealing with the conscience rather than the embroidery of religion; (5) infidelity must be met, not so much by argument, as by statement, positive evidence, history, and experience; (6) by bringing to the work the best gifts, self-control, self-possession, and ready wit. The advantages pointed out included ready access to the worst places, the willingness of the people to hear, the good impression left on the people by the disinterestedness of the preacher, and the fine school it afforded the workers for self-forgetfulness, and a cure for self-conceit. "I know nothing," said Dr. Rigg, in closing an address full of practical suggestions, "more calculated to do good both to preacher and people than open-air preaching."

The secretary (Mr. Kirkham) having referred to his recent visit to Switzerland, and Mr. Charles Cook to his recent experiences in visiting prisons on the Continent, a vote of condolence with the family of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, who rendered many valuable services to the mission, was unanimously agreed to. Mr. M. H. Hodder presided, and prayer was offered at the opening by Rev. E. G. Parr, and at the close by Mr. John Hayward.

CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSIONS.

A PERUSAL of the Tenth Report of this Society, makes us very thankful for the work that is being done by the children, who are casting rays of light on dark places of the earth, and showing how much may be done even by the little ones. This society, only ten years old, after providing for current expenditure, £209, has had £835 to give away—in London, £146 10s.; Scotland, £108 10s.; France, £60; Italy, £40; America, £5; Egypt, £73; Holy Land, £120; India, £152; China, £120; and New Zealand, £5. Think of this, ye little ones with deft fingers and tender, loving hearts.

Very touching are some of the letters received from these little ones. One says: "I send more than usual this year because you wanted more." In another case a guinea is sent by a class of Sunday-school children. It is most interesting to read of the working parties that periodically assemble, of the various descriptions of work done, as well as the different methods of management. Through the instrumentality of this society, and of the interest excited by its literature, and by the efforts of the members themselves, one missionary is now labouring in Africa, and another on the Congo River. In many other ways has this work of faith and labour of love been blessed. "What the little ones can do" thus shines forth brightly and conspicuously as a lesson to others to press forward in this grand work of making known the Gospel of Christ Jesus far and wide. The leading spirit in this Society is Miss Annie R. Butler, 104, Petherton-road, Highbury, N.

CHARLES INGLIS IN NEWCASTLE.

DURING the past month Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding special meetings, twice every day, in this city. The circus where some of the meetings have been held has been filled. Last Sunday night it was a scene not soon to be forgotten, to see 3500 people crowded into that place. One pleasing feature in the meetings has been, that more than two-thirds of the audience have been men.

The after-meetings have been very largely attended by all classes for personal conversation, and very many have professed conversion. The Bible lectures, given every afternoon by Mr. Inglis, will long be remembered as times of great refreshment and of deep, spiritual instruction, and the many who have attended from all denominations in the city, and have taken notes, show how much appreciated they have been.

Mr. Inglis leaves for Dublin with the earnest prayers and good wishes of all.

MR. HAMMOND AND THE CHILDREN.

INCIDENTS BY A WORKER.

JOHNNIE AND HIS MOTHER.

THE mother and her little boy were standing outside the church. "Come along, Johnnie!" The mother's tone was harsh; but the child lingered, and the sad face turned wistfully towards the door, whence the sweet sounds of holy song were issuing. "Johnnie," I asked, "have you come to the Lord Jesus?" "No," sobbed the boy, "but I want to." "Come back into the church and let us pray about it." "Come along, child," repeated the mother, "it's time you were home. I can't have you staying out like this," and she was drawing the child away. I laid my hand on his shoulder, "Johnnie, the Lord Jesus is here, you can give your heart to Him out here as well as in the church." He fell on his knees on the cold pavement, and cried to the Lord to save him. The mother's heart was melted, "We'll go in, Johnnie. I'll go, too;" and together they sought and found the Lord.

MAKING JESUS CRY.

"So glad to see you at the meeting, dear—what made you come?" "Why, Hetty came and asked me. I laughed and said I didn't want to be good. Then she cried, and said I was making the Lord Jesus cry, because, when He was down here, He always cried over people that wouldn't do what He wanted. I couldn't bear that, so I came, and I am so glad, because I've given my heart to Him, and I never mean to make Him cry any more."

HAPPY, IN SPITE OF THE TOOTHACHE.

"I've given my heart to the Lord Jesus," said a bright girl of thirteen, "and I'm so happy, I must tell someone." So she told her school-fellows, and she looked so bright that some of them thought they would like a little of Nellie's happiness. They came, and found out for themselves the joy of trusting Jesus.

But poor Nellie had the toothache. Her face was burning, and she was starting with pain. "Poor child," I said, "it is bad." "Yes, it is," she replied, "and I do not like it; but," and a smile lit up the flushed face, "but I'm very happy." Nellie had learnt the blessed truth, that bodily pain cannot rob us of our joy in Christ.

THE NOTTING-HILL MEETINGS.

On Wednesday afternoon, last week, Mr. Hammond conducted a meeting in the drawing-room of Col. and Mrs. P. A. Elphinstone, 27, Arundel-gardens, Kensington Park-road. The numbers were so great that a second service, in the dining-room below, was conducted by Mr. Jos. Spiers. Much good work was done in bringing souls to decision for Christ at both meetings.

The work goes on at Dr. Sinclair Paterson's Presbyterian Church. The meetings in the morning, at 11 a.m., are chiefly for prayer. After a short address by Mr. Hammond, a praise meeting takes places, many telling out something for which they have specially to thank the Lord.

Troops of children come to the services every night. One evening a little band of small boys had come all the way from Fulham. Their dirty hands, their smeared faces and unkempt hair, their ragged clothes and hungry looks, bespoke them to be waifs of the street. They seemed greatly in earnest that their names should be written in the "Lamb's Book of Life." How readily they listened to the simple words spoken to them by the lady who made them her special care; how completely they trusted the affection bestowed upon them! how docile was their obedience to do what was told them!

There is an obvious change among the boys who frequent those meetings. One may go to group after group and see their faces gladsome and bright with a freshness of look as if their faces had been newly washed. If you talk to them of God, of the Saviour, and holy living, you find they are all enrolled as young soldiers of the Cross. Two thoughtful-looking young lads stood quietly, as if desiring that some one would speak with them. The elder held a Bible in his hand. Both had given their hearts to God, but they wanted to talk more about Him, "for there must be such a great deal to know about God and Jesus Christ." The lady who spoke with them counselled them to learn Scripture by heart, and then if it happened they were where they could not have a book to read they would have a Bible in their hearts. The younger boy said that when his mother was dying she told him never to return evil for evil, but to overcome evil with good. This saintly mother's heritage to her boy was enshrined in his young heart.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

WORKERS' MEETINGS.

IT was intended to hold the annual meeting of the Evangelistic Mission on Tuesday, Oct. 27, at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., but as it was found necessary to postpone this till early next year, meetings for Christian workers were held instead, which proved most important and interesting gatherings.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. E. H. Glenny gave interesting testimony to the progress of the work of the Lord in Spain, pointing out the great need there was for labourers in that field, in which the doors were wide open.

In opening the evening meeting Mr. Russell Hurditch and others asked prayers on behalf of a large number of special Gospel efforts throughout the country, and for a blessing on the labours of many well-known servants of Christ working among the poor.

Dr. Popham read Psalm xxiii., specially dwelling on the value of God's restoring and separating grace. Mr. E. J. Hawkins founded words of encouragement upon Haggai ii. Our corner of the earth seems very small as we hear of needs abroad, but our hearts are enlarged to pray for others as for ourselves. Mr. Hurditch said the consciousness of the Lord with us gives confidence. If we be doing the Master's work in his way, let us look out for a real blessing this winter; and any who have no definite work themselves should help the man next to them who has such work, taking up the other end of his load. Many requests of a personal nature, for temporal and spiritual blessing, were made in the course of the day; and the spirit of prayer and praise was a very encouraging feature of these profitable meetings.

MR. H. THORNE AT KIDDERMINSTER.

THIS evangelist has closed a successful mission here in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The Town Hall, which accommodates about 1200 people, was full almost every evening from Oct. 17 to 26. The audience was composed chiefly of the working classes. Much blessing has been experienced; over 200, chiefly young persons, gave in their names at the conclusion of the services as having been led to trust in Christ. Mrs. Sterling assisted Mr. Thorne in addressing meetings for women and in the enquiry-room. The benefits of the meetings seem to have been chiefly experienced by the young women employed in the factories of the town. At the concluding meeting it was unanimously resolved to form a Y.W.C.A.; several hundred stood up as desiring to become members.

Mr. Thorne held a Bible-reading each afternoon; these were happy seasons of Christian intercourse.

A series of services has been arranged on Thursday evenings, to be conducted by various ministers and other friends. These, it is hoped, may be the means of confirming and strengthening the young converts.

The mission has been the means of bringing together many Christians of various denominations, and has helped them to show fellowship one with another in working for their common Lord.

CHRISTMAS CARDS.—Mrs. W. H. Wrigley, New Wandsworth, S.W., would be glad to receive Christmas cards, coloured pictures, &c. for screens and scrap books for workhouse infirmary wards. She would be especially grateful for small pattern cases, used by tailors, clothiers, which, when the patterns are removed, and cards pasted in, amuse many a sufferer!

WILLIAM TAYLOR IN AFRICA.

WRITING from Dondo, on July 18, to a friend in America, Bishop Taylor says:—"I wrote from Nhangepepo, June 21, requesting all our people still in Loanda, who were booked for the interior, to come on to Dondo by first steamer. It is now a month, lacking three days. We have not heard a word from them in reply. On our arrival here yesterday, we searched diligently for information in regard to our people, but found none. The Coanzo river is so low, owing to interior drought for two years past, that the steamer can scarcely do anything at all. We are getting used to delays, so common in this country, and don't feel the slightest discouragement, nor serious anxiety about the transit of our people; but we are doing everything in our power to complete it in this deliciously cool weather. We are not here on our own business. We are servants of the King, and wait his orders daily, and run to do his bidding. We have commenced school-work at Nhangepepo, and at Pungo Andongo, thirty-six miles further in.

There is no difficulty at all about the immediate support of those who can render direct service to the people. Such labourers get a direct return for their labours. Men with large families must go in at first under the Pauline pioneer tent-making principle. Look up for us good men and women, in reserve for our call, when we get these settled, for South Central Africa.

Mr. R. Grant writes from New York as follows, on October 2, to The Christian Witness:—To-morrow, Brother Henry E. Benoit, of Canada, will sail on the steamer City of Chicago, Inman Line, to Liverpool, thence on the African line to Mayumba, and from there he will go to Mamby to join Brother Northam. This is a French colony, and he goes to preach and teach in the French language. He will be one more added to the Bishop Taylor band, to give to Africa the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

THESE evangelists have completed a fortnight's mission at Abney Congregational Church, Stoke Newington. Crowded congregations have gathered each evening. On one occasion a great crowd was waiting outside an hour before the hour for commencing.

About two hundred enquirers have been spoken with, among whom are found many intensely interesting cases. Three in one family, and four in another, were among the proofs of the Spirit's working. Singing the Gospel has again been made a blessing. Mr. Smith sang "Almost Persuaded," one evening, and one soul at least was won for Jesus.

The requests for prayer have been unusually numerous. The testimony of our brethren is, God has granted them a very wonderful blessing during the fortnight. Such is evidently the feeling at Devonshire Chapel, about a mile nearer Kingsland, from which congregation a requisition has been forwarded requesting another visit. The evangelists are now conducting a mission at St. John's Wood.

MR. SPENCER-WALTON AT WHITEHAVEN.

THE Spirit of God has been working in our midst in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Walton held a fortnight's mission with blessed results. Besides the large numbers who have come out clearly on the Lord's side, the Christians have received much spiritual stimulus.

In the inquiry-room Christian fathers and mothers saw their one, two, and three children decide for Jesus. Three girls already saved had the joy of seeing their mother and father, and two brothers brought to the Lord; now they are a whole family for God. Husbands have rejoiced over wives, and wives over long prayed-for husbands. In one case husband and wife, both over eighty years of age, found rest and peace in Jesus. Many of the members of a large Girls' Bible-class have professed decision, whilst out of a class of twenty-two young men, eleven last Sunday afternoon owned that the services had been the means of bringing them to the Saviour.

No such time of blessing has been experienc in Whitehaven for many years. G. A.

A CHRISTIAN JOURNAL FOR FINLAND.

DEAR SIR,—I am making preparations for publishing an evangelical fortnightly or monthly periodical, in Swedish, and am anxious to secure a suitable person to act as correspondent for England, with special regard to matters in Palestine and the Jewish question generally. I should like to utilise the paper in awakening Christian sympathy and sentiments for our Jewish brethren. To do this, however, requires an intimate acquaintance with Jewish affairs, both at home and abroad. From the nature of the paper in which these articles would be published, they require a cultured style of writing.

As Jewish matters could not always form the exclusive subject of the papers, I should be thankful for information upon purely English matters, such as the condition, work, and influence of different churches; the moral and religious state of present-day Britain generally, and its bearing and influence upon national affairs; a review of modern art, science, and literature, and their attitude towards revealed religion; comments on the press, &c., &c., that can be of profit and interest to a cultured Christian public.

The aim and object of my paper is to defend revealed religion against the baneful influence of modern attacks, and to show that the excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, and Him crucified, is the only safe remedy for all the ills, mental, spiritual, moral, &c., of diseased mankind. —Yours, in the fellowship of a risen Saviour,

F. WALD LONNBECK.

EVANGELISING IN MEXICO.

IN his last Record, Mr. James Pascoe gives some interesting details of Gospel work:—

"Our brethren in England will rejoice at the great work the Lord has done in the hot country by means of our Heralds. Our two earnest seed sowers started on another journey into those parts. They went heavily laden with Testaments, tracts, Gospels, and other seed: these they carry on their backs. Both are fervent and praying converts: one of them, the Indian, is an excellent preacher; and in addition to this they are lion-hearted men. All they carry will be given away, nothing whatever will be sold. After their last journey I gave one of them, who has a large family, a shilling a day for the time he was away from his home, but the other, who has no children, although married, refused to receive a single penny beyond his food.

"One of them returned in ten days; but the other, accompanied by brethren from Hurtamo, went still further, to a place called Huayameo, on the slopes of the Sierra Madre. He returned here after an absence of twenty-nine days. The tidings this Christ-hearted apostle brought back are glad indeed. He brought me letters from various brethren. One living at Huayameo sends a long list of the converts anxious to form a congregation in that place; they are 74 heads of families, who, with their wives and children, make up a total of 350 souls. In Huetamo the brethren there were added to the list: 25 heads of families, with wives and children, making 56 souls. Thus, in two places alone, in the hot country, the Lord has blessed our freely-given publications, to the conversion of over 40 souls, who now beseech me to send them some one to expound unto them the way of God more perfectly."

We learn from Mr. J. Mercer, 29, Queen's-road, Southport, that Mr. Pascoe needs help to sustain his admirable work, prosecuted under great difficulties.

GERMAN GOVERNESSES.—On Saturday afternoon, Oct. 24, Dr. Ziemann addressed a large number of German governesses at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park. His audience listened with deep attention to his fervent words of counsel and entreaty. The result of this first public attempt to reach our countrywomen has been most encouraging. It is proposed to continue these meetings in different parts of London. There are as yet but very few workers, and those conducting the meetings would be thankful for help with Bible-readings, which it is hoped to organise. Any earnest Christian ladies, with a knowledge of German—though this is not indispensable—are invited to communicate with me by letter.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN DERBY.

THE CONSTITUENCY OF THE LATE HOME SECRETARY ON THE JEFFRIES CASE, AND PERSONAL CHARACTER AS A QUALIFICATION FOR PUBLIC OFFICE.

THOSE who are not altogether at one with Mr. Henry Varley on some points, cannot but admire his absolute fearlessness of character. This has received a striking illustration in his Social Purity lectures at Derby, from the 19th to the 22nd of October.

When Sir W. Harcourt was unseated at Oxford for bribery, his position as a Cabinet Minister secured his election for Derby, the people of that borough knowing very little about him. Mr. Varley has been enlightening them.

Mr. Varley engaged the large Drill Hall for his four lectures, and paid for it, but he was subsequently refused its use. This added to the excitement in the town, which the announcement of his subjects had created.

On Monday evening, October 19, he delivered his inaugural lecture therefore in the Temperance Hall. The hall was packed. A correspondent writes that hundreds were turned away for want of accommodation.

The subject for the evening was, "The notorious Jeffries case stated to the men and women of Derby." Mr. Bellchambers (Mrs. Jeffries' ex-coachman) and Ex-Inspector Minahan accompanied Mr. Varley to the platform. Amid expressions of indignation on the part of the audience, he referred to the threats of the Editor of The Derby Daily Telegraph, if he should dare to attack Sir W. Harcourt. Mr. Varley then gave a history of the prolonged attempt by philanthropists to secure a measure for the better protection of girls, and for stopping the foreign traffic therein, during the term of office of the late Home Secretary. He then stated the Jeffries case, and interrogated Mr. Bellchambers amid the immense sensation of the crowded listeners. Cries of indignation against Sir W. Harcourt arose from different parts of the hall, and a resolution thanking Mr. Varley for his course of action in Derby, and condemning Sir W. Harcourt, was carried amid great enthusiasm with only three dissentients.

On the next evening, Mr. Varley's second lecture was delivered in the Theatre Gospel Hall. Long before the hour announced for the meeting, the hall was packed to its utmost capacity. Hundreds were again turned away. The subject was, "The C. D. Acts, and the connection between political fitness and personal purity." At an interval on this occasion, Ex-Inspector Minahan made a statement of some length, eliciting the hearty sympathy of the audience for him, and their abhorrence of the action of their senior member. Mr. Varley then dealt with Sir W. Harcourt's conduct in regard to the C. D. Acts, mentioning the case of the orphan girl who was hunted into the sea at Dover by the C. D. Acts' spy police because she would not be made into a Government harlot, and Sir W. Harcourt's subsequent cowardly attack upon the moral character of the girl from his privileged place in the House of Commons. A correspondent, in describing the scene at the close of Mr. Varley's powerful address, says, "The meeting was perfectly unanimous in declaring that Sir William Harcourt was not a fit and proper person to represent Derby, or any constituency."

On the two following evenings, Mr. Varley addressed two further great meetings of a similar spirit, the last one being for men only. At the close the men pressed forward to shake hands with a heartiness that showed how warmly they appreciated Mr. Varley's brave championship of purity and righteousness.

During his visit Mr. Varley also addressed two large gatherings of the workmen at the Midland Railway Works. He has also issued an able paper containing information on Sir W. Harcourt's public career.—Sentinel.

In response to a challenge published in The Derby Daily Telegraph, Mr. Varley appeared upon the platform of a meeting subsequently convened for Sir W. Harcourt; but, in order to prevent his asking the grave questions which it was his intention to do, either personally or through an elector of Derby, Mr. Varley was attacked, ill used, and violently put out from the meeting. He has since published a paper showing "Why Henry Varley was violently ejected from the Drill Hall, Derby," the tenour of which may be gathered from its concluding paragraph:—

"In conclusion, I may add that I am prepared to meet Sir W. Harcourt on any platform in Derby in order to discuss these questions. That gentleman accuses me of bearing false witness against my neighbour. I challenge him either to prove it, or to meet me in order to sift these questions before a Derby audience. That you may clearly understand that I have acted in perfect fairness, I send you the enclosed letter and paper of reasons, which has been, and shall be, widely distributed in Derby. What more could I do? Some of your townspeople tell me I have no business to interfere. That is exactly what the burglar said to the policeman. It is what the slave-dealers said to Wilberforce, Mrs. Stowe, and President Lincoln. There is no iniquity under heaven but this statement has been used against the men who exposed it. Do not forget that Sir W. Harcourt was more than M.P. for Derby, he was Home Secretary for the nation. He is, therefore, amenable to the nation. Again, it is said, why attack Sir W. Harcourt now? For this reason, the General Election is the proper and fitting time for Members of Parliament to give account of their stewardship."

The forbearance of the much-suffering British public has lasted long enough; now, "Men of thought and men of action," and, most of all, men of God, are called upon to "clear the way" of the Augean demoralisation under which we have lain too long.

THE RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

ONE of the most pleasing changes we have noted for some time is the transformation of one of the vilest dancing-saloons in Ratcliff Highway into the bright, cheerful mission-hall to which Miss Steer invited her friends last Friday for prayer and for counsel, and to tell them something about the work at the Bridge of Hope during the past year. A goodly number assembled. It was a great delight to go over the Refuge and the little Hospital, both houses redeemed from the service of the devil, and given over to the service of God; and to mark the cheerful aspect, and absolute cleanliness of the rooms, and the happy, contented faces of the inmates.

The proceedings of the afternoon began with a sale of the girls' needlework, the quantity of which proved that idleness was not the order of the house, and that odds and ends of all kinds had been turned to admirable account.

At the meeting, Miss Steer, in giving a short account of the year's work, spoke with much thankfulness of the wonderful impetus which has recently been given to the large and general movement. During the year there had been much spiritual blessing in the Homes, while the influence on the young girls in the neighbourhood had deepened and increased.

Mr. R. C. Morgan spoke strongly on the influence of love, which works greater wonders than any other power. Rev. Edward White, Rev. C. H. Turner, and Dr. Barnardo, each gave addresses expressing sympathy and encouragement. Miss Ellice Hopkins spoke very solemnly and earnestly of the neglect and indifference, on the part of women especially, which had brought upon our beloved country such degradation, and the need of such terrible revelations as had lately convulsed the whole nation. Sir Baldwyn Leighton, M.P., spoke on the paramount importance of personal influence with rough girls, and urged educated women to spare one or two evenings a week to go to the Highway and other places to help gather them in, and come into actual contact with them.

Besides the Preventive Home, we understand a Night Shelter has recently been added to the work at the Bridge of Hope. For a further account we would recommend our readers to write to Miss Steer, Ratcliff Highway Refuge, St. George's, E., for the interesting little report which was given to those who attended the meeting.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait of the late Miss Frances Ridley Havergal, with sketch of her life, and extracts from a new volume of her letters.

In less than a month the entire kingdom will be in the full strain and absorption of a Parliamentary election. Whichever political party has the victory the consequences must be eventful in the future history of the nation. At such a time a great promise may fittingly be quoted, "Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness." Many of our readers realising that their inheritance in England is owing, under God, to the labours of Christian patriots, cannot shirk their duty to their country, or repudiate their calling as citizens. God has given them a responsibility, and they will use their vote wisely as they seek light to do so.

There are, no doubt, many who sympathise with Professor Freeman, the historian, in wishing that the Disestablishment question could be speedily solved, since the controversy is sure to get more bitter as it proceeds. The Spectator, which favours the Establishment, has properly drawn attention to the imputations and violent language of certain bishops on the subject, and urges, on both sides, the Apostolic precept "given under circumstances of greater trial than ours," to let "moderation," or "forbearance," or "gentleness," as the Revised Version re-translates St. Paul's word, be known to all men.

A significant conference of clergymen was held last Friday to originate a movement for Church Reform. The topics of consideration were local self-government for parishes, reform of patronage, more equitable remuneration of the clergy, interchange of pulpit ministrations with Nonconformists, admission of laymen to pulpits, modifying of subscription, reform of Convocation, and adaptation of the Church system to present needs. If present controversy should provoke to such good works, we may, after all, not regret it.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said, in his late charge to the clergy, that every church in England should have an open door all day, and should be made to have the look of a home: on which The Pall Mall Gazette remarks:—

> "It would be an excellent thing if his Grace could procure a return to see what proportion of the parish churches throughout England come up to this ideal. We fear it would be very small. In London, at any rate, there is no more painful contrast than the way in which every temple of temptation and vice has, day and night, an open door, while the temples of God alone are locked and barred."

The Ninety-first Report of the London Missionary Society is a book of great interest, and has this prominent feature—it lets the missionaries tell their own story. It is distressing to learn, however, that the directors, through an adverse balance, are driven upon retrenchment in foreign fields. The Report says, "the kingdoms of the world are in rebellion against their Lord." We would rather say the great kingdom of darkness that rules these nations is in rebellion, and the words of the Report are true in this light—

> "It is but the strain, the cost, the wounds of a campaign which is to result in the triumph of Him who is Lord of all, and whose kingdom is 'righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.'"

The Report speaks of the urgent and repeated requests that come from the East for female missionaries, and how the directors are anxious to give response to the cry: it asks, pleadingly, for consecrated men, and gives the information that at several of the theological colleges students are considering the appeal. We are sorry to find that in China, the work is hindered by the scenes of war, but in Madagascar these have consolidated the kingdom, and have deepened spiritual life among the people. The Report strongly deplores the circulation of infidel literature in India, and the Western influences that are threatening the Polynesian missions; while in Africa and New Guinea it gives proofs of progress in the face of great difficulties.

A medical correspondent (E. F. K.) asks the attention of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children to "Baby Langtry," who sings, at a place of popular amusement in London, two songs twice a day, and dances a sailor's hornpipe. Of the first song, he says it is enough to make one weep to hear that mite of a child sing such words. Can nothing be done to prevent children of such tender age being injured and corrupted for life, in order to give a jaded public the sight of an infant novelty for a few short minutes?

Let woman reverence her womanhood: prize those intrinsic qualities which constitute her chief charm, and which no lesser attractions can ever supersede. Is there not some danger of the essential characteristics of true womanhood being jostled on one side by the intellectual momentum of the day, in other words, the paid savante be exalted above the wise woman, "whose price is far above rubies?" Equally gifted with man, with every right for mental culture, and a wide field for its highest use, yet no amount of abstruse learning or intellectual brilliance can compare with woman's divine endowment of those heavenly graces which constitute her real power and strength for blessing in the world.

Our social life yearns for the cleansing fire of woman's burning purity, the unselfishness of her love, the tenderness of her sympathy, the heroism of her devotion, and the holy faith of her soul. Let woman cherish pre-eminently her blessed prerogative, value superlatively that which approximates her nearest to our Lord, and seek earnestly to fulfil her holy ministry of truth, purity, and love.

"For ever working,
Hour after hour, upon a needy world."

We would call the attention of young preachers to the course of lectures by Rev. Professor D'Orsey on "The Art of Reading and Speaking," arranged for by the Open-Air Mission, to be delivered in Exeter Hall on the Wednesday evenings in November. They comprise "Elocution: Distinct, Intelligent, and Expressive Reading;" "Common Faults in Reading and Speaking;" "Composition and Delivery of Sermons;" and "Common Grammatical Errors in Speech and Writing." All our rising public speakers should avail themselves of these helps to acceptable and useful speaking.

A lady, who takes an active part in rescue work, sends to us an account of a recent experience of her own which is very significant. While distributing invitations to attend a late meeting, the idea seemed to have seized one of the young women to whom she spoke that she was acting as a decoy under the garb of a rescue worker. An angry mob speedily gathered, and it was with the utmost difficulty that the worker escaped to a place of safety. We have lately heard that young women have been decoyed by those wearing the dress of a sister of mercy, and, as this lady had a deaconess' dress, the conclusion was drawn that she too was an impostor.

Our correspondent wishes us to warn any such workers who wear a distinctive dress against going into low neighbourhoods in case they are subjected to similar treatment. We should hope her experience will be a solitary one, but it indicates that those wolves in sheep's clothing, who have been seeking to lead their sisters astray, will find such attempts far more difficult in the future than they appear to have been in the past.

The Baptist Union of Scotland, at its recent annual meeting in Edinburgh, passed a unanimous resolution deeply deploring the widespread immorality and vice which the recent terrible revelations have made known, expressing sympathy with those who seek to aid in suppressing this evil, and recommending the churches in the Union to take a deeper interest in the question, and to encourage a higher and nobler life and character among the young people throughout the country.

In his inaugural address, the President of the Union (Mr. R. Lockhart) alluded, in strong terms, to the prevalence of social vice, as lately revealed. He said:—

> "If Christians of every name will agree to exclude from their houses men, whatever their qualities, who are known to be living in open sin, and will agree also to abolish the vile social code which deals out one standard of morals for a man, and another for a woman, then we may expect our country to prosper. We have not spoken out as we should have done; we have been too often dumb dogs. A delicate question, no doubt, but, while we are afraid to speak out what the Bible commands, the devil and his satellites are busy ensnaring our young men, leading off and alluring to vice our young women, and enslaving and selling into hellish bondage our tender children. It behoves us to cry aloud, and spare not. We want more courage to fight the devil, more devotion to the Master's cause, more wrestling in prayer, and more of Elijah's perfect faith in God's promises."

It is not to be supposed that London is the only place where abominations are committed such as those we have heard so much about. If there were, in other large centres of population on the European Continent and otherwise, men as courageous and as outspoken as Mr. W. T. Stead, the world would be far more horrified even than it has been. We have recently had communications from Naples and Vienna which reveal a condition of moral rottenness that is appalling. A correspondent in Australia states that Melbourne is "reeking with iniquity," and it is high time some trumpet-blast exposed the awful traffic in flesh and blood that goes on. Truly our God is a long-suffering God, and it is of his mercy that the dwellers on this earth are not consumed. All Christian workers in great cities have need of the deepest sympathy and most cordial support.

Various friends have made the excellent suggestion that Thursday next, Nov. 12, when the meetings are to be held in Exeter Hall, should be generally observed throughout the land as a day of earnest prayer to God on behalf of the nation, that

Subscription does not imply approval of all the means adopted by Mr. Stead and his friends, nor any opinion on the merits of the case now before the Court, but only a desire to see fair play, and that those persons who have been instrumental in securing a great reform of the law and of public opinion, and who have been actuated by the most virtuous motives, should not be crushed for want of money. The prosecution is being conducted with all the resources of the Treasury; the necessary expenses of the defence will be very large, and are estimated at over £5000. But even this expenditure cannot be regretted if, as is confidently expected, the trial shall have the effect of giving greater impulse to the present moral movement. Subscriptions may be sent to the Treasurers, care of P. W. BUNTING, Esq, 11, Old-square, Lincoln's-inn, W.C.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, 10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

Mission and other Appeals.

Y.M.C.A., Leyton.—This branch is in need of help to clear off £120 arrears, and to prosecute the winter's work. The treasurer is Mr. Wm. McCall, Woodlands, Walthamstow, E.

Orphans at Walthamstow.—Mrs. Parsons, Cumberland House, Walthamstow. E., says, in a recent note, "Our funds are much below our actual needs, and we are therefore greatly straitened day by day."

The Y.M.C.A., Burnham, Somerset, is endeavouring to collect a library, and as the members are mostly poor, they ask contributions from other friends. Mr. A. C. Trew, 17, Alfred-street, Burnham, Somerset, is hon. secretary.

Convalescent Home, Clevedon.—Rev. Edward Forbes, writing from this Home, earnestly asks for help in freeing it from the burden of a heavy yearly rent which presses heavily on its resources. £800 would secure the purchase of "Belmont," the women's portion of the institution.

Shacklewell Gospel Mission.—Mr. C. Gull, 4, Stafford-place, Grove-road, Stamford-hill, N., hon. superintendent of this Mission, writes that he begins the winter's work with an empty exchequer, and appeals to Christian sympathisers for practical help. The mission-hall needs cleaning and renovating.

Railway Servants.—Miss F. Grove, 22, Stockwell Park-crescent, S.W., who is deeply interested in the welfare of some of the railway-men in her neighbourhood, would be glad if friends would help her by penny subscriptions to place large-print Bibles in the goods guards' rooms at various stations on the South-Western line.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN, a native of Jerusalem, will give two of her illustrated lectures on the Holy Land at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Nov. 10 and 12, at 7.30 p.m.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.—The Echo gives a long and most interesting account of the work of the Invalids and Sick Children's Dinner Table, an excellent effort sustained by Miss Mayo at 47, Earl-street, Lisson-grove, W. Tickets are given to poor invalids and sick children, and they receive a substantial meal. A city missionary attends the dinners, and gives a little Gospel talk to the guests. Some 3000 to 4000 invalid tickets, and 2000 to 3000 sick children tickets are given away annually, besides orders given on tradesmen for meat, milk, &c., Miss Mayo has provided all the machinery of the work, but needs help in providing the meals; she deserves it.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, October 31, 1885.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? And amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.—Mr. R. Cotter, Secretary of the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, writes:—"Would it not be possible to establish a meeting every Monday, with the definite object of prayer for Ireland, in such centres as Belfast, Cork, Limerick, and Waterford? Doubtless many of the smaller towns could arrange for similar gatherings. In fact, wherever there are two or three praying souls, there a meeting could be started."

NELSON-STREET RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, CAMBERWELL.—A meeting of the workers of this old-established mission took place on Oct. 26. Mr. John Kirk, the hon. sec., stated that the building was in a dilapidated condition. Some repairs would be done at once to make it secure for the winter, but the Committee hoped to be able to raise a new building next year. The various departments of efforts were reported to be well sustained, and some of the elder scholars had lately decided for Christ. The Sunday morning breakfasts for destitute adults, and the weekday children's dinners would be resumed shortly.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meeting on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying tothe fisher men the message of Divine mercy and pardonin g love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Edward Birkbeck, Esq., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Society to place a Mission Vessel with every fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Secretary.

Sir,—I shall be obliged to you to draw attention to the advertisement in this issue, with respect to the week arranged for "united prayer for women," in view of the General Election. I am glad to find, from my friend Miss Lloyd, the subjects "awoke a response" at the Christian Women's Conference. The Howard Association have addressed a memorial to the Home Secretary, inviting attention to the need for some amelioration of the treatment of "prisoners undergoing short terms of confinement, whose offences against the law consist rather in the infringement of mere regulations of civic order than in any moral or criminal delinquency, and many of whom are, in fact, more virtuous and respectable than the average mass of the community." Particular allusion is made to members of the Salvation Army, open-air preachers, and others, who, for alleged obstruction of thoroughfares, or for preaching or speaking under circumstances of technically legal impropriety, are from time to time committed to gaol. It is asserted that a number of members of the Salvation Army have had pulmonary and other serious diseases produced by their treatment in gaols, and that in several instances even death has ensued, after liberation, as the result of the prison inflictions.

In a recent letter Mrs. Bayly, of Streatham Common, writes to us: "It is our dreadful Saturday night drinking which, more than any other cause, sends our mothers out to work." A very telling letter on this subject, addressed to the Home Secretary, was written and issued by Mrs. Bayly some time ago, as some of our readers may recollect. Those who have the opportunity of helping to create a strong public opinion on this important phase of the drink evil should write to Mrs. Bayly, 5, Kempshott-road, Streatham Common, for copies of this letter, in order to its wide distribution.

The following, as coming from Truth, is very valuable testimony concerning the demoralisation of the turf:—

> "Let us hear no more cant about 'the noble sport,' for it is evident that the English turf is now a vile welter of knaves and fools, and the Prince of Wales has been very ill-advised in plunging into such a pandemonium. He is pretty sure either to lose money, like the Duke of York, or character, like George IV., and in these times Royal personages cannot afford to place themselves in equivocal positions."

Truth further recommends the Prince of Wales to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest the following passage in a very interesting article on "Horse Racing" in the new number of the Quarterly Review :—

> "If we visit the racecourse and take our place on the stand while the horses are going to the post, what a scene is exhibited below! The roaring mob of ringmen, making the face of the summer day hideous, screaming like vultures flocking to the prey—what a truly noble institution is this! The less custom the bookmaker has, the more francticQally he screams the odds; the respectable men, with whom our magnanimi juvenes gamble away their patrimony, these are comparatively silent; so are vultures when their beaks are in their prey. These are the high-spirited men who cheered the Marquis of Hastings when he had stripped himself of an ancestral estate to pay the hundred thousand pounds which he had lost on Hermit's Derby; the men who hooted the broken-hearted young nobleman into his grave when he could pay no longer. The ring is no doubt an English institution, but we have lost many English institutions of late years, and we could spare the betting-ring better than any of those we have lost. . . . It may be possible to pay too high a price even for perfection in the horse. And if the demoralisation of half the nation; if broken hearts, desolated homes, thefts, embezzlements, and worse crimes, are part of the price, that price is too high; would be too high though its equivalent were the placing on English soil of the fabled breed of Pegasus himself."

Is it too much to hope that the daily press will consider that by the prominence given to gambling, under the name of "Sporting Intelligence," it is seriously helping to demoralise the nation?

Mr. Spurgeon's publishers are about to issue the closing volume of his Commentary on the Psalms, "The Treasury of David." In The Sword and Trowel for November, Mr. Spurgeon says: "It is, indeed, a joy to have completed the happy task."

In our brief notice, last week, of the work of Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, we stated that he had reached the close of his eightieth year. The members of "Bethesda" Church and other friends in Bristol have signalised the event by presenting Mr. Müller with a sum of £400, as a token of affectionate regard and appreciation of his devoted labours in the cause of Christ. A writing-table and chair were also presented each to Mr. and Mrs. Müller.

In the last three issues of The Christian Commonwealth, Canon Wilberforce has attacked three great social evils of the day—impurity, intemperance, and infidelity. His utterances, as may be expected, are very trenchant and outspoken. His treatment of the third topic—infidelity—is, we think, eminently wise. We agree with the Canon that "the method of counteracting unbelief by public debate between selected champions is eminently unsatisfactory." While treatises and speeches on Christian evidences have an important place, it is yet true, as Mr. Spurgeon has well remarked, that "where men resolve to be unbelievers, no reasoning will win them, no evidence convince them." The most powerful and convincing proof of the truth of Christianity is a godly, consistent, and beneficent life.

Few things have of late been more satisfactory than the appearance of Mr. Gladstone's article on the "Dawn of Creation and Worship" in this month's Nineteenth Century. In a reply to Dr. Réville, the Hibbert Lecturer in 1884, the paper exposes the false learning that has been beguiling so many in this age. What is said in it of the Professor of the College of France is true of the whole anti-supernatural school; theories are ruthlessly applied in mockery of reasoning, in stifling facts, and in the teeth of evidence; leading authorities are not confuted, but ignored; a great superstructure is raised on a slight foundation; errors are taught against testimony, and fancies which become impalpable in the clutch of argument.

Mr. Gladstone says of the record of creation in Genesis i., that as history it is vivid, forceful, and effective; or, if viewed as a poem, sublime: that the chapter conveys knowledge to meet everywhere the special need of our race: it is a cosmongony in accordance with the results of modern inquiry: it exhibits stages of a majestic process which is affirmed by present natural science, and which show that the knowledge of the author was Divine: and at the same time the records so closely accord with early Grecian literature as to prove that there was not merely resemblance, but a common origin.

The close of the article refers to the rejection of the conception of a ruling Deity, and in eloquent tones expresses astonishment at the manner in which this is done. Writers go to the gulf of this negation, not with a sense of irreparable loss, but with "a joy and exultation that might almost recall the frantic orgies of the Commune." Even women profess to find in this Atheism a "breezy common," and a fashion of disbelief is among us, under which there must lie some "deep judicial darkness, a darkness that may be felt." Never was an article more timely, and rarely one more valuable.

The papers on Election by Rev. Dr. Pentecost, which have appeared in our recent issues, are the amplification of an address delivered in London, notes of which were given to us by one of the Deaconesses at Mildmay after Dr. Pentecost had left, and were forwarded to him for his revision. His view does not appear to us a satisfactory exposition of the subject, and we propose alluding to it further in our next.

Undue prominence has been given to the bare fact that General Gordon once possessed a copy of Cardinal Newman's "Dream of Gerontius," and that the little volume was underscored when the General gave it to Frank Power, The Times correspondent. In a letter from Cardinal Newman to Miss Power, who upon her brother's death, sent the little volume to its author, the "Dream of Gerontius" is referred to as a "description of a soul preparing for death;" but it is something more than that, for in four-fifths of the book, the after-life of the soul in purgatory is dealt with.

It would, therefore, have been more interesting, and perhaps fairer to Gordon, if it had been stated what lines or portions Gordon had underscored, and it may fairly be assumed that, had the passages which received the General's approval been of a Roman Catholic tendency, the fact would have been proclaimed long before now.

There are in the little volume some noble passages which are dear to Protestant and to Roman Catholic alike; but there are numbers of others which, putting poetry aside, can only be taken as statements of Roman Catholic doctrine put into verse. "Joseph, pray for me. Mary, pray for me," cries the dying soul, and the angel, addressing the soul in purgatory, says:—

"Angels, to whom the willing task is given,
Shall tend, and nurse, and lull thee as thou liest;
And masses on the earth, and prayers in heaven, Shall aid thee at the throne of the Most Highest."

It certainly would be surprising to learn that Gordon sympathised with the sentiment of lines like these.

The close connection between drink and crime has been strikingly illustrated by Lord Napier of Magdala, who has stated that he caused a return to be prepared of the offences of about 18,000 soldiers, the result showing that the total abstainers in the number had no crime, the partial abstainers practically none, the whole body of crime being amongst those who drank freely.

THE WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.

OPENING BY THE PRINCESS OF WALES.

ON Saturday afternoon the Whitechapel-road was gay with flags and banners—as gay as it could be, that is, in a blustering wind and a drizzling rain—and the bells of the parish church rang out merrily to welcome Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, who had kindly undertaken to perform the ceremony of opening the new premises of the Working Lads' Institute, just opposite the London Hospital. The Princess was accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Albert Victor, and the Princess Louise. Many thousands of people were out in the wind and rain to witness the arrival of the illustrious visitors, who were very cordially greeted outside, and were received at the entrance by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, the Sheriffs, by the founder and honorary secretary of the Institute, Mr. Henry Hill, and the treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan.

A very interesting and in many respects a very remarkable place is this Working Lads' Institute, and the opening of it on Saturday marks another stage in a work of the most hopeful and encouraging character now going on in various parts of London. It is, in fact, a new clubhouse for an established club that has outgrown its accommodation. The new building stands adjacent to the Whitechapel Station of the East London line and partly over the railway. Mr. George Baines, M.S.A., is the architect, and he has good reason to be proud of a building as bright, comfortable, and well-arranged within as without; it is handsome and substantial without being unsuitably elaborate and showy. It is built of red brick, with stone dressings, and the front consists of a ground floor and four stories above. Without going minutely into particulars, we may say that the interior comprises an admirable reading-room and library, designed to accommodate 150 members; five class-rooms, with accommodation for 150 students; two mechanical work-rooms, to be used also for lectures and entertainments; a refreshment room in which 100 members may be accommodated together; and a gymnasium, in which 60 lads can exercise at a time. There are other minor features, such as a committee-room, lavatories, and so forth; and there are two large dormitories, well lighted and ventilated, and comfortably furnished for sixty inmates. It is intended to take in here working lads who from various causes are in need of such accommodation. For the privileges of the institution generally they will, like all other members, pay an entrance fee of sixpence, and a subscription of sixpence a month, and they will pay two shillings a week for their beds. Their meals they may get in the refreshment-room at a cheap rate; so that for lads who find themselves in this part of London without friends, whose parents have died, or whose homes are not what they should be, this institute will be a home. There will of course be a manager resident on the premises, and the institution is under the direction of a committee; while it has also the benefit of the supervision of Mr. Hill, honorary secretary, to whose large-hearted philanthropy and indefatigable exertions the existence of the place is due. The place altogether is to cost £12,000, of which £6000 has been raised, and another £6000 will be required to complete the scheme of the institution, which comprises the building of a large swimming-bath in the rear of the existing structure. The Working Lads' Institute will accommodate in one way and another about one thousand boys.
